BIG ZEPPELIN COMES TO GRIEF WHILE RAIDING ENGLAND

ZEPPELIN CAPTURED BY PATROL

When Approached by British Boat Damaged Airship Surrendered and Taken in Tow

Canadian Press Special.

LONDON, April 1.—One of the Zeppelins that raided the eastern counties last night came down off the mouth of the Thames and was captured by a British patrol boat. An official statement says: "During the night the damaged Zeppelin was observed to come down off the Thames estuary. On being approached by one of our patrol vessels she surrendered. The crew was taken from her and she was taken in tow, but subsequently broke up and sank.

Calls Prussianism Filthy Disease

General Hughes Thinks the Germans Are Likely to Outgrow It—Starts Home Shortly

LONDON, March 31. — General Hughes, who is busy making inspections of equipment, probably will return to Canada much earlier than he originally intended.

The Daily Chronicle to-day features an interview of Harold Begbie with General Sir Sam Hughes, who, the interviewer says, was looking one moment like a Roman Emperor, the next moment like a Shakespearian actor.

The conversation opened with a reference to Sir William Van Horne, whom, the Minister declared, was the biggest man Canada had ever produced.

Mr. Begbie extracted the following sentiments from Sir Sam concerning the war:

"I would not give a continental for a war the object of which was territory. The Teutonic people are a great people. It is only in the last fifty years that Prussianism, which is a filthy disease, has got hold of them. They will throw it off but, my stars, we've got to bag that German navy first; we've got to blow the bugle of human liberty."

Asked if the withdrawal from civil life of so many men meant a serious loss to Canadian trade the Minister said emphatically: "Not a bit. There are enough men loafing around just as in London to do all the work of those who have gone fighting."

Asked what he thought of the spirit of Great Britain the Minister replied that he was glad to see reasonable trade union officials take the right line "To let labor union or capitalist get hold of a great country is pretty near the end of that country," he declared.

WARNING TO HUSBANDS

Don't Swear When You Lose Your Collar Button

NEW YORK, March 31.—Mrs. Minnie Truesdale Fish has filed an affidavit with the Supreme Court, charging her husband, Howard, with using dreadful language whenever he dropped his collar button and it rolled under the chiffonier. He wouldn't let her help him find it or say a thing to soothe his injured feelings, but would stamp and shake his fist and swear. This conduct, coupled with other frailties, induced Mrs. Fish to sue him for a separation and Justice Finch awarded her $100 a month pending trial and $200 counsel fees.

BRITAIN REQUISITIONS ALL FODDER FOR HORSES

LONDON, April 1.—Special—An Army Council notice issued to-night says that "all hay or oats or wheat straw, thrashed or unthrashed, now standing on farm or other premises in bulk in Great Britain" is requisitioned by the War Department Farmers and stock dealers are authorized to use a normal quantity of straw for their live stock. The amount allotted for private consumption is to be restricted to the monthly average of the preceding three months.

SIGNAL VICTORY WON BY DELIRIOUS FRENCH

Crazed by Long Endurance of German Cannonades, Their Officers Cannot Hold Them, and They Take Almost Impossible Positions, Wiping Out the Foe

PARIS, April 1.—Special—A gruesome spectacle which may be seen night or day at Talou or on Pepper Height in the Meuse loop west of Douaumont, is described by an officer who is posted at an advance blockhouse beyond the Douaumont-Vaux defence line.

Both hills remain forbidden ground, on which a hurricane of French and German shells of all calibre descend without cessation, literally smashing to fragments the bodies of the soldiers who fell there at the beginning of the battle of Verdun. The officer writes:

"Through a loophole of the blockhouse I see clearly with the aid of field glasses what is happening on the two knolls known as Pepper and Talou Hills.

"The soil seems to swell and then sink under the terrific concussion of numberless shells. Now and then the projectiles gash huge furrows out of the ground, throwing up clouds of dirt.

"There is no living soul on these hills. Neither the Germans nor the French can retain a foothold on the slopes. The patrols which have tried to search the hills, sleep their last sleep there. And what a frightful sleep! Shells bursting near the bodies throw them high in the air. As seen through field glasses they seem to be perpetually suspended in the air owing to the indescribable palpitation of the hillside. Now and then limbs which have been torn off leap higher than before. Never was there such a dance of death as this.

"At the foot of the hills the French and the Germans have dug themselves in, waiting till it is possible to storm the summits.

"The Germans several times have tried to turn the positions, but always have been thrown back with hand bombs.

"The men occupying these dug-outs appear to be in a perpetual trance, due to the explosion of the never-ending cascade of shells. They are really crazed, and the officers have the greatest difficulty in preventing them from delivering an assault on the German lines on the other side of the hills, which would be bound to fail."

PROF. LAVELL FOUND AT COLORADO SPRINGS

TORONTO, April 1.—Special—A despatch from Colorado Springs late last night, and a message received by Mrs. Lavell herself, indicate that the three-year mystery of the disappearance of Prof. Cecil F. Lavell, Ph.D., formerly of Queen's University, Kingston, has been solved by his being found in that town. The message said that "he was picked up here today after wandering nearly three years. He is a victim of amnesia (lost memory) and admits his identity."

FATHERLAND NOW FACED BY FAMINE

Adequate Food Impossible to Get—People Walk Slow to Save Strength

LONDON, April 1.—(Special.)—The Chronicle has the following from Copenhagen.

It appears that the Germans are at last facing the facts of a threatening famine. Now examples are daily told by travellers, especially by women. Up to the close of February it seems that a greater part of the population had not really suffered; although the rations had long been greatly diminished, but in March a great change came, and a catastrophe is apprehended. A man who has lived in Berlin several years and just now is visiting Copenhagen tells us that the situation throughout the country for the last three or four weeks must be considered very grave. It is impossible for poor persons to get adequate food, as a healthy diet would cost 10 or 12 marks daily. There is meat enough, but as it is roasted in sugar and water it does not strengthen the constitution.

In a Danish journal, Gads Danske Magasen, March number, Doctor Edward Lehman, lately returned from Berlin, says everybody stays at home. It saves money and it saves strength. It is curious to see how slowly they move their feet. At first I thought it was depression, but I soon learned to walk slowly myself on account of the small rations of bread, and especially of butter.

HOLDING THE GERMANS AT BAY

Terrific Charges by Enemy Checked by Allied Curtain Fire—Secure Slight Footing

Canadian Press Special.

PARIS, April 1.—Afternoon statement: North of the River Aisne there has been considerable activity by artillery in the vicinity of Boulin-Sous-Touvent and Fontenoy. In the Argone district we have directed the destruction of fire on highways and railroad lines of the enemy to the north of Haute Chevauchee.

To the west of the Meuse there has been intermittent bombardment in the region of Malancourt, but without infantry engagement.

To the east of the Meuse the bombardment became exceedingly violent Friday evening and night along the sector between the wood to the south of Haudremont and the region of Vaux. Against this latter point the Germans delivered two sudden attacks in which a large number of men took part. The first, which was made from both north and south at the same time, was checked by our curtain of fire and the fire of our infantry before it could get as far as our lines.

During the course of the second attack the enemy, after a very spirited fight, was able to secure footing in the western part of the village of Vaux, occupied by our forces.

In the Woevre district there has been some active artillery fire against the village at the base of the heights of Meuse. From the rest of the front there is nothing to report.

Gallipoli Hero Back in Toronto

TORONTO, March 31.—There was a very fitting and very pleasant little ceremony at the Union Station early this morning in honor to Lieut. Frederick Watts, late Royal Warwickshire Regiment, and a son of Col. G. W. Watts, of Toronto.

Major Watts, 198th Canadian Buffs, a brother, marched his command "D" company, to the station, accompanied by the 198th Bugle Band, to welcome him home. Mr. Watts is a survivor of the Gallipoli affair, where he was very badly wounded. He carries over 540 bullet wounds; his fighting days are over.

The Buffs gave him a hearty cheer and though the proceedings were informal as could be, Mr. Watts was made certain that he was back among friends and that his services on behalf of King and country were known and appreciated. The band marched off at the head of the car containing the returned officer.

Lieut-Col. John A. Cooper, officer commanding the Buffs was present, as were many of the officers of that battalion.

A coincidence was that to-day the promotion of Major E. M. Watts from the rank of captain, was announced at headquarters.

PAY $50 EACH FOR DANCE

Mrs. Vernon Castle's Unique Method of Swelling Recruiting Fund

TORONTO, March 31.—Fifty dollars each was paid by Mr. Frederick Nicholls and Mr. G. Beardmore for the privilege of dancing with Mrs. Vernon Castle, the actress and exponent of modern dancing, at the Arena last night. The occasion was a dance held in aid of the recruiting fund of the 170th Battalion. About four thousand persons were present, and about 800 dancers, including the members of the "Watch Your Step" company, were on the large floor.

REALISTIC ACCOUNT OF CAPTURE OF MALANCOURT

Germans Repeatedly Repulsed Uuntil French Were Many Times Outnumbered by Reinforcements—Village Now a Mass Of Smoking Ruins

Canadian Press Special.

PARIS, April 1.—One French infantry battalion held the village of Malancourt against forces twenty times their number Thursday night, until surrounded on three sides they were compelled to choose between retirement and capture. Three German bridgades attacked just after dark. The column attacking in front met with such a sustained fire that it was thrown back before reaching the first house of the village. Assaults were repeated frequently, the German ranks growing thinner with each rush. About eleven o'clock the Germans brought up a fresh brigade and attacked furiously on all sides, but were again thrown back. At one o'clock another charge was made, directed principally against the flanks, and columns attacking on the left and after several repulses succeeded in breaching the French lines. Being reinforced the Germans were able to hold the ground gained. The French fought from house-to-house until dawn, when the ever increasing German reinforcements overwhelmed what remained of the defenders. By that time nothing was left of the village but piles of smoking ruins.

SIGNS IN HOLLAND AKIN TO ENERGETIC ACTION

Both Houses of the Dutch Parliament Called For Special Session—Action on Sinking of Steamer Tubantia Looked For At Once—Militia and Navy Preparing

Canadian Press Special.

LONDON, April 1—A Central News despatch from Copenhagen says both Houses of the Dutch Parliament have been summoned by telegraph to meet in special session on Sunday to consider the sinking of the steamer Tubantia. The Government has commandeered all railway material, and the Queen has cancelled all military furloughs. The situation is said to have grown more critical following a meeting of higher military and naval officials who were in session all day yesterday.

AMAZING ACT OF COURAGE

Incredible Exploit of Kent Man Wins a V. C.

LONDON, March 31.—Six new awards of the Victoria Cross have been announced. The most amazing act of courage was that of Corporal Cotter, of the Sixth East Kent Regiment. When his right leg had been blown off at the knee, and he was also wounded in both arms, he made his way unaided for fifty yards to a mine-crater and steadied the men who were holding it, controlled the fire, issued orders and altered the dispositions of his men to meet a fresh counter-attack by the enemy.

For two hours he held the position, and only allowed his wounds to be roughly dressed when the attack quieted down.

MEXICAN BANDIT IS WOUNDED

Five Hundred Troops Surprised and Scattered—Villa Rushed to Shelter

EL PASO, April 1.—Four hundred American cavalrymen under the command of Col. George A. Dodd, galloping down from the granite slopes of the great continental divide, have fallen on the main body of Francisco Villa's [illegible] the San Geronimo ranch, scattering them in many directions and driving the bandit chief, wounded and crippled, to seek refuge in the [illegible]. Villa was hurried from danger in a carriage. The fight opened [illegible] evening of March 29, [illegible] hours.

Col Dodd with picked troopers of [illegible] and Tenth Cavalry, fell upon [illegible] Villa camp, where 500 bandits were celebrating the massacre of 172 Carranza soldiers two days previously at Guerrero.

The American soldiers drove the enemy before them into the wilderness of mountain peak, desert and canyon. They halted only after the chase had led them ten miles and the fugitives were scattered into little bands of half a dozen or so.

Among the known wounded is Pablo Lopez, Villa's lieutenant in the Columbus raid. The American casualties were four privates wounded.

INSURANCE COMPANIES REGULATED

OTTAWA, April 1.—(Special.)—The House of Commons yesterday discussed and put through the committee stage the bill of Sir Thomas White respecting life insurance companies. It requires all Canadian companies for the next two years to invest one-half of their net ledger profits for the preceding year in securities issued by the Dominion Government. It also requires foreign life insurance companies doing business in Canada to make their deposits required by law to be made with the receiver-general or with trustees in Canada in such government securities.

REFUSED APPOINTMENT JOINED AS A GUNNER

KINGSTON, April 1.—(Special.)—Lieut. Frederick Moxley, a Kingston commercial traveller, has joined Queen's Battery here as a gunner. He is a qualified infantry officer of experience, and has been attached to the 146th Battalion here, but was rejected when he sought a permanent appointment. However, he showed he meant business by joining the battery with the rank and file.

RAID BY ZEPPELINS DID LITTLE DAMAGE

Canadian Press Special

LONDON, April 1.—The Zeppelin raid last night was the twenty-second of the war, and the Zeppelin which came down in the Thames was the first to come to grief in these raids. Details of the raid have not been published, but from unofficial sources it is learned many of the bombs were dropped into the sea or in places where no damage was done. In one town eleven bombs were dropped without causing loss to life or property. The atmosphere and wind made last night ideal for the purpose of the Zeppelins, which were said to be larger than those employed on previous visits, and kept very high.

Drills Tiny Holes.

Making an adding machine required the drilling of ten holes in a steel plate a thirty-second of an inch thick, each hole to be accurate to a thousandth of an inch, yet no bigger than a pin in diameter. Such a problem stopped the manufacture of the machine on a commercial basis until the inventor of the calculator could invent a means of solving it.

The machine devised stands but twelve inches high. The drill which was built carries ten spindles, each holding a drill of No. 6 Morse gauge, which is about the size of a pin of ordinary use. Each little sliver of steel that does the work is driven by a belt operating through a cam head and therefore works at the same speed as that of its neighbors.

Two Coyotes.

"We watched two coyotes in captivity the other day," said a man interested in humane work. "They were of the same age, of the same parentage on both sides. They have been nearly a year confined in the cage. One of them, the male, is as restless a creature as one might ever see, almost never quiet, hurrying back and forth with rapid steps from one end of the cage to the other, apparently never free from fear, the eye restless and wild. The other, the female, is as gentle as a dog, likes to lean against the bars and be petted, is without fear, a restful, and one might imagine, a contented animal. Here is the old question of heredity. Families of humans present the same problem."—Detroit Free Press.

SCIENCE OF NOSES.

Nasography reveals the character, habits and inclinations of people by a simple inspection of noses. According to the system, the nose should be as long as possible, and this is a sign of merit, power and genius. Examples—Napoleon and Caesar, both of whom had large noses. A straight nose denotes a just, serious and energetic mind, the Roman nose a propensity for adventure and a wide nose with open nostrils is a mark of great sensuality. A cleft nose shows benevolence. It was the nose of St. Vincent de Paul.

The curved fleshy nose is a mark of domination and cruelty. Catherine de Medici and Elizabeth of England had noses of this kind. The curved, thin nose, on the contrary, is a mark of a brilliant mind, but vain and disposed to be ironical. It is the nose of a dreamer, a poet or a critic. If the line of the nose is re-entrante—that is, if the nose is turned up—it denotes that its owner has a weak mind, sometimes coarse, and generally playful, pleasant and frolicsome. A pale nose denotes egotism, envy, heartlessness. The quick, passionate, sanguine man has a strongly colored nose of uniform shade.—London Tit-Bits.

A Great Military Feat.

Nonza, in Corsica, is very proud of the story of a great military feat performed there long ago. It is told in "Romantic Corsica," by George Renwick.

The French in 1768 had subjugated all the northern cape with the exception of the tower of Nonza, which for a considerable time sustained a close siege. Attacking parties were driven back by a fierce fire, but at last the garrison agreed to surrender if allowed to march out with all the honors of war. This was conceded, and old Captain Cascella appeared, staggering under a load of muskets and pistols.

"Why is the garrison so long in coming out?" asked the French commander.

"It is here, sir," replied Cascella. "I am the garrison."

A Querulous Question.

"The sameness of these meals is getting on my nerves."

"You're strong for new styles in shoes, hats and ways of fixing the hair. Ain't there never any new styles in eatables?"

A WELL DESERVED PROMOTION

Mr. R. E. Orr, who has been connected with the Grand Trunk for a number of years at this point, has been appointed to the position of train master for the Lindsay division. The appointment takes effect at once.

ALLOWED TO GO.

Ernest Route was this morning before Police Magistrate Masson charged with intoxication. The accused was convicted and while allowed his liberty was given a suspended sentence of one month in jail.

WELCOMED HOME BY COMRADES

Corporal C. C. Bongard a member of the 39th Battalion, which left Belleville last fall, arrived here today, having been invalided home. Corp. Bongard was wounded in France, and after remaining some time in a hospital in the mother land, was sent home, arriving at St. Johns, N.B., on the steamer Corinthian. The returned hero was met at the station by members of the 80th and 155th battalions and escorted through the city. At one time the wounded soldier was connected with the Belleville Hardware Company's establishment here.

THE FIFTEENTH.

There was a fair turn-out last night. The instruction given showed splendid progress being made by those enthusiastically following the work. There is no reason now why every man physically fit between the ages of 18 and 45 not going overseas residing in Belleville should not be in the reserve. Many have promised and signed-up. Now drill is the only thing that counts. Munitions are what we want, not contracts. Men are what we want, not promises and excuses. Protection is what your wife and children and mother want. And why should you not be the one ready to protect them capably and intelligently? Do you think it is the duty of some other fellow to do this? Of course you don't! Then get busy. Cut out the amusement game one night a week at least and get down to drill at the Armouries, 8 o'clock Tuesday and Friday evenings.

REAL EVERYDAY LIFE.

As Seen on the Stage and Appreciated by Two Spectators.

Two women stood in a queue waiting to get in to see a melodrama.

"This'll be a good show," said the first woman. "Life,' you know—real life—nothin' overdone."

"Yes, I like life, too," said the other. "I don't want to be put to sleep, though. Still, I can't stand nothin' farfetched."

"Same here," said the first woman.

And then they went in and sat through five acts, wherein the hero killed thirty Kaffirs with his naked hand, found a diamond as big as a duck's egg, smashed with his revolver from a mile away the bottle of poison that the beautiful heroine was about to swallow rather than yield to the blandishments of the villain and finally killed the latter in an aeroplane duel, slightly off the stage, inheriting later an unexpected dukedom, and so forth, and so on.

When the curtain fell to the sound of wedding bells the two women looked at each other with glistening eyes.

"Grand, wasn't it?" said the first. "Life, real life, eh?"

"You bet," said the second. "That's life, that is—nothin' farfetched or overdone."

TOWER OF SKULLS.

There have been many tragic episodes in the history of Nish, in Servia. In the fifteenth century the Turks captured the city, and for 300 years it remained in their possession, although there were brief periods when the Austrians held it. Then, in 1809, the Servians, who had recovered most of their country from the Turks, besieged Nish, but were defeated with great loss. The Turks to celebrate their victory erected a rough tower composed alternately of lumps of rock and skulls of Servians cemented together.

It is related that there were originally 1,200 skulls in the tower of Nish.

For a long period it was the habit of travelers to Nish to carry off a skull as a souvenir, and this reduced their numbers. But in the Russo-Turkish war the Servian army, under the command of King Milan, besieged Nish, and the fortress fell on Jan. 10, 1878.

The remaining skulls were then reverently buried by the Servian troops except one, which was too deeply imbedded in the plaster to be extracted. The so called "tower of skulls" is now only about four feet in height, and only one skull can be seen to remind the traveler of its gloomy history.—London Answers.

NEDRA TOOK WELL AT GRIFFIN'S LAST NIGHT

After being cast upon a desert island with another girl's fiance, the plucky little Lady Tenney had a right to claim Hugh Ridgeway as her own, was the universal decision of a large audience at Griffin's Opera House last evening upon witnessing the four reel photoplay "Nedra." In the beginning, Hugh and his best girl, for whom the young lady's mother intended making an elaborate event of their coming nuptials, objected to society regulations, and eloped. As is usually the case, trouble was ahead of them, and to hide from irate pursuers they found refuge in a ship lying at a dock, which put out to sea, heading for Manila, and the young couple were in for it. But even here their troubles were numberless, for an old acquaintance monopolized the girl, the ship went to pieces, and Ridgeway, snatching a lady wearing his fiance's coat, jumped overboard and swam for it, finally floating to the shores of the island of Nedra, where a returned band of cannibalistic natives took them for gods and put the pair at the head of the tribe.

The story is a pretty one, and while the feeling between Ridgeway and his white companion was strained—the love being totally on her side—things went at the even tenor of their way until a ship, signalled from the island put out a skiff manned with sailors and the couple were rescued. Upon return to civilization, it being found that Ridgeway's fiance and her "second love" had been saved, and were about to wed—the reader knows the rest. It is well worth seeing at Griffin's tonight. Other pleasing photoplays, including a section of the Red Circle, will also be thrown on the screen.

Tall English Authors.

Inches would seem not to lack significance in literature. Of the great English writers of the Victorian era almost all were tall. Tennyson, Carlyle, Edward Fitzgerald and Matthew Arnold all reached six feet, Ruskin touched five feet ten, Froude five feet eleven, Dickens and Browning fell short of the six foot level by only a narrow space, and Thackeray turned six feet three.—London Chronicle.

Recommendations Made by Police Commissioners

At a meeting of the Belleville Police Commissioners held yesterday, all members were present, namely, Judge Deroche, Police Magistrate Masson and Mayor Ketcheson.

A number of matters were considered and adjudicated upon.

Mr. R. Arnott was appointed truancy officer in place of Mr. W. H. Wrightmeyer, who has enlisted.

The following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Numerous complaints having been made to the Board of Police Commissioners regarding the service rendered by the city cabmen, this board would recommend that the Chief of Police notify all licensed cabmen that if a better service is not given to the night trains, the commissioners will consider some action in the matter of compelling all license holders to attend all trains.

Numerous complaints having been received by this Board of Commissioners regarding the use of obscene and profane language on the street and other public places, and the spitting on footwalks, this Board desires that the Chief of Police be asked to notify the men under him that the city by-laws relating to the above should be properly enforced.

Within the Military Circle

BELLEVILLE

Twenty men of the 224th Forestry Battalion left this afternoon via C. P. R. for Ottawa. The men were escorted to the station by Piper Galloway, and made a fine appearance as they marched along the street, all them being big husky lumbermen, in the best of health, and finely developed by their outdoor life.

Seven men were examined yesterday by Dr. Harper, of Madoc, M.O. of the 155th Battalion.

Four recruits signed up with the 155th Battalion yesterday.

KINGSTON

Maj. Wilson, D.A.A. and Q.M.G., has returned to the city after inspecting the interior economy of the 59th Battalion previous to leaving for overseas. The major reports that he found the books and accounts and everything pertaining to the battalion in the best of condition, and a credit to the officers and corps.

The new military hospital on King street west will preserve its original name, and will be known as "Ongwanada Military Hospital." The work of preparing the new hospital is progressing rapidly, and it is expected that it will be occupied for hospital purposes about the middle of April.

LOCAL MARKET LARGELY ATTENDED

As was anticipated, there was a large attendance upon the market this morning. Whilst much produce was offered for sale the prices realized were good, and there was but slight depreciation in prices

Dairy butter was quite plentiful and sold at 31c. and 32c. per pound. In some cases basket lots were offered for sale in abundance and in consequence the price was lower. Basket lots were procured at 19c. per dozen, whilst 20c. and 21c. for dozen lots were the prevailing prices. Dressed chickens commanded a good price, selling at from $1.25 to $1.75 per pair, according to size and quality. Dressed ducks sold at $1.50 to $2 per pair and a few geese realized $2 each.

Market gardeners had for sale: lettuce, radishes, rhubarb and greens, which were readily disposed of.

Potatoes still command a big price, selling at $2 a bag. Hay sold at from $10 to $18 per ton, according to quality. The price paid today for live hogs was $10.50 to $10.60 per hundred, and small pigs sold at from $10 to $11 per pair.

FINDS NEW WAYS FOR HEAVY TAXES

LONDON, March 31.—It is understood that several new sources of revenue will be tapped by Reginald McKenna, the Chancellor of the Exchequer in the budget to be introduced in the House of Comomns on Tuesday next.

The Chancellor has made a thorough study of a method for reaching incomes which are below the present minimum limit. On the other hand, it is believed that the super-tax on big incomes may be increased.

Theatre receipts and advertisements of all kinds also may be subjected to taxation, but definite information as to just what steps will be taken will not be available until the Chancellor addresses the House.

Chocolate For The Soldiers

Delightful Eentertainment at High School by Local "Y."—Event a Credit to Promoters

The Y's certainly excelled their previous efforts last evening in the entertainment they put on in the assembly room of the High School. The credit for this enjoyable evening is due to Miss Elsie Gastrell, who was ably assisted by Miss Susan Rough. Mr. Mallory, chairman of the Board of Education, presided in an admirable way. Brief devotional exercises were conducted by Rev. C. G. Smith. A stirring patriotic solo was given by Miss McClatchie in splendid form and delighted the audience. After the chairman's fitting remarks, Mrs. Wilmot, in fine voice, gave a delightful Japanese song in her usual captivating manner and was compelled to respond to an encore, which was equally well rendered. Miss Bradley was the accompanist. Harry Redfern ably recited "Nothing But Leaves." Mrs. Deeton put on a splendid number when four boys gave a motion chorus, the solo being taken by Mrs. Wilmot. Twelve girls from Mr. Simpkins' room in Grier Street school, proved themselves very clever in a drill and snatches of patriotic songs. Miss Marie Stewart was an excellent accompanist for the drill. Mr. Reid, in his recitation, proved himself to be a talented reader of good ability. A number of boys gave appropriate recitations entitled "No Cigarettes for Me, Sir!"

An interesting sketch entitled "Packing for the Soldiers," and tableau followed, in which Miss Rough as "Aunt Patience Primrose," made a decided hit. She was assisted by several girls and boys who, without exception, acted their parts splendidly. In this sketch, which thoroughly delighted the audience, chocolates were recommended as being more nutritious than cigarettes for the soldiers. The singing of the National Anthem closed the programme. The proceeds of the entertainment go towards the purchase of chocolate for the soldiers.

To The Members Of The Knights Of Columbus In Ontario

The civilized world faces one of the supreme crises of history. Familiarity with the horrors of the struggle is apt to breed indifference to its true meaning and its inherent menace. It seems to me that I am but fulfilling one of my duties as State Chaplain of the Knights of Columbus in Ontario in drawing the earnest attention of the membership of the Order to the obligations that rest upon us.

I shall waste no time in discussing undeniable principles or fundamental truths. That the British Empire is engaged in a just war, that the war is as much Canada's as England's, and that Canada's citizens have a bounden duty to spare no effort in bringing that war to a victorious issue are statements so self-evident as to require no proof.

Neither shall I attempt to fix a term to the duration of the war. The time of its ending is known only to Him who holds ourselves and all our interests in the hollow of His hand. But I shall write of what I know. At this moment the Imperial authorities are urging enlistment by every available argument and are appealing to all British subjects to place patriotism and the national cause before personal considerations. The Canadian Government has issued a call for a half million men. I agree that the provision of such a number of men will tax our population to the limit. What if it does? Is not the cause worthy of the supremest sacrifice? I am not competent to measure the possible effect of commerce and industry of the withdrawal of so vast a body of men from peaceful pursuits. I assume that good judgment and common sense will prevent the crippling of enterprises that are necessary for the proper conduct of the war. With all other phases of finance, commerce or industry, I have no present concern,—nor have you. There is work to be done; our efforts must cooperate in the doing.

Honor calls on every Knight of Columbus who is fit and free for Overseas Service to offer himself for the work. Shall we leave the burden, the duty and the glory of this work to others?

Patriotism adds its urging to the call of honor. The danger is just as real to Ottawa, Toronto and London, as to the shores of Sussex or the banks of the Thames. Shall we forget the sacred truth that it is sweet and glorious to die—or at least to offer to die—for one's country?

The rights of humanity require that we make the sacrifice. Have martyred Belgium and stricken Serbia, and sorely-pressed France no power to awaken a responsive cry in our bosom?

The defence of civilization demands that we hurry to its assistance. It is our civilization—the civilization that suits us—that is jeopardy. Are we prepared to willingly accept another kind of civilization? Do we realize that the exercise of personal responsibility in political affairs, upon which rests civil liberty, hangs in the balance?

I say no word of the demands of conscience. It were folly to emphasize that aspect of the present hour. The man who is dead to the appeal of honor and patriotism, of humanity and civilization, is not apt to be alive to the call of conscience.

More than a century ago Edmund Burke lamented that the age of chivalry had gone because ten thousand swords had not leaped from their scabbards to avenge even a look that threatened with insult the gentle Queen of France. The Knights of Columbus draw much of their meaning and much of their inspiration from the glorious deeds of the great military orders of the days of chivalry. Let us beware lest, when the struggle is over and the victory won, we merit the rebuke that in the hour of trial a long distance lay between our principles and our practice. I write much more in dread than in reproach. My sole purpose is to place before every Knight of Columbus some considerations that should cause him to reflect, that should give him matter for meditation, that should inform his judgment and direct his decision.

"Man am I grown, a man's work must I do. Live pure, speak true, right wrong, follow the King—Else, wherefore borne?"

Coming Concert By 80th Band

The band of the 80th Overseas Battalion, C.E.F., under the leadership of Lieut. H. A. Stares, Mus. Bach., will play their farewell concert next Friday evening, April 7th, in the Griffin Opera House. The band will be assisted at this concert by the two talented sisters of the Bandmaster, Miss Gertrude and Miss Victoria Stares. An entirely new program will be presented by the band, and will include selected productions from the world's most famous composers. The following press opinions amply demonstrate the splendid impression created by the band on its recent tour.

The Citizen, Ottawa, March 4: A brilliant performance was given by Bandmaster Stares and his 80th Battalion band at the concert in the Russel Theatre last night. A wonderfull A band which will compare very favorably with some of the most famous bands on this continent.

The Citizen, Ottawa, March 6: The The 80th Battalion band delighted immense audiences at the Dominion Theatre yesterday. Hundreds were turned away. It is a great band. Every member of the band is an artist.

The Ottawa Free Press, March 4: 80th Battalion band scores a success. Their playing was a revelation. Bandmaster Stares is not only a most accomplished musician himself, but he has gathered about him in his famous band a body of men whose knowledge and love of music make them strive for perfection in all their efforts. One of the encores was a really wonderful rendering of "Nearer My God to Thee."

The Ottawa Free Bress, March 6, (editorial): It was a musical treat to hear the band. Lieut. H. A. Stares, the bandmaster, is an accomplished musician; he has gathered together a body of men whose love and knowledge of music makes the ideal bandsmen, and quickly responsive to their leader's direction. The selections played at their concerts here were rendered with a skill perhaps unequalled by that of any other military band ever heard in Ottawa.

THIS IS THE 606TH DAY THE BRITISH EMPIRE HAS BEEN AT WAR WITH GERMANY.

CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS

Mr. James Clancy, auditor of the Province of Ontario, in his report to the legislature, says there is absence of proper control over the expenditures of the Hydro-Electric Commission, and that some of its acts are done in "defiant disobedience of the act" which gives it its authority. In consequence, new legislation has been introduced by which the chief accountant of the commission will practically be an appointee of the Provincial Government, holding office during the pleasure of the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council and with the duty of countersigning all cheques issued by the commission. The chief accountant will also be required to make an annual report to the government. This report will show the actual condition and character of assets and liabilities, direct or indirect, on December 31st preceding, the cash transactions for the year, the revenues, income and interest earned and disbursements in connection with operation, maintenance, administration, etc., of all the undertakings controlled by the commission, the estimated revenue and estimated expenditure, in detail, for the coming year, the amounts and particulars of liabilities contemplated, and the securities or evidence of indebtedness to be created, issued or sold, together with the method of dealing with the same for the next succeeding year. The accounts of the commission will be audited at least once a year by the provincial auditor, or by an independent auditor appointed by the Government.

This is but another instance of the demand for expert accounting and auditing work, says The Monetary Times. The recent discussions in the House at Ottawa regarding the application of the new business taxes also indicate that the services of expert chartered accountants will be in great demand. More than once the Finance Minister hinted that his department would probably require such assistance. The chartered accountant will likely be in great demand, especially during the next decade. War is raising certain work which they alone can properly handle.

THE TRUE TRADE SPIRIT.

There is now about to take place in Paris an economic conference to consider, first, how Germany may be more rapidly weakened during the war, which is legitimate enough, and, secondly, how she may be kept down after the war, which is compatible only with a continuing desire for revenge. It will be seriously proposed that the enemies of Germany in this war, meaning specifically Great Britain, France, Italy and Russia, shall bind themselves not to conclude economic arrangements with the foe when beaten, except by concerted agreement among themselves as to terms, and that there shall be raised a special tax barrier against "enemy" products, that is, German goods. The English delegates to this conference approached their Government with a request that they be empowered to declare that never henceforth should British trade relations with Germany be as they were before the war. To this David Lloyd George retorted in a vigorous speech before the House of Commons. "We must not," he said, "subordinate human liberty and honor, self-respect and the civilization of mankind to any trade policy. When we consider trade the first thing to be done is to obliterate any idea of revenge."

That is sanity and wisdom. In the present turmoil of feeling it deserves almost to be called vision. That a deliberate policy of trade revenge should survive the war is unthinkable. The world is a place where a great many people have got to live together, exchanging wealth in all its forms, goods no less than knowledge, else civilization is wrecked upon its own miraculous contrivances. And, besides, the idea of rendering 65,000,000 industrious, efficient people forever impotent economically is preposterous. It is not feasible in the first place, and if it were, the world could not afford to do it.

Those who preach the doctrine of trade revenge forget that the officially avowed purpose of the war, in its present aspects, is to make an end of Prussian militarism, to remove the menace of further war. That is a laudable object.

Toronto News: The fact that Mr. Carvell and Mr. Kyte are unscrupulous partisans, with a reputation for bringing reckless accusations against political opponents, relieves neither Colonel Allison nor Sir Sam Hughes of the obligation of meeting the new munitions charges. In reading two of his own supporters in the House of Commons out of the party, and in affording every facility for the investigation of alleged corruption, Sir Robert Borden established a new precedent in Canadian public life and went far to raise Parliamentary conditions above the state in which the Laurier Government left them. The old Government's practice of using its majority in the House to prevent inquiry and ignore charges of corruption was reversed by the present Administration. Having set up the new standard, the Prime Minister cannot lower it, even out of consideration for one of his own colleagues.

Kingston Standard: It is not to be wondered at that Americans are asking why this "ghastly pretence" of friendliness with Germany should be continued. What the question will lead to no one can say; but at all events there is not the slightest doubt that if President Wilson decides to end it, he will be supported by the American people. And then what will be the effect of such action on "all other neutrals having self-respect"?

Mail and Empire: The Pittsburg Leader, whose owner and editor is the husband of Miss Lillian Russell, says the foreign situation would clear up and stay clear, as far as the United States is concerned, if Americans would stay off the ships of belligerent nations. Though the Leader professes to be a great admirer of Col. Roosevelt, the sentiments expressed in that statement are exactly those of Col. Bryan.

Current Comment

Gen. Hughes is hurrying home "to face the music." The Montreal piccolo player will be on the program.—Toronto exchange. And the present star players will take back seats.

The King of the Belgians has done a gracious act in conferring the Grand Cordon of the Order of Leopold on Sir Robert Borden. It is in recognition of the aid which Canada has given Belgium.—Kingston Standard.

In Pittsburgh a prisoner who stole a ton of coal was discharged by a judge and the complainant was ordered to send him some more, and wait for payment. Apparently coal is not valued as highly in the smoky city as in some other places.

Such words as "dirty" or "disagreeable" should be discarded by thinking and reverent men in talking of the weather. All weather is good.—Toronto Star. The Star man should visit Belleville occasionally—say in March or April. It's great, come down.

That reliable newspaper the Boston Transcript, says that the Washington Administration "is convinced from reports from its agents in Europe that Germany is nearly at the end of her rope." The end of the rope ought to be the end of the Kaiser and the Crown Prince.

According to news which comes through Switzerland, only 8,000 of 30,000 Serbians who fled before the advancing enemy, survived in the march of distress to Salonika. One of the worst features of war is the way in which it inflicts horror and misery on hosts of entirely innocent people.

It is not only the rake-off that ought to be investigated. The curtain has been partially lifted on a scene of gross incompetency and carelessness, which delayed and weakened Canada at a critical period in the war. The subject must be discussed now, without waiting for the dilatory procedure of a commission.—Toronto Star. We should think The Star would want the subject discussed after the equivocating tactics of Carvell, Kyte & Co.

A Popular Priest Passes To His Reward

Father O'Connor, of St. Michael's Church will be Keenly Missed —His Life's Work

The death of Father John J. O'Connor, curate of St. Michael's Church, Belleville, which occurred Thursday of this week in St. Vincent de Paul Hospital, Brockville, has cast a shadow on this diocese. Few in this city were aware that he was ill, as it was only on Wednesday of last week that the malady which culminated in his death attacked him. While in Brockville last year, he was stricken with typhoid fever, at which time he was a patient in the hospital for several weeks. He recovered, but the ravages of the disease apparently left him susceptible, and although during last summer he appeared to be entirely restored, his hitherto, not very strong constitution was undermined to such an extent that when his last illness, multiple neuritis, asserted itself, the powers of resistance were ineffectual and he succumbed. He having expressed a desire to go to the St. Vincent de Paul Hospital, was brought there from this city on Monday last. He did not improve, and on Wednesday evening showed symptoms of early dissolution. Thursday morning Very Rev. Dean Murray administered the last sacraments and at four o'clock in the afternoon the soul of the young priest passed peacefully to the Higher Realm. He was surrounded in his last moments with the kindly administration of a personal friend and college associate, Rev. Father Rheaume, of Smith's Falls; also his aunt, Rev. Sister Twomey, of Hotel Dieu Hospital, Cornwall, and Rev. Sisters of the St. Vincent de Paul Hospital

Speaking of Father O'Connor in a general sense, The Brockville Recorder of March 31st says:

The Rev. John J. O'Connor was a native of Ireland. He was born in Coachford, in the County of Cork, 32 years ago. He was educated under the direction of the Presentation Brothers taking a primary course in their schools in Cork City. He pursued higher classics and philosophy at All Hallows College, a noted missionary institution at Dublin. Subsequently he came to Canada and studied theology in the Grand Seminary, Montreal. He was ordained in St. James Cathedral in that city on December 18th, 1909, for the Archdiocese of Kingston. Owing to a scarcity of priests in the Diocese of Hamilton he was sent by Archbishop Gauthier to that city and for some months was assistant to the late Very Rev. Dean Coty, in St. Patrick's Church, Hamilton. From there he came to Brockville in 1912, and remained here until early in May of last year when he was transferred to Belleville.

While in Brockville he sustained the bereavement of his father, Mr. John O'Connor, who was a prominent member of the Irish Nationalist party and devoted follower of Mr. John Redmond, the leader of the party in the British House of Commons. He leaves one brother, Mr. Dennis O'Connor, an accountant with the Grand Trunk Railway in Chicago, and who arrived here this afternoon. He was a nephew of the late Very Rev. Dean Twomey, pastor of St. Mary's church, Williamstown, and of the late Rev. Father Twomey, rector of St. Michael's church, Belleville, and of Rev. Sister Twomey, of the Hotel Dieu, Cornwall. He was a member of Brockville Council Knights of Columbus and of the C. M. B. A.

The death of Father O'Connor is a distinct loss in the ranks of the priests of the Archdiocese of Kingston. He was very popular with his fellow laborers in the vineyard of the Lord. Young, zealous, saintly, he was a devoted priest and tireless worker in advancing the cause of religion in the few short years of his sacred ministry. At Hamilton, Brockville and Belleville, the places in which he labored, he was universally respected. In Brockville, with the laity of St. Francis Xavier church he was greatly beloved while with people of other denominations he was much esteemed. To know Father O'Connor was to recognize a sterling man.

Funeral this Afternoon

The funeral of the late Rev. Father O'Connor took place this afternoon, and many were present at the obsequies. All arrangements were made by the Knights of Columbus of Brockville, where deceased passed away. At 3 o'clock the remains arrived here upon the fast G.T.R. express, and were met at the station by members of the Knights of Columbus and others. A cortege was formed and proceeded to St. Michael's church, where the Libera was most appropriately sung. The body was then conveyed to St. James Cemetery and laid away at rest. The late Father O'Connor was a nephew of the late Father Twomey, who did so much in erecting the beautiful St. Michael's church and Academy, and placing the school property in the splendid position it is in to-day. This was done during his tenure of office as Parish Priest here. Had Father O'Connor lived, it was his intention to volunteer and accompany his colleague, Rev. Father Corrigan, who is already a chaplain of an overseas contingent. Divine Providence, however, ruled otherwise. The Knights of Columbus of this city, of which deceased was a valued and beloved member, looked after the arrangement of the funeral here, under the direction of Dr. Dolan, who is District Deputy for Eastern Ontario.

The pall bearers were Past Grand Knights of Belleville Council K. of C., and were as follows: Messrs. E. J. Butler, T. J. Hurley, F. P. Carney, Thos. Cushing, John V. Truiasch and H. L. Ingram.

The Poets' Corner

To a Brown Thrush.

By Alice D. O. Greenwood.

Dear little bird on wind-tossed bough,
Singing away through the pelting rain,
Happier far than I art thou;
When storms assail you ne'er complain.

"Cheer up, cheer up, so sweet so high,
Who taught thee thus to sing and sing?
In notes so clear, so sweet, so high,
Dear little bird with rain-wet wing.

Brave little bird that all day long
When the skies are bright, or skies are gray,
Dost cheer me with thy matchless song
Oh, tell me, if thou canst, I pray,

Is this fond fancy but a dream,
That thou when summer days have flown,
Wilt wing thy flight o'er vale and stream
To some fair spot that I have known?

Art thou a messenger that's sent
By some dear friend now far away,
To breathe to me of sweet content,
And sing to me when skies are gray?

Belleville Branch Of Canadian Patriotic Fund

During the month of March the local list of beneficiaries included 294, children of soldiers(or young brothers or sisters wholly depended on soldiers) 130, wives of soldiers; 37, mothers of soldiers, either widows or whose husbands were unable to work. Contributions during the month amounted to $286.25 and the 171 cheques mailed to soldiers families during the same period amounted to $2953.14. These cheques are for the full month's allowance and have always been sent out regularly about the 11th of each month to avoid any excuse for debts being incurred by beneficiaries. The committee has heard with regret that in a few instances some families have asked for credit and been allowed to go into debt for supplies. This should not be encouraged by the public, as it has been the object of these early and regular payments to avoid such conditions while the usual breadwinner is absent.

It is hoped that it will not be necessary to delay payments till the end of the month in those cases where families do not try to make each month's allowance last until the next allowance is due.

The response to the Committee's appeal to subscribers to pay up the amounts promised to be paid in last year, has not been as general as might have been expected. When it is known that this delay is seriously embarrassing the management in their efforts, it is trusted that those who have not made the payments promised will do so at once.

The Treasurer begs to acknowledge with thanks the following payments since added to the lists published up till 18th March.

Why Bixby Doesn't Go.

"What is that?"

Constructive Legislation.

First Lawyer—What makes you think we shall not be able to get this law passed by the legislature? Second Lawyer—It's too simple. Almost any one can understand it. It ought to be so complex and vague that nobody can understand it. Then it is bound to pass, because nobody would admit that he didn't understand it.

Woman's Desire to Attract.

Owing to the system under which we live, where man is a valuable prey, woman has contracted the habit of trying to attract. Even aggressive insolence on her part may conceal the desire to attract by exasperating.—W. L. George in Atlantic.

This is the Subject of the March Number of a Series of Studies in Economic Geography
now appearing regularly in The JOURNAL OF COMMERCE

Though Economic Geography has been much neglected in Canada, no subject is so full of interest and value to the business man who is looking for markets and other commercial information, or to the student who is on the alert for opportunities and is trying to determine intelligently to what field he shall devote his life's work.

Already two studies on this broad subject have appeared, namely: One on "The Canadian Fishing Industry" in January, and one on "The Sheep and Wool Industry" in February. Following the March article on Newfoundland, we shall take up, once a month, such important subjects as "The Canadian Mining Industry," "The Pulp and Paper Industry," "The Textile Manufacturing Industry," "Canada's Grain Crop and How it is Handled," "The British West Indies," "Canada's Shops and Foundries," etc.

A Subscription to the "Journal of Commerce" at $3.00 a year will secure you the whole series of 12, in addition to the regular matter in the 52 Weekly Issues of this Reliable Trade and Financial Paper—or you can get the 12 Economic Studies, in a binder, for $1.00.

Each $3.00 Subscriber also receives a Free Copy of a 420-page Volume, entitled "Canadian Industry, Commerce, and Finance," just issued, revised to date and bound in hard cloth cover.

Residents of Patterson and Church Streets complain of the annoyance caused during the past two months by the almost constant barking and piteous wailing and whining of a hound which is serving a term of solitary confinement in one of those small store houses in the Court House block.

BELLEVILLE BOY WOUNDED

In yesterday's list of casualties appeared the name of Private Clarence Ramsey who was reported to be slightly wounded. A telegram received here stated his injuries were not of a serious nature. Private Ramsey is a son of Mrs. Thomas Ramsey, residing on College street, Belleville. He left here with the 39th Battalion, and was attached to the 2nd Battalion. His many friends will be pleased to learn that he has not been seriously wounded.

WEDDING BELLS

NOSWORTHY—DELONG

A very quiet wedding took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. S. H. DeLong, Dundas Street, when at eleven o'clock their only daughter, Edna, was united in matrimony to Mr. J. W. Nosworthy of Timmins, Ont. Rev. H. S. Osborne of Bridge Street Church, officiated. The bride was attired in a navy blue suit of Gabardine cloth, with hat to match. She was unattended and was given away by her father, while Miss May Terwilliger played the bridal march. Immediately after the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Nosworthy left on the flyer amid the best wishes of their friends, for a trip East.

THE JOY OF BEING ALIVE AND WELL

Restored To Health By "Fruit-a-tives" The Famous Fruit Medicine

MDE. ROCHON

Rochon, P.Q. March 2nd, 1915.

"I have received the most wonderful benefit from taking 'Fruit-a-tives'. I suffered for years from Rheumatism and change of life, and I took every remedy obtainable, without any good results. I heard of 'Fruit-a-tives' and gave it a trial and it was the only medicine that really did me good. Now I am entirely well; the Rheumatism has disappeared and the terrible pains in my body are all gone. I am exceedingly grateful to 'Fruit-a-tives' for such relief, and I hope that others who suffer from such distressing diseases will try 'Fruit-a-tives' and get well".

MADAME ISAIE ROCHON.

The marvellous work that 'Fruit-a-tives' is doing, in overcoming disease and healing the sick, is winning the admiration of thousands and thousands.

Queen Mary School Scene of Pleasing Event—Music and Sketch Make up Pleasant Evening

A fair sized audience was present at the R.T. Knitting Circle concert, held in the Queen Mary School in West Belleville last evening. Mr. A. E. Bailey presided in his usual genial and efficient manner.

The programme consisted of piano solos by Mrs. Clarry, Misses Mary and Margaret McIntosh; solos by Misses Foxton, Walker, Mrs. McIntosh, Mrs. Singer, Mr. Clark and Mr. Staples, and recitations by Misses Farrell and White.

At the conclusion of the musicale a comedy sketch entitled "The Home Guard" was introduced by members of Albert College. These amateurs brought out the timidity of the women, while the men were away attending Home Guard Drill, in such a manner that would have done credit to professionals. The various make-ups and humorous lines brought forth rounds of applause from the audience.

The National Anthem brought the joyful proceedings to a close, after which a vote of thanks was passed to the members of the Albert College and all those who took part in the programme.

As a Pick-me-up After Grip

To Restore Health, Vigor, Energy, There is Nothing to Compare to

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food

The grip epidemic has assumed huge proportions until there is scarcely a home but shelters one or more victims of this enervating disease. Urged on by sudden changes of temperature, this dreaded scourge sweeps over the country like a forest fire before the western winds.

In offices, stores and factories the forces are greatly reduced because so many are away with grip, while many who stick to their posts do so with the greatest discomfort, because of the pains and aches and the great weakness associated with this disease.

It only takes a few hours of this debilitating ailment to bring even the strongest to their beds and the process of recovery is often most tedious.

Just at this point Dr. Chase's Nerve Food does wonders to hasten the return of health, strength and vitality. By forming new, rich blood it builds up the system as nothing else can. Here is a case to illustrate this point:

Miss Amy C. Davis, 301 Perth Ave., Toronto, Ont., writes: "After a severe attack of quinsy and grip, my nervous system seemed to be completely run down. I had taken a good tonic, prescribed by my doctor, but still felt very nervous; would start up at the least sound, and was very irritable. A friend advised me to try Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and, after taking two boxes, I felt so much improved that I continued to take four more, which completely restored my health. I cannot say too much for this great Nerve Food, and have recommended it to all my friends."

HOW TO AVOID GRIP

Rich, red blood is the greatest of germicides, and good vitality the strongest defence against disease. Keep the bodily vigor at high-water mark by using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and you need have no fear of grip or other contagious diseases. 50 cents a box, 6 for $2.50, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Ltd., Toronto.

It is the older people who suffer most from grip. Finding them in a more or less weakened condition, grip breaks down their power of resistance and prepares the way for pneumonia, kidney troubles, or heart failure.

After every epidemic of grip the grim reaper makes a regular harvest, through the medium of these ailments. There is only one way to avoid such results, and that is by the regular use of such restorative treatment as Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

This great food cure has proven a wonderful blessing to people in advanced years and all whose systems have become run down.

You need not linger in weakness if you will but put this treatment to the test. By supplying the ingredients required by nature, Dr. Chase's Nerve Food hastens the process of upbuilding and you can depend on the results proving of lasting benefit.

Miss E. J. Buswell, Centralia, Ont., writes: "Last Winter my mother contracted a bad cold. She was bothered with shortness of breath, wheezing, fevered and too sore to cough. Our doctor prescribed treatment which brought relief from these symptoms, but when she got up she was tired, always tired and weak. I got her three boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and she soon improved. Her eyes became clear and bright, the ashen hue left the face and she began once more to take up the reins and look after the household duties."

Survival of the Fittest Among Birds.

The struggle of life among the birds and other wild creatures is so severe that the feeble and malformed, or the handicapped in any way, quickly drop out. Probably none of them ever dies from old age. They are cut off in their prime. A weeding out process goes on from the time they leave the nest. A full measure of life, the perfection of every quill and feather and unerring instinct carry them along. They are always in the enemy's country; they are always on the firing line; eternal vigilance and ceaseless activity are the price of life with them. The natural length of life of our smaller birds is calculated to be eight or ten years, but probably not one in a thousand reaches that age. Not half a dozen times in my life have I found the body of a dead bird that did not show some marks of violence.—John Burroughs.

Remedy For Anger.

The greatest remedy for anger is delay. Beg anger to grant you this at the first, not in order that it may pardon the offense, but that it may form a right judgment about it. If it delays it will come to an end. Do not attempt to quell it all at once, for its first impulses are fierce. By plucking away its parts we shall remove the whole. We are made angry by some things which we learn at second hand and by some things which we ourselves hear or see. Now, we ought to be slow to believe what is told us. * * * If you were about to give sentence in court about ever so small a sum of money you would take nothing as proved without a witness, and a witness would count for nothing except on his oath. You would allow both sides to be heard; you would allow them time.—Seneca.

Keely's Motor.

The Keely motor was a machine invented by John W. Keely of Philadelphia, which he claimed was capable of generating its own power without cost. It was described by himself in the high sounding term as a pneumatic-pulsating-vacua engine. So successful was Keely in manipulating the machine and concealing the real agent by which it was operated that many capitalists were induced to put thousands of dollars in it. Scientific men always regarded it with extreme suspicion, and after the death of Keely in 1899 it was found to have been operated by compressed air supplied from a concealed tank.

I have found it one of the greatest influences in developing my intellectual as well as my spiritual life. THE WAR AND THE EMPIRE

COLONIAL SECRETARY FORESEES GREAT IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT TO FOLLOW THE COMING OF PEACE---GREAT PRAISE FOR CANADIAN SOLDIERS---WHAT GERMAN VICTORY MEANS FOR AMERICA

By Edward Marshall

LONDON, March 15.—I asked Mr. Bonar Law, Colonial Secretary of the British Empire, to give me some expression of his opinion of the attitude which the United States has taken in this war. It is worthy of especial notice that the interview which follows is the first which he has given since the war began—one of very few which he ever has given —and that in it he makes a suggestion which, coming from him, is of paramount world-importance, in which the Dominions, Canada, Australia, and New Zealand will be represented upon equal terms with England, herself.

Mr. Bonar Law's appointment to the highest post in the Colonial Office of the British Empire may be regarded as an indication of the importance accorded in England to Colonial opinion and Colonial ability.

A native of New Brunswick, he has become the leader of the Unionist party and is inevitably of great influence in the Cabinet, while his incumbency in the Colonial Office can but mean that the affairs of the Dominions are certain of sympathetic and comprehensive consideration, And now comes his great, his epoch-making suggestion:—

"The Government took an important step toward reorganization upon lines even wider than those which at present are followed when it made the pledge, which I have reprated, that the Dominions shall be consulted when the time arrives for the conclusion of peace.

"Of coures I can speak for myself, only; but it is my hope that as the direct result of the great war may come the creation of an Imperial Parliament in which every one of the Dominions will have its full share of representation, allotted in accordance to its corresponding voice in the government of the Empire."

"The very response of the Dominions to the call of the Mother Country in this war," he went on, "must be regarded as a proof of the fact that minds which are among the best and most alert in the world are fully convinced that human freedom is at stake, and that this war concerns not Europe alone, but the lands and peoples overseas as well.

"The Colonials have done magnificently and have won a new place in the hearts of the homo country. The Dominions are self-governing, and, whatever night be done in the United Kingdom, there never was the slightest thought of an attempt at Imperial compulsion among them. In spite or this the men have poured across the seas to aid. England never will forget.

Wonderful Fighters.

"After the battle of Ypres, where the Canadians saved the British and French line, rose to splendid heights, which, indeed, were wholly justified. and the work at the Dardanelles of the 'Anzavs, as the Australian and New Zealand troops affectionately are called, imposed upon the affiliated peoples of the Allied nations another heavy debt of gratitude to the Colonials.

"The operations at the Dardanelles were disappointing to a degree unequalled in any other of the great war's phases, but the part played in them by the brave Colonials was not less than inspiring.

"It was almost fine enough to off set the disaster, for its moral effect was widespread and intense.

"It had been the fond belief of German leaders that the Dominions would be no more than half-hearted in their support of the mother country and this argument had been very widely spread by the Teutonic propagandists among the people of the neutral countries.

"After the work of the Canadians at Ypres and of the Anzacs at the Dardanelles further talk of that sort obviously would have been absurd.

"At home, in England, the result was quite as gratifying. The spirit shown by the Colonials in the South African campaigns had led England to the knowledge that she might expect much from them now, but her greatest expectations have been many times exceeded."

"Criticism here at home, when analyzed, merely means that the people, who have chosen the Government, always want a better one than they can get, and always are determined to prevent shirking or deterioration if it can be helped. Frank and constant criticism is one effective means by which to prevent it.

"Criticism from the Dominions would be far more serious, for, while they are contributing of their lives and wealth with a magnificent freedom, they have no voice in the direction of the uses to which these forces shall be put.

"The statement made by the Prime Minister of Australia, in which he said, "Our business is to carry out the instructions of the Imperial Government and to give that Government our hearty and enthusiastic assistance as well as to refrain from criticising the action of men who are placed in a situation of frightful responsibility, voiced the general overseas conviction, I am sure, and was very comforting to all of us.

Turning to the relationship between Great Britain and the United States, Mr. Law said:

"Personally I believe the States to be, as a whole, friendly to us. I recognise, of course, that a large German element must be hostile; it has been acting in the most unscrupulous manner obviously under home guidance, not only exhibiting this hostility towards us, but, it would seem to me, to the United States' itself; but I believe the great bulk of American sentiment favors the cause for which we are fighting.

"I must be careful to make my meaning very clear. This favorable sentiment, in my opinion, cannot be interpreted as due altogether to sympathy for Great Britain. Nevertheless that is important.

"The people of the two great English speaking races are perhaps so closely allied in many ways that points of disagreement and even of jealousy are very natural, but, during the past twenty years I have noticed, a marked decrease of such unfortunate influences in the United States.

"One cause for this has been that as the United States has grown in population, wealth and power, it has gradually ceased to entertain the idea which at one time was prevalent among its people, that England was inclined to patronize them.

"But the main reason why I am convinced that America fundamentally. is on our side, is that I am sure the people there feel as strongly as we do that a victory for Germany would mean the downfall of established forms of political life, and of ideals accepted and revered in that country as surely as in ours. Conceptions of justice, convictions of right, are the same in the United States as in England.

"That forms one bond of union between us which probably is even stronger than the language bond, and which no slight misunderstandings over minor matters of, for example, commercial management, ever can sweep away.

"Another bond between the countries is the fact that in their dealings with other nations both really perfect accuracy may be called altruistic motives than has been commonly the case among the other nations of the world.

"That this is true of us of course is at present denied by our enemies, who refuse to admit that we are otherwise than wholly selfish, just as the same people would refuse to credit the United States with any altruism if they were fighting her instead of us.

"But it is the fact that in both nations, England and the United States, there is a very strong and probably predominant opinion in favor of just treatment of the more or less dependent nations.

"Still a further bond of psychological union exists in the fact that the United States, undeniably as strongly upon the side of human freedom as any country in the world, must recognize the fact that that, and nothing less than that, is the main issue involved in this war, and that the Allies are fighting upon the side of liberty.

"This reflection naturally leads one to another thought, which can but strengthen even the strong arguments which already have been noted.

"One of the most interesting features of the situation seems to me to be the fact that, while the gasis of society in the United States is British, and while, therefore, in ideas and still more in ideals, American society is actuated by the same motives which govern British social movements, aspirations and developments, yet there is as strong an influence, and perhaps even a stronger influence there at work, urging sympathy with France, our great ally.

"This has existed since the days of the war which gave to the United States its independence.

"So, as I analyze the situation, the United States sympathizes with us because of our similarity of race, language and ideals, and sympathizes with our Ally France, because (among other obvious reasons) of the help which France gave to America when America was struggling for independence.

"A part from these considerations, which in their influence are deeper than any material advantages could be, it also must be remembered that in all trade matters America and Great Britain are related so closely as to be almost interdependent.

"The always has been the case, and, if we win this war, the trade relationships between the United States and Great Britain are likely to be of an increased nature rather than of a diminished intimacy."

"'If you win this war?'" I quoted. "Are you not sure that you will win this war?"

Sure of Victory.

Mr. Bonar Law, nodding, spoke very confidentially. " share the view," said he, "which I think is held by everyone in this country, that in the end we must be victorious.

"Of course I realize that I, like everyone in Engalnd, inevitably must be prejudiced in this matter, and I do not forget that some neutral countries which are without bias, seem to have decided that our enemies are sure to win.

"I am sure, however, that they are mistaken, and I take this view, although at the present moment I see no prospect in the near future, or even, perhaps, for many months, that good news will be brought to me.

"At the base of my confidence is what I believe to be sound reasoning. My optimism is founded on the fact that the resources of the Allies unquestionably are far greater than those of our enemies.

"Germany very quickly obtained an immense advantage at the beginning of the war because long previously she had determined to go to war. Knowing it was coming, because she had decided definitely and in cold blood to bring it on, she had prepared for it.

"In my belief, her only chance of victory lay in winning definitely and completely while this advantage still was notable and fully operative. Losing that, I think that she lost all.

"The situation now is rapidly changing, although our adjustment, and, therefore, the growth of our resisting and aggressive power, was slow at the start.

"Undoubetedly a despotism controlled by military influence has immense advantages in warfare over a nation of free institutions; but the free nation, when it once begins to act effectively, will act more effectively than the despotism could, because it will be acting voluntarily, and, therefore, enthusiastically.

"Munitions, in which at first we were lamentably deficient, as compared with our enemies, are now forthcoming in increasing quantities, and, so far as I can judge, there is no reason to suppose that we ever shall be again at the serious disadvantage in this repsect at which we found ourselves at the beginning of the war.

"Our sea power, too, is slowly but surely producing its effect, and the result, which is beginning to amount to the strangling of Germany's industrial life, will become more and more apparent with the passage of each future month.

"Our unpreparedness was not unique. Even France, where the belief in the possibility of war with Germany was far stronger than it possibly could have been with us, was caught more or less unready by the actual beginning of conflict.

"The way in which France, a democratic country and as fully committed as the United States to free institutions, has devoted the whole of her national life, every ounce of every citizen's energy, every centime of the national resources to efficiently meeting the needs of a war which her people must rightly regard as one which has been forced upon them, but upon which their national life depends, is not only creditable, but must be accepted as proof that even a very great and very desperate war with absolutism can be carried on efficiently under free institutions."

I asked Mr. Bonar Law to estimate for me the effect which a German victory would have upon the progress of the world and the future of humanity.

"It is almost impossible to conceive," he answered. "A German victory, I think, really would mean that all the efforts, gradual, persistent and heroic, which have been made to develop human freedom, throughout many centuries, would be thrown into the scrap heap, and that the world would be thrust back into the dark days of despotic control."

"Do you admit the possibility of this?" I asked.

"No; it will not happen."

"And if," he continued," the results of this war are to discredit the whole system of militarism upon which German society and government are based, as I am sanguine enough to expect, then it will be followed by a not only among the Allies, but everywhere, of the ideal of human freedom."

The United States Would Be Attacked

"But if the remote possibility of a German victory should be realized," I asked, "what, in your opinion, would be the effect upon the United States? Separated from the victors by an ocean, rich and of great defensive potentialities, would there be, do you think, the slightest possibility of attempted German aggression against us?"

"I am sure there would be real danger of it," Mr. Bonar Law replied. "I have already said, I think, that in my opinion American interest in an Allied victory is only less vital than our own.

"Personally I am sure, and I can feel little doubt that most true Americans are sure, that a victory for Germany over the Allies would very surely mean that they, too, would be struggling for their lives before many years had passed, for Germany's frequently avowed and entirely frank ambition has been for more than European domination, it has been for world domination.

A victory for the Allies, upon the other hand, would mean for America that she could go on developing in peace the national and natural ideals of the great people which has been evolving within her boundaries, with the certainty that what she may achieve in material, social, scientific and industrial advance might be retained and that her progress could be continuous.

"In England the freedom of the individual is as great as it ever has been anywhere, and standing shoulder to shoulder with England are the great Dominions, which are as truly self-governing as you are, yourselves."

"And finally, "I suggested, 'you would wish to say to the people of America—"

"That we of the British Empire are a peace-loving people,' Mr. Bonar Law promptly replied, "and that we believe this war to be one of the greatest crimes in history; but that our people as a whole are utterly convinced that the cause for which we have been compelled to fight in just, and that we shall fight on till we have won victory.

"Cromwell said to his Ironsides: 'We know what we are fighting for, and we love what we know.'

"We too, know what we are fighting for, and we, too, love what we know.

"We believe that the United States also knows it, also loves it.

"We are fighting more than our own fight, although that is a battle for existence. We are fighting a world's fight against the law of force, which is the law of war, for the law of right, which is the law of peace.

"The first mistake made by our enemies, and their fundamental error in every detail of their procedure, was their admission to their hearts of worship for the law of force. It caused the war, wrecked Belgium and brought Italy, against her will into the struggle.

"They have made similar mistakes in the efforts they have made to influence neutral countries.

"Beginning, there, to try to induce sentiment in their favor, they cannot understand their failure after Louvain, Rheims, hte submarine-boat warfare upon innocent women, and children, the campaign against legitimate American industry and a general propaganda marked by such unworthy episodes as the activities of Dumba and his associates, of Dernburg and his associates, and of von Papen and the conspirators who worked with him.

War Versus Peace.

"Three years ago I said in the House that I did not believe that if war came it would be in response to the action of irresistible causes, that I believed that if it came it would be due to lack of human wisdom.

"It was my belief then, and is my belief now that peace, the most sensible and moral thing in the world, could be guaranteed only by the realization on the part of every country of the strength of other countries, and by a general refusal to idealize the motives of other men, which the Anglo-Saxon, whether he be an Englishman or an American, surely is prone to do.

"Napoleon found that his ruthless ambition and offences against the peaceful development of humanity eventually arranged against him the moral forces of the world.

"Germany will learn that its work for efficiency in war is recognized by the world as having been work toward war, by definite design.

And while the world must charge this against Germany, it must as positively admit that Great Britain, like the United States, has been consistantly at work for efficiency in peace and the development of general human happiness, rather than for the satisfaction fo the boundless ambition of the few.

"War usually has been an immoral force and immoral force is particularly responsible for this war. Those who forced it on the world showed not only that they did not value moral forces, but that they utterly misunderstood them.

"War arouses not the best, but the worst in those who deliberately provoke it, and when able brains are turned in that direction this worst becomes that which has been dubbed by those who practice it in this war 'frightfulness.'

"Two thousand years ago humanity abandoned, or thought that it abandoned, such practices as the poisoning of wells in warfare. Exactly that has been returnel to in this war.

"The destruction of the Lusitania, which was like the blowing up of a hotel full of non-combatants, was not warfare, but was worse than warfare.

"The offenses which have been perpetrated against America and other neutrals have not been warfare but much worse than warfare.

"Edmund Burke once cried that he could not bring an indictment against an entire nation. I wonder if, were he alive today he would make a similar declaration.'

I asked Mr. Bonar Law definitely to comment upon the position of neutral nations as he sees it.

"For much more than a generation the world's most usefully intelligent people have worked towards war's prevention," he replied, "or, in the event of the impossibility of its prevention, against the mitigation of its horrors.

"Conventions of all kinds have been drawn up for this purpose, but this war has shown us that such conventions must be valueless except to the extent that they are given support by neutral nations.

"Every convention of this sort has been violated by our adversaries in this war, but, unfortunately, up to this point, no effective protest has been made by any neutral country.

"The United States was, and is the greatest of the neutral countries. A proud nation, and we are glad to feel the closeness of our blood-and-sympathy relationship with her.

"Her citizens were barbarously murdered by our adversary. It is not for me, it is not for the British Government, it is not for anyone except the United States to say what action they should have taken or still shall take in the grim circumstances.

"But the world's hope lies in destroying from the minds of men the thought that such outrages can prevail against civilization and making speeches granting interviews and writing letters of appeal to the world's letters of appeal to the world's social sense will not thus destroy this thought.

"Some day the United States may have to fight again though God forbid that this should be the case.

"If she is forced to fight it will not be a fight for gains through war, but for the right to peace and everything peace means to progress and to morals

"The victory of Germany in this struggle might very well bring that day nearer than at present most of America's great thinkers are willing to admit.

"Underlying this thought there is food, I am quite sure, for very solemn, very careful consideration by Americans."

BRITON AND BOER AGAINST THE TEUTON

What Our Enemies of a Few Years Ago are Doing to Help Wipe German Flag From Last Bit of African Territory

"Somewhere in Africa" a handful of Germans are fighting to get the last small remnant of that great colonial system which the Kaiser so laboriously had built and upon which he lavished so many millions before the war. The Germans have boasted that after almost two years' conflict the enemy has seized hardly a square mile of the Fatherland, but one by one Germany has lost her overseas possessions, each one an empire almost as great as Wilhelm's realm at home. And now Germany retains only one colony, and that in East Africa, which hangs by so slender a thread that it may be lost any day or any hour.

And, by a strange streak of fate, the last of the Kaiser's colonies is menaced by an army of Boers who fifteen years ago were willing to stake their lives that Wilhelm was their only friend in the world and that his famous telegram to "Oom" Paul Kruger meant he would come to their assistance. For it is Lieutenant General Jan Smuts, fifteen years ago fighting with all his might and soul to prevent British domination in South Africa, who slowly is wiping out of existence the last particle of German interest in Africa, and adding to British territory a strip of land which will make complete the dream of Britain's great empire builder Cecil Rhodes.

When German East Africa fails into the lap of Great Britain she at last will have a roadbed—and a very wide one—for Rhodes' railway that is to run from Cape Town, at the south end of the continent, to Alexandria, on the Mediterranean. And the Kaiser, who plotted and intrigued, bargained and negotiated to prevent just that very thing and that he himself might have a greater share in the division of the Dark Continent, is euchred in the game of war out of every one of the hundreds of thousands of square miles of territory which he had won through the arts of peace.

And German East Africa is a prize worth the taking, for it is eight times the size of the State of New York, three times the size of Italy and almost twice the area of Germany herself.

Whether the German forces in East Africa surrender tomorrow or a year hence, they have made a game fight that must win the admiration of our troops. For almost two years the infant colony has been cut off from communication with the outer world. The British have blockaded it from the sea and assailed it from the north, the Belgians have attacked and invaded it from the west and the Portuguese have harassed it from the south. And although the colony has a population of three million there probably are fewer than one thousand whites in the whole territory to direct the campaign to preserve the Kaiser's last colony. How the handful of Germans have been able to procure powder and ammunition and how they have been able to procure food for themselves are mysteries to those who know that before the war almost every article on the colonists' table was imported from other countries and that Berlin had made practically no military preparations in the colony.

Ever since the war began there has been fighting by the colonists. Once a British warship made an attack on the principal port and capital, Dar-es-Salaam, which a quarter century ago was Tippo Tib's headquarters for shipping slaves. The Germans retaliated by sending a small warship across the way to the neighboring island of Zanzibar and sinking a small British naval vessel. The British East Africa thereupon invaded the German colony and gave to their neighbors a jolly drubbing. Presently the Germans made a return visit to the neighborhool of Mombassa.

For a year there was comparative quiet because the Government needs all their colonial forces for the conquest of German Southwest Africa. After that colony had been conquered by Gen. Louis Botha, another Boer, all the South African forces that could be gathered were sent in transports up the east coast to Mombasa, which now is the base of operations against the German colony.

Since Gen. Smuts took charge of the invading forces there has been action everywhere. There has been a 'naval' action between hostile Nyanza, which lake forms the northern boundary of the besieged colony. The action was not very decisive as far as the freedom of the seas was concerned, but the British "dreadnought," which is about fifty feet long, was, and since then has had the freedom of the lake, which is under the equator and hot enough to suit the most fastidious bluejacket.

Another expedition called the Central African Imperial Service Contingent, went up the Zambesi River from the ocean, in lighters, to Lake Nyassa, on the south-western boundary of the German colony. "It was a grand sight to see the hippos and crocodiles basking in the sun on the banks," wrote a trooper of the 2nd South African Rifles, from Johannesburg, "but we could not practice on them because we had no ammunition, which was waifing for us at the base. In this part of the world everything is done by the natives. They carried our kits and blankets, for there was no transport. The King's African Rifles, natives of a splendid type and admirably drilled, played us into Zombia, which is the seat of Government in Nyassaland."

A third expedition is operating from the west, and is composed of Belgians, who have their base at Stanleyville, in the Belgian Congo. This force is believed to be in possession of the old trading centre and slave mart of Ujiji, where Henry M. Stanley found Doctor Livingstone. Ujiji, now a prosperous little city, is on the shore of Lake Tanganyika and at the end of a railroad which the Germans constructed all the way from the coast at Dar-es-Salaam to head off the British, who were preparing to build the railroad which runs from Mombasa to Fort Florence on Victoria Nyenza.

Fight Under Snowclad Peak.

The fourth expedition against the Germans is under the direction of the Portugese, but this undoubtedly is not giving much worry to the defenders, because in the 100 years since the Portuguese have been on the East Coast they never have been able even to pacify the blacks in their own territory.

The main invasion is from the British base at Mombasa, and it is believed that no fewer than 25,000 men are engaged in the enterprise, which is being carried forward within sight of an extinct volcano that is more than three miles in height and which, in spite of the fact that it is only a few

French Hair Dressers are Clever

Scientists in France have given much study to the care of the hair, and nowhere in the world do men, women and even children have such luxuriant hair.

It was Dr. Sangerbund, of Paris, who discovered that falling hair, faded hair and dandruff were caused by germs, and it was a Frenchman that first gave to the world a hair tonic that would destroy the germs.

Since the introduction of Parisian Sage into Canada the people have learned that dandruff can be quickly abolished, that falling hair or thin hair is unnecessary, and that everybody can have an abundant head of vigorous hair, full of life and beauty.

PARISIAN SAGE

It is because Parisian Sage works such wonders that the sale all over Canada is phenomenal. It is guaranteed to eradicate dandruff, stop falling hair and itching scalp in two weeks, or money back.

Parisian Sage costs 50 cents a large bottle at your druggist's. The Girl with the Auburn Hair is on every package.

For aches, pains, rheumatism, etc., try Parisian Mustard Cerate. Its effect is wonderful. Use in place of mustard plasters, poultices or hot applications. Will not blister. 25c. a tube.

Cadwell and Yoakum Have Little to Say

Former, Thru Subordinate, Denied any Dealings With Relatives of Hughes

NEW YORK, March 31—E. B. Cadwell, one of the backers of the American Ammunition Co., the Canadian dealings with which have resulted in statements in regard to Gen. Sir Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia and Defence, yesterday through an office attache, denied any dealings with relatives of Hughes.

B. F. Yoakum, president of the Frisco lines, could not be seen. His secretary would not admit that Yoakum was interested in a munitions company.

"There is no reply to be made," he said. "The American Ammunition Company," said the spokesman at Cadwell's office, "is a concern with assets approaching a million dollars. We do not know Col. Allison."

In the Ottawa despatches Col. Allison was mentioned as the agent through whom the shell contracts were let at exorbitant prices.

How You May Throw Away Your Glasses

The statement is made that thousands wear eyeglasses who do not really need them. If you are one of these unfortunates, then these glasses may be ruining your eyes instead of helping them. Thousands who wear these "windows" may prove for themselves that they can dispense with glasses if they will get the following prescription filled at once: Go to any active drug store and get a bottle of Bon-Opto tablets. Dissolve one Bon-Opto tablet in ½ glass of water. With this harmless liquid solution bathe the eyes two to four times daily, and you are likely to be astonished at the results right from the start. Many who have been told that they have astigmatism, eye-strain, cataract, sore eyelids, weak eyes, conjunctivitis and other eye disorders, report wonderful benefits from the use of this prescription. Get this prescription filled and use it; you may so strengthen your eyes that glasses will not be necessary. Thousands who are blind, or nearly so, or who wear glasses might never have required them if they had cared for their eyes in time. Save your eyes before it is too late! Do not become one of these victims of neglect. Eyeglasses are only like crutches and every few years they must be changed to fit the ever-increasing weakened condition, so better see if you can, like many others, get clear, healthy, strong magnetic eyes through the prescription here given. The Valmas Drug Co., of Toronto, will fill the above prescription by mail, if your druggist cannot.

A prominent City Physician to whom the above article was submitted, said: "Bon-Opto is a very remarkable remedy. Its constituent ingredients are well known to eminent eye specialists and widely prescribed by them. It can be obtained from any good druggist and is one of the very few preparations, I feel should be kept on hand for regular use in almost every family."

J. S. McKeown fills many Bon-Opto prescriptions, and will gladly fill yours.

PURE BRED HOUNDS BATTALION MASCOTS

CORNWALL, March 31.—Lieut.-Col. MacDonald has received for the 154th Battalion, C.E.F., two splendid pure bred Russian wolf hounds, a gift from O. A. Zeuricher, late manager of the mechanical plant of the Caledonia Springs Bottling Works, who has enlisted in the battalion and presented his valuable dogs as mascots. The dogs were imported from Russia, and are from the kennels of the Grand Duke Nicholas.

RECRUITING MIKE M'GUIRK

Two Ladies of the Relief Committee Try to Induce Michael to Enlist and so Get Provision for His Wife and Family—But Both Fail Lamentably in Their Endeavors

(E. H. Wilson in Beck's Weekly)

"Now remember," said Mrs. Norton, as she caught up her muff and bag and hurried to the door, "the name is McGuirk, Michael McGuirk, St. David's Lane. Visit them to-day, they need everything, and I promised to see to it, but I have two committee meetings and the Red Cross on my hands, and must pass them on to you. If the man is strong, get him to enlist."

It was a "below zero" day, but the report of McGuirk's poverty which had been handed into our Society allowed of no delay, and, warmly wrapped, I floundered through the snow in search of the miserable family.

The exterior of the broken-down hut was quite what I expected, paper and straw stuffed in broken window panes and a rusty stove pipe doing duty for a chimney.

"Whist!" said an unctious Irish voice. "Biddy, open the door, and if it's meself they're seeking, say I'm out at the dressmaker's." Another shout greeted the remark, and the door was opened by a small girl clad in a thin print dress, which did not cover the bare arms and legs, and made me shudder in the cold atmosphere of the fireless room.

"Are you Mrs. McGuirk?" I said to the cheerful looking rolypoly little woman, who arose from a packing box as I entered, holding a most hilarious baby in her arms. "I am that," she said. "Kitty, get off the chair this minit and give it to the lady!"

The chair had no back and a short leg, so I declined with thanks. The room was furnished with packing boxes, a rickety table, and a rusty old stove, much dilapidated. Straw in the corners of the floor, covered with old bits of carpet, rags, and newspapers, seemed the only possible excuse for beds for father, mother and five children.

I was prepared for wretchedness, having heard of a tragic tale of the arrival of the family by the last boat of the season in abject poverty, the husband unable to find work, and the cheerfulness of the family took my breath away. The costume of the baby was a mystery till the mother explained that it was a red woollen toque which Tom found on a garbage barrel, and by cutting off the pointed top for his head and making slits for his arms, he was "clothed as far as it wint." As he had no other garment he was an embarrassing spectacle.

A scuffle behind me between two little girls brought a vigorous protest from the mother. "Now then, Kitty, let Biddy have the sweater; it's her turn. Sure you must have had it half an hour!" And—with a blissful sigh, Biddy lapped in luxury.

"Where is your husband?" I asked. "Faith, he's out looking for work," smiled she. "But there is plenty of snow shovelling just now," I exclaimed. "Aye, for them as has brooms and shovels," she assented. "We have nayther, an' it would be mighty hard to shovel on an empty stomach."

"And where is your son, may I ask?" "Sure, he's out picking up coal afther the carts. It's mighty lucky for poor folk these steep hills."

Just then a cheery whistle announced the arrival of the son and heir, bearing a newspaper full of coal and sticks, with the aid of a match and packing box, was soon converted into a fire for the shivering family.

• • • •

"I am commissioned," I said, "to see that you are made comfortable. If you will give me a list of your most pressing wants I will take your son with me to bring them home."

"Be quiet now," said Mrs. McGuirk, "sure I know best," and thrusting the chuckling baby into Kitty's arms she began counting on her fingers. "Sure it's coal we do want, and bread and butter, an' praties, an' tea an' sugar, an' fish, this being Friday, an' bacon an' eggs, an' milk an' flour, an' oatmeal an' jam. An' beds an' blankets an' dishes. But we've got a tay kettle and an' iron pot."

"While I was trying to explain that I had not a bank behind me, a loud stamping at the door and a loud shout of joy from the children proclaimed the arrival of the master of the house. He was a big, handsome, strong looking man, evidently adored by his family. I was introduced, and said at once, "Why, Mr. McGuirk, I wonder you don't enlist? They need just such fine, strong men as you at the front, and your pay, with all these children and your wife on the Patriotic Fund, would keep them very comfortable."

There was a perfect howl of horror, and Mrs. McGuirk exclaimed: "Sure, that's wan reason we left the ould country! Was I going to have my Mike cut up and murdered by them nasty Germans! An' if he came back widout his leg, how was I going round wid a limping husband?' She added proudly, "Mike has very fine legs; let the bowlegged man wid the squint next door go, but not my Mike."

"But what does Mr. McGuirk say?" I asked ingatiatingly.

"Now what good would it do me to have Biddy an' the childer comfortable if I was dead in them trenches?" said smiling McGuirk. A sympathetic groan from the family showed they were in unison on the subject, so I gave up recruiting and went to business.

"Have you, a bath tub?" said I, glancing at the untidy family.

"Now what would I do wid a tub?" laughed the mother, "when they've cut off the water an' we get the full of the tay kettle at the naybors?"

I gave up suggesting improvements, and said "I would send necessary things that night by Tom, and comforts on the morrow."

'Thank ye kindly," said Mrs. McGuirk. "When yez call again I will be able to offer yez a cup of tea which I understand is the proper thing here."

We departed in the midst of a misunderstanding as to which had present rights to the sweater.

• • • •

Tom was a pathetic little figure, with his thin, shabby coat, and his hands plunged deep in his pockets, for warmth I supposed, until he said, "I do hope you will excuse me, miss, keeping me hands in me pockets, but me father bought me gloves at a rummage sale, an' they're both for the one hand. The queer thing is, the boy next door is in the same fix, and they bought his set at the same time."

"Did you never think of exchanging with him?" said I.

A look of astonishment merged into a broad grin as he grasped the idea. "Sure," he said, "they are the same kind, an' I'll do it. Thank ye kindly, miss."

I sent him home with a basket of food, ordered coal and blankets, and went back to consult the Committee. "You have a large sized elephant on your hands, ladies," I remarked at the the close, and, owing to the costume of the baby I prefer a married woman should visit the family. McGuirk is too lazy to enlist or work, and his wife is a hopeless optimist."

"Oh," said Mrs. Norton cheerfully. "We will clothe the children. I will take Tom for an errand boy, and persuade McGuirk to enlist."

Her description of her visit was convulsing. Mrs. McGuirk was having company for tea, the "bowlegged man wid a squint" and his wife had been invited in to share their good fortune. The pound of bacon was sizzling in the pan, most of the flour had been made into scones, well buttered, and tea was steaming on the stove in an old battered watering can. The assortment of broken china which did duty for cups and saucers was beyond description, as was the dignity of the hostess as she invited Mrs. Norton to "have tea an' a scone."

Having declined, Mrs. Norton explained that she had called to impress on Mr. McGuirk the advantages it would be to him and his family if he would enlist and leave them well provided for, while doing his duty as a young, strong man, in fighting for his country.

"Will ye tell me," said McGuirk, as he carefully balanced half a tomato can full of tea on the palm of his hand, and sweetened it with a handful of sugar from a paper bag—"Will you tell me if your husband has gone" "He is to old," said Mrs. Norton. "Have ye a boy, then?" "Yes, but he is too young and delicate." "Well, then, woman! I don't see how ye can have the heart to come round to a peaceable, quiet man, enjoying himself in the bosom of his family wid a few friends, and ask him to lave it all, an' make his wife a widdy an' his childer orfins for the sake of a little dirty money."

Mrs. Norton rose up in her wrath. "Mr. McGuirk, I hope you may be long spared to enjoy yourself in the bosom of your family with plenty of dirty money to spend," and she swept from the room.

MUSIC AND DRAMA

"WITHIN THE LAW", THURSDAY

After two years at the Eltinge Theatre, New York, where it played to capacity houses, from the beginning to the end of the long engagement, "Within the Law," Bayard Veiller's absorbing melodrama of modern life in New York, will come to Griffin's Opera House next Thursday night for one night only. This play, which has for its principal theme, an exposition of the police methods and economic conditions that exist in the metropolis, has excited more comment than any drama produced within the half-centry mark. The minumum wage question now being agitated so widely is one of the important themes selected by the dramatist as the basis material of his play. There is a story of a poor shop-girl who is sent to prison for a crime she does not commit. After her release and a vain endeavor to obtain decent employment, she becomes the "brains" of a gang of "crooks" and as their leader carries on various schemes by which she obtains enormous sums of money, managing always to keep within the pale of the law, and snapping her fingers in the face of the police department.

A CHILD OF GOD

Cyrus Townsend's Brady's famous novel, "A Child of God", has been picturized in 4 parts by The Reliance Company and is announced as the feature offering at Griffin's Opera House on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of next week. The popular photoplay stars, Sam De Grasse and Francelia Billington, portray the leading characters in the story. In addition to the above offering 4 other filmplays embracing comedy, Western and society drama will also be exhibited.

"A KNIGHT OF THE PANGE"

Rough riding is a form of amusement found only on the plains of the Far West. Easterners have depended upon Wild West shows for their sight of the daring cowboys on the plunging and bucking bronchos. These feats of horsemanship never fail to thrill us to the core, and we have nothing but admiration for the daring of the riders, who perform their remarkable stunts on the backs of treacherous cow ponies.

In the Wild West shows we rarely see more than one great rider, the others are usually mediocre horsemen. But in the Universal Red Feather five-reel drama of the West, "A Knight of the Range," with Harry Carey and an exceptional cast, there is the greatest collection of rough riders ever assembled.

Lovers of riding will miss the treat of their lifetime if they fail to see "A Knight of the Range" at the Palace Theatre on Monday ond Tuesday of next week, Matinee and night.

GIN PILLS
FOR THE KIDNEYS

Saved Hamilton Man's Life

573 St. James Street North
Hamilton, Ont.

Gentlemen:—

I was taken down with Inflamation of the Bladder. During the attacks, which occurred more and more frequently, the agony was unbearable, and I became so weak I could not walk across the floor. The doctors could do nothing to relieve or cure me.

My wife sent for a box of GIN PILLS to try and see if they would help me. From the first they did me good—the pain was relieved at once, and the attacks began to come at longer intervals. I continued taking the pills for six weeks, and then, to my surprise and delight, the stone I sent you came from me and my pain stopped. I have had no return of the trouble, and I have not lost a day's work on account of it since.

There is not the slightest doubt that GIN PILLS saved my life.

Yours gratefully,
JOHN HERMAN

If you have pains in the back, suspect stone in the bladder, suffer from suppression or incontinence of the urine, or your hands and wrists and ankles are swelling, your kidneys require attention and you need GIN PILLS.

If your dealer does not handle GIN PILLS, do not take substitutes, but order direct from us, enclosing the regular retail price—50c. for one box or $2.50 for six boxes. Money cheerfully refunded if GIN PILLS do not do all that we claim for them. Sample free if you mention this paper. 10 days' journey from the equator is covered with snow all the year. Mount Kiliminjaro is 19,700 feet high. It is visible for hundreds of miles around and owing to the frigid climate on its lofty side is shunned by all natives. At its base there are huge forests of tropical woods and the vegetation is so thick that elephants, lions and other wild animals have been able to hold their own against the advance guard of civilization.

Everywhere, except in a narrow strip along the coast, lions, elephants, hippopotamus, zebra, buffalo and rhinoceroses are plentiful, and those familiar with the country say the pickets and scouts of the armies that face each other in this campaign under the equator have more to fear from wild animals than from their foes. Since the railroad to Ujiji was built one of the items of expense has been the replacing of telegraph poles and wires which have been torn from their moorings by playful bands of elephants.

General Smuts is reported in last week's despatches as clearing the enemy's forests from the foothills of Kiliminjaro and making an attempt to seize the town of Moshi, which is at the end of another railroad that strikes the ocean at Tanga. His main objective, of course, is the capital, Dar-es-Salaam, whence more slaves were transported to foreign countries than from any other part on the continent. For hundreds of years Arab slave dealers made this port their shipping headquarters and they continue their trade until Kaiser Wilhem himself urged his government to appropriate the money to put an end to the traffic. Hundreds of Arab dhows, loaded hull down with half-starved negroes, left Dar-es-Salaam every month and carried their human freight to Egypt and all parts of Asia. The slave traders even built a good highway into the Ujiji region so that the slaves might be taken to the coast more expeditiously and cheaply. Stanley used in search of Livingstone, and in his books speaks of the caravans of manacled captives he passed on the way.

Since the Arab slave trader has been driven out of Africa the white man has put the black to other uses, and in the fight for German East Africa he is the backbone of every army. The Germans, British, Belgian and Portuguese all have impressed the negroes into their armies. Whole regiments of blacks are fighting other regiments of blacks. In previous wars on African soil all sides have studiously refrained from using native soldiers for fear of teaching the blacks their own strength, but now, when all the white soldiers are needed in Europe and Asia, the black brother is called on to settle the political differences of these foreigners who not so many years ago took the country from its original and native born owners.

Dar-es-Salaam might be described as consisting of one side of a street lined with whitewashed and severely Teutonic stucco houses, hiding from the view of one of the prettiest little bays in the world a typical native village of thatched huts. In front of the long row of whitewashed houses is a broad street running along the shore of the bay, and if any one who is not acclimated tries to walk down this avenue in the middle of the day he will be almost stricken down by the indescribable heat of the equatorial sun. Business is transacted only in the morning and late afternoon, the remainder of the day being spent indoors. Adjoining the town and farther inland are the few plantations which the German Colonial Office has been able to show as the fruits of a twenty-years' campaign to induce Germans to migrate to the colony. In the neighborhood of Mount Kiliminjaro some progress has been made in farming by Boers, who left South Africa after the British annexed the Transvaal and the Orange Free State, and it is quite likely these hardy fighters and their sons now are again in arms against their hereditary foe. The interior of the colony is rich, in rubber, wax, gum, salt, coal and iron, but there has been little progress in development because immigration thither has been too slow. Germans, officials at Dar-es-Salaam explained it to me, are a sociable race. When they move they want to go to a place where they can eat and drink and talk with other Germans. They do not like to go to a new country where their nearest neighbor is twenty miles away.

The Heligoland "Swap."

As the Kaiser sees his last colony slipping away he must find a bit of consolation in the fact that if it had not been for his interest in East Africa he would not own Heligoland, that little island in the North Sea which John Bull swapped with him one day when the latter's important officials were asleep. At that time the Kaiser had a phantom interest in East Africa, but by judiciously repeating to Great Britain his desire to obtain the "worthless" island off the entrance of the new Kiel Canal and his eagerness to define "spheres of influence" in Africa he finally induced Lord Salisbury to give Heligoland in exchange for the Kaiser's august permission to the British to place a protectorate over the island of Zanzibar. In addition to Heligoland, and so that he might have full measure, Lord Salisbury gave to the Kaiser a foothold in East Africa, and from that foothold grew the present German East Africa. No wonder that the name Heligoland is not mentioned above a whisper in Great Britain

How Germany obtained its East African colony is a story as interesting as a romance, although hundreds of tragedies are woven into its history. And the greatest tragedy of them all concerns Dr. Karl Peters, the "father of German East Africa," who, after adding an empire to his native country, was convicted of unspeakable cruelties to natives.

Peters was a distinguished explorer and scientist who, besides having travelled all over the world, was a friend of the Kaiser and Bismarck. In the days when Great Britain was busy avenging Gordon in Egypt it entered Peters' mind that then was the time for Germany to strike out for colonies. He suggested first to Bismarck that he acquire the Comoro Islands and then Southwest Madagascar. When Bismarck said to him, "That is in the French sphere of influence: I must not meddle" Peters replied that inasmuch as France had not fought to recover Metz and Strassburg they would not likely do so for the Comoros and Sakalavaland.

To this Bismarck repled. "Do you manage European politics or do I?"

Peters "The Treaty Maker."

The colony idea clung to Peters and in 1884 he founded the Society for German Colonization and established its headquarters at Zanzibar, which was alive with plotiefs, adventurers, diplomatic agents, slave traders and soldiers of fortune. In those days it was easy to go aboard a dhow, sail to the mainland and make a "treaty" with a negro chief who was in need of rifles or whiskey. The Sultan of Zanzibar was suzerain of the coast in those days, but that did not prevent Peters from making a "treaty" with Mangungo, Sultan of Masovero in Usagana, who readily declared that he was "in no way dependent on the Sultan of Zanzibar and not even known of his existence.' This "treaty" was obtained so easily and inexpensively that Peters became the busiest treaty maker the world ever had seen and in a few weeks had obtained right to 60,000 square miles. Armed with these documents, the indefatigable Peters returned to Berlin and won to his side both the Kaiser and Bismarck. In February, 1885, the Kaiser formally accepted suzerainty of this territory und proclaimed of this territory and proproclaimed royal protection over this vast strip of interland.

Going a step further, Peters formed the German East Africa Company for exploitation purposes. This awakened the British, and especially Sir Harry H. Johnstone who had been quite a treaty maker himself, and so the British East Africa Company was formed to compete with the Germans. In the following year both companies overran the country, making "treaties' with every chief they could find and hoisting flags at every cross trail. Some of the chiefs signed every treaty that was brought to them. Some of and soon the Foreign Offices in Berlin and soon the Foreign Offices in Berlin and London resounded with the echoes of the gfihts that this rivalry in the quest for treaties aroused. Late in 1885 Lord Salisbury took charge of the Foreign Office and he named the present Lord Kitchener on a joint commission of British Germans and French to define the Sultan of Zanzibar's dominions. There were long negotiations, and the exentual result was that Germany obtained a protectorate over the present German East Africa. Great Britain established a protectorate over Zanzibar, and when the new Sultan did not like the way things were going the British war ships shelled his city and forced him to like it.

Slave Trades' Rebellion.

Soon after Germany gained complete possession of the colony the Arab slave traders stirred up a native rebellion, which continued for a year and a half and practically devastated the colony. Peters assisting in putting down the insurrection and was promoted to Imperial Commissioner. He so misconducted himsel fin office that he was sent home in chains and tried on charbes of hanging natives, of cutting off their arms and other cruelties. His trial aroused interest all over the world because it was believed his friends, the Kaiser, would save him, but he was convicted and dismissed from the service. Two of the witnesses against Peters were old associates, and on the stand they declared he had formed an amazing conspiracy in the United States to incite the German population to assert their nationality against the English element. Another of his projects was to head an armed German social democracy which should assert itself in Germany.

There remained many points of differences between the Germans and the British over their various African possessions, and in 1890 the Kaiser started to make peace with England. Germany withdrew all objection to the British protectorate over Zanzibar and in exchange Lord Salisbury gave to her Heligoland and the right to navigate the rgeat African lakes. The "spheres of influence" everywhere else on the Continent were settled between them to the satisfaction of both sides. Later, Britain crowel over her victory in gaining Zanzibar. Germany did not crow, but her African colony blocked Great Britain from the north and south route for her Cape to Cairo railroad and she had obtained "the worthless, crumbling island of Heligoland, which she needed as a guard house for the Kiel Canal, which is to be of as much value to British commerce as it is to German commerce."

Diaz is In Mexico For New Revolt

WASHINGTON, March 31.—General Felix Diaz, nephew of the former President of Mexico, has landed in Mexico at the head of an expedition which is planning to start immediately a revolution against the Carranza de facto Government. The expedition went ashore on the Gulf coast of Mexico, near the boundary lines between the States of Tabasco and Campeche, according to private information that reached inner circles in Washington today. The party is said to be small, but composed of well trained men with sufficient arms and ammunition.

A telegram received here today indicated that important developments might be expected from the States in Southern Mexico bordering on the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, which the Diaz forces expect soon to control.

Information has reached Washington that adherents to the Diaz cause have crossed from Guatemala into the Mexican state of Chiapas despite of efforts by the Guatemalan Government to prevent it. General Diaz and his followers have asurances that they will have the support of military forces of Oaxaca, which borders the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, and is his native State.

The State of Oaxaca has not recognized the de facto Government and has been awaiting the restoration of order in Mexico before giving its support to any Government. It has virtually been in secession, and while it has not made war on any of the neighboring Mexican States, it has maintained its own independent Government, policed its own territory and supported its own military forces.

American officials believed last January that the program of the Diaz revolution had been nipped in the bud by the plans of the U. S. Government, the Mexican Embassy, and the Guatemalan Government to prevent any filibustering expedition going from the United States or Guatemala in support of the new revolution. Secretary Lansing then was cognizant of the plans of the new revolt, and so was the Mexican Embassy. At that time various phases of the matter were made known to the Department of Justice, whose special agents were instructed to gather facts and details, so that this Government might be in a position to prevent any armed expedition of Felicistas leaving this country.

The plans for the Diaz revolution were declared on Jan. 20 to have been frustrated, but they were carried forward very carefully without interference, and nearly a month ago a report was published that General Diaz and followers had landed in Mexico. Investigation made through agents of the State Department showed that the information was premature. It was not until today that definite and positive news was received that the actual landing of the Diaz expedition had been made the latter part of last week near the Campeche-Tabasco boundary line.

The Diaz movement has the strongest possible backing for a revolutionary movement.

Needs No Lightning Rod.

A building 9,000 feet above sea level should be protected by lightning rods, one thinks, but the astronomical observatory at Mount Etna has not and does not need such protection. The observatory is near the summit of the volcano, and the stream of vapor constantly rising from the crater acts as a natural conductor, draining the electricity out of the clouds, so that lightning is seldom seen there.

REPLENISH YOUR BLOOD IN THE SPRING

Just now you are feeling "out of sorts"—not your usual self. Quite exhausted at times and cannot devote real energy to your work. Sleep does not rest you and you wake up feeling "all tired out." Perhaps rheumatism is flying through your muscles and joints, or may be your skin is disfigured by rashes, boils or pimples. Headaches, twinges of neuralgia, fits of nervousness, irritability of temper and a disordered stomach often increase your discomfort in the spring.

The cause—winter has left its mark on you. These troubles are signs that your blood is poor and watery, that your nerves are exhausted. You must renew and enrich your blood at once and restore tone to your tired nerves, or there may be a complete breakdown. The most powerful remedy for these spring ailments in men, women and children is Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, because these Pills cleanse bad blood and strengthen weak nerves.

Now, rich, red blood—your greatest need in spring—is plentifully created by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and with this new, pure blood in your veins you quickly regain health and increase your strength. Then your skin becomes clear, your eyes bright, your nerves strong, and you feel better, eat better, sleep better, and are able to do your work.

Begin your spring tonic treatment to-day for the blood and nerves with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills—the Pills that strengthen.

These Pills are sold by most dealers, but do not be persuaded to take "something just the same." If you can't get the genuine Pills from your dealers they will be sent you by mail postpaid, at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 by writing The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

SYNOPSIS OF CANADIAN NORTH-WEST LAND REGULATIONS.

The sole head of a family, or any male over 18 years old, may homestead a quarter section of available Dominion land in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta. Applicant must appear in person at the Dominion Lands Agency or Sub-Agency for the District. Entry by proxy may be made at any Dominion Lands Agency (but not Sub-Agency) on certain conditions.

Duties—Six months residence upon and cultivation of the land in each of three years. A homesteader may live within nine miles of his homestead on a farm of at least 80 acres, on certain conditions. A habitable house is required except where residence is performed in the vicinity.

In certain districts a homesteader in good standing may pre-empt a quarter-section alongside his homestead. Price, $3.00 per acre.

Duties—Six months residence in each of three years after earning homestead patent; also 50 acres extra cultivation. Pre-emption patent may be obtained as soon as homestead patent, on certain conditions.

A settler who has exhausted his homestead right may take a purchased homestead in certain districts. Price $3.00 per acre. Duties—Must reside six months in each of three years, cultivate 50 acres and erect a house worth $300.

The area of cultivation is subject to reduction in case of rough, scrubby or stony land. Live stock may be substituted for cultivation under certain conditions.

SYNOPSIS OF COAL MINING REGULATIONS.

Coal mining rights of the Dominion, in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Yukon Territory, the North-West Territories and in a portion of the Province of British Columbia, may be leased for a term of twenty-one years at an annual rental of $1 an acre. Not more than 2,560 acres will be leased to one applicant.

Applications for a lease must be made by the applicant in person to the Agent or Sub-Agent of the district in which the rights applied for are situated.

In surveyed territory the land must be described by sections, or legal sub-divisions of sections, and in unsurveyed territory the tract applied for shall be staked by the applicant himself.

Each application must be accompanied by a fee of $5 which will be refunded if the rights applied for are not available, but not otherwise. A royalty shall be paid on the merchantable output of the mine at the rate of five cents per ton.

The person operating the mine shall furnish the Agent with sworn returns accounting for the full quantity of merchantable coal mined and pay the royalty thereon. If the coal mining rights are not being operated, such returns should be furnished at least once a year.

The lease will include the coal mining rights only, but the lessee may be permitted to purchase whatever available surface rights may be considered necessary for the working of the mine at the rate of $10.00 an acre.

For full information application should be made to the Secretary of the Department of the Interior, Ottawa, or to any Agent or Sub-Agent of Dominion Lands.

W. W. CORY,
Deputy Minister of the Interior.

N.B.—Unauthorized publication of this advertisement will not be paid for.—30690.

Bank Manager Smith Gave Testimony

Man Who Advanced Funds to Brunner Brought Back—Sheppard's Little Jest

REGINA, March 31.—J. J. McCarthy, formerly bookkeeper in the Metropolitan Hotel, was the first witness yesterday morning before the royal commission. He said he remembered seeing E. L. H. Smith, manager of the Bank of Ottawa, give Frank Brunner a roll of bills one day in December, 1913, in the rotunda of the hotel. A few minutes later he saw Brunner take Ens to Brunner's office.

John Suffron, a Battleford hotelman, said Cawthorpe owed him money in 1913. Witness recalled a conversation with Cawthorpe in January or February, 1914, when Cawthorpe paid him back the money, $100. Cawthorpe said: "You hotelmen are pretty easy, Jack; here's some of your own money back."

B. A. Rosen, Moose Jaw, formerly in the wholesale liquor business, told of a conversation with Hon. J. A. Sheppard just after the session of 1913.

"There had been rumors around and we talked about rumors. I said jokingly that some members had got money, some one thousand and some five hundred dollars. I said to Sheppard, 'I hope you were not one of the cheap ones,' and he said 'No.'"

Witness considered the whole matter a joke. Judge Brown expressed the same conviction.

It was announced that O. A. Mahoney of the provincial police was expected to return today with E. L. H. Smith, the bank manager, for whose arrest a warrant was recently issued.

The commission agreed that Smith's evidence would be material at this stage.

MacDonald, defence counsel, pointed out that no evidence had been adduced to connect the names of four members named in the charges. He asked if Bigelow still expected to connect their names with the charges.

Mr. Justice Elwood remarked that Mr. Bigelow might have information on hearsay evidence which could not be connected up until the evidence of Smith and Peterson was taken.

Offer Bills To Halt Rise In Gasoline

WASHINGTON, March 31.—Two bills proposing drastic methods to check the upward trend of the price of gasoline were introduced in the House today by Representative William Schley Howard, a Georgia Democrat, and Representative Halvor Steenerson, a Minnesota Republican. Mr. Howard's bills provides for an embargo on the exportation of petroleum products, and Mr. Steenerson would clothe the Federal Trade Commission with full authority to regulate the price of gasoline and petroleum products entering into interstate commerce.

Forty-cent gasoline by June 1 was predicted by Representative Howard, who asserted that the price now being exacted by the refiners "has not only reached the limit of endurance but amounts to a national scandal."

The Howard bill was introduced after the Georgia member had consulted with Secretary Redfield. In this connection it was learned that the Government, as well as private consumers, faces the prospect of paying 40 cents a gallon for gasoline within a few months. Representative Howard says he was informed by the Secretary of Commerce that the latter had been attempting to renew a contract between, the Department of Commerce and the refiners, and negotiations had been halted by a demand for a contract at 40 cents.

Representative Steenerson says Government investigators report that the price of gasoline is due to artificial and not economic causes. There is only one way to reach the situation, he says; the competitive system has failed to bring about reasonable prices. It is incumbent that Congress should act, Mr. Steenerson believes, under the commerce clause of the Constitution.

In a statement accompanying his bill Mr. Howard virtually claims that the forthcoming report of the Federal Trade Commission on the gasoline question will show that exportations do not justify the claim that domestic prices must of necessity be high. The report, he says, will indicate that the on-hand supply of gasoline is greater than it has ever been.

The Howard bill provides for an embargo on exportation of petroleum and its products, but authorizes the President to raise the embargo "when in his judgment the price charged for such product or products to the consumer in the United States is fair, reasonable and just."

Representative Steenerson, discussing his bill, said:

"Although the Constitution gives Congress the power to regulate the whole subject of commerce we are accustomed to think that the Interstate Commerce act, which relates solely to transportation, and the Anti-Trust act, which concerns monopolies, constitute a complete exercise of the power of Congress in the premises, but such is not the case.

"Government investigators report that the high price of gasoline is due to artificial rather than economic causes, and yet the Department of Justice says it can find no sufficient evidence to warrant prosecution under the anti-trust laws. This, therefore, is an instance where the competitive system has failed to secure to the people reasonable prices of one of the prime necessities of life.

"This proposal is no more drastic than the regulation of the prices of bread, by municipalities and the like. What we now do is to depend on the suppression of monopolistic combinations and the securing of competition to secure reasonable prices, but where these fail, as they have in this instance, then, it seems to be, we should try the direct regulation method. Our experience in the regulation of transportation points that way, and I believe we should try it."

Of course, you can buy cheaper teas, but is undoubtedly the most economical and what appears to be 'cheap' in price will prove to be extravagant in use. The fresh young leaves of "Salada" will yield you generous value for your money. B115

HUGHES' CUP FOR SOLDIER LACROSSE

National Game Was General Sir Sam's Favorite Sport

TORONTO, March 31.—The soldier lacrosse teams in the Second Division Athletic Association will play for the Hughes Cup, if the plans of Captain Tom Flanagan, Secretary of the association, are not changed. Shortly after the association was formed General Sam Hughes donated a cup for competition, but did not state what particular sport should be played to win it.

General Hughes (then plain Sam) played the national pastime as a member of the old Torontos. Lacrosse was not organized then, but it was just beginning to rise to public favor. The Canadian Lacrosse Association was organized in 1886, but it was five or six years before that when Sam played the game. The teams were independent organizations. Toronto, Cornwall and Montreal were the centres of the game, and many "battles" took place between the teams of these places. The field of the locals was on Jarvis street, around the vicinity where Wellesley street intersects.

Lacrosse was Sam's athletic hobby, so it is only befitting that the cup which he has donated should be given for competition among the players of the national pastime who are wearing the King's uniform.

A South American Hobo.

Santiago, capital of Chile, is the home of the roto Chileno, or broken Chilean, most picturesque and unique of hoboes. The name is a byword in South America, and as far as that continent is concerned he is a unique type. We find rich people everywhere and poor people everywhere, but in no other South American country but Chile do we find this good natured, serviceable, deceitful, ragged, drunken, criminal species of tramp. He earns a livelihood by begging, doing odd jobs and thieving. The last is his mainstay. In his hands stealing has become a fine art. The Chileans have a saying that he will steal your socks without touching your boots. A long, jointed wire with a hook at the end is his favorite tool. If a window on the street is left unguarded he will with this simple contrivance successfully remove from the interior everything but the heavy furniture.

The Expanding Stone.

In the rock of St. Gowan's chapel, in Wales, was a natural cavity upon which the name of the "expanding stone" was bestowed by popular tradition, because the strange fancy prevailed that this stone automatically adapted itself to the size of any one who entered the cavity.

The legend ran, as quoted by Mr. George F. Kunz in "The Magic of Jewels and Charms," that once, during the pagan persecutions, when a fugitive Christian, hotly pursued, reached this rock it opened up of its own accord so that he could slip into it and then closed about him so as to hide him effectually from his enemies. This expanding stone was believed to manifest its magic power by bringing to pass the wish expressed by any one who entered it, provided he did not change his wish while he turned around within it.

Henpecked Sparrows.

Female sparrows are especially tyrannical toward their partners, especially at nest building time, when they frequently attack their husbands fiercely on account of their laziness. At such times the female voice can always be detected, both louder and shriller than that of her mate, as she pecks and tousles him until he beats an ignominious retreat. Hen blackbirds and thrushes are often very overbearing and even spiteful toward their mates when their houses are in course of construction.

Winning Both Ways.

The Zulu young lady, when suitors are not forthcoming, takes the matter in hand herself. She leaves home, takes a discreet friend of her own sex and presents herself at the home of her favored swain. If he regards her with satisfaction his parents receive her as his future bride. Should he, however, be unwilling to accept her he makes her a handsome present instead.

The Unreality of Opera.

There are people who still complain of the unreality of opera who cannot subject themselves to its illusion. And indeed the illusion of opera breaks down if everything in it is not kept at the same distance from reality. In that world of musical expression we must never be suddenly lowered by any incongruous detail into the ordinary world of prose. Realism, the attempt to work upon the emotions by complete illusion of reality, is disastrous in opera. If the scene is a railway station we remember at once that people do not sing when they are catching trains.—London Times.

Little Else.

A London attorney named Else, rather diminutive in his stature and not particularly respectable in his character, once met Jekyll. "Sir," said he, "I hear you have called me a pettifogging scoundrel. Have you done so, sir?"

"Sir," said Jekyll, with a look of contempt, "I never said you were a pettifogger or a scoundrel, but I said you were 'little Else.'"—Westminster Gazette.

Incomplete Comprehension.

"Of course," replied Miss Cayenne. "If we all thoroughly understood everything it is considered necessary to talk about we should all be immoderately wise—and sometimes rather impolite."

Midchannel.

"Well, old chap, how have you been since you embarked on the sea of matrimony?"

HOW YOU MAY REDUCE YOUR WEIGHT

Overstoutness is a very unwelcome condition especially in the present day, when slender figures are so fashionable, and every reader of this paper has noticed the tendency of some people to put on an excessive amount of fat.

If you happen to be one of those whose weight is more than it should be, don't try to starve yourself, eat all you want, but go to your druggist and get oil of orilene in capsule form and take one with each meal.

Oil of orilene increases the oxygen-carrying power of the blood and dissolves the fatty tissue, in many cases at nearly the rate of one lb. per day. Be sure to get oil of orilene in capsule form. It is sold only in original sealed packages. Any good druggist has it, or a large size box will be sent on receipt of $1.00. Address D. J. Little Drug Co., Box 1240, Montreal, Can.

PHYSICAL CULTURE.

A Factor in Training the Brain in Boys and Girls.

Enthusiasm, self confidence, the spirit of adventure, alertness promptness, unselfishness, quick judgment, are all to be learned on the fields, games and sports, says the Medical Record, and every argument for such training of boys applies with equal force to girls. Mothers as well as fathers must be strong and healthy, and it is said that girls undergoing such training not only assume a more upright and dignified carriage, but begin unconsciously to avoid slang and other vulgarities.

The ancient Greeks knew these things, and in 2,500 years we have not equaled their results. If a boy does not seem to pick up music with ease, or sword play, he may attain remarkable dexterity with tools. At best he may learn to carve, at least he may attain creditable efficiency as a joiner or carpenter. Even juggling and conjuring train certain brain centers of value to the organism and are much better than no manual work at all. Personally, continues the editor, we think very highly of military drill, which trains every fiber of the body, down to the very finger tips and the tiny muscles of the eye, besides inculcating invaluable habits of prompt obedience, team work, respect for efficient authority, etc.

Harrison's Motion.

Delving in the archives of the Miami Union Literary society of Miami university the other day students found in an old minute book two entries regarding students who afterward became men of national fame. The record of the society's meeting of Nov. 1, 1851, says:

"Benjamin Harrison made the following motion: 'Mr. Chairman, I move that every man who spits tobacco juice on the floor of the society hall be fined 6 cents and that the money thus procured be saved for six months, at the end of which time a spitbox be purchased for this society.'" The minutes of the same society of Jan. 23, 1843, record the fact that Oliver P. Morton was fined 12½ cents for disorderly conduct.

A Staggering Estimate.

The late Mr. G. S. Carr, an accomplished mathematician, attempted to give a reply to the query, "How many different games at chess would it be possible to play?" His conclusions are that the total would be given by the one hundredth power of twenty, which is represented by the figure 12 followed by 129 ciphers. If each move be represented by a grain of sand the aforesaid number of grains, if packed around the sun, would fill up all space in every direction to a distance of over two sextillion miles!—London Telegraph.

Fielding at Lisbon.

Lisbon contains the grave of Henry Fielding. It was on Oct. 4, 1754 that Fielding died in the Portuguese capital, and it was in 1830 that his tomb was erected in the English cemetery. And Fielding didn't like Lisbon. "As the houses, convents, churches, etc., are large," he wrote, "and all built with white stone, they look beautiful at a distance, but as you approach nearer and find them to want every kind of ornament all idea of beauty vanishes at once." At that time a voyage to Lisbon was an undertaking not lightly to be contemplated. It took Fielding exactly fifty days of foul weather.—St. James' Gazette.

Cute Little Girl.

One day while Katherine's mother was ill a cup of beef tea was prepared for her, but Katherine fancied it and drank almost all of it. Her father was about to scold her when her mother said:

"Never mind; it does me just as much good to see her drink it."

Shortly after this a dose of castor oil was prepared for Katherine, and she poured it into her doll's mouth.

"Why, Katherine," said her astonished mother, "what did you do that for?"

"That's all right," Katherine replied, "it will do me just as much good if she drinks it."

Man and Woman.

When a man gets into trouble the first thing he thinks of is, "How shall I get out of this fix?" When a woman gets into trouble her first thought is, "How shall I best bear this misery?"—Winifred Black.

What She Has.

"Have you, indeed?" said she. "I have no theories."

"No theories on the proper way of training little ones?"

"No theories," was the reply. "Just three children."

Showing His Ignorance.

"What on earth are you doing?" demanded the indignant dining car conductor of the novice waiter, "serving soup on a straight track? Why don't you wait till we strike a curve? You don't know the first principles of railroading."

TWENTY-FIVE KILLED BY EXPLOSION IN ELEVATOR PLANT

225 VICTIMS ARE THE RESULTS OF TWO ZEPPELIN RAIDS

SHAUGHNESSY'S SON KILLED AT FRONT

C. P. R. President's Second Boy A Victim of Shrapnel—Many Condolences

MONTREAL, April 3.—(Special.)—The death of Captain the Hon. Alfred Thomas Shaughnessy, second son of Baron Shaughnessy, president of the C.P.R., killed in action "somewhere in France," has cast a gloom over his native city, where he had practically spent all his life. The details of the fatality have not been learned, beyond that he was struck by shrapnel, passed peacefully away, and died like a man.

Captain Shaughnessy was born in Montreal Oct. 18, 1887, and was, therefor, in his 29th year when he met his death. He was educated at Abingdon and Bishop's College Schools and McGill University. For a time he was in the traffic department of the C.P.R., and then joined the brokerage firm of Charles Meredith & Co. of this city. Ten years ago he had the unique experience of traveling around the world, always on the railway or steamships of the Canadian Pacific. In 1912 he married Miss Sarah Polk Bradford of Nashville, Tenn., a descendant of President Polk of the United States, and there are two children of the marriage.

Tragic Death

A Member of the 136th Battalion Fell Into Gutter and Was Drowned

PORT HOPE, April 1.—George Williams a member of the 136th battalion, was found dead in the gutter leading from Mill street to the river just near the Grand Trunk viaduct this morning.

From indications, Williams had been drinking, and it is expected that he wandered down there during the evening. The sidewalk ends just at this gutter and no doubt when he stepped from the walk he fell and rolled into the ditch. Unfortunately he fell forward. There was just enough water in the ditch to partly cover his face, and being helpless, he was unable to rise and met death by drowning.

A lady residing near there made the gruesome discovery about nine o'clock this morning. It is evident that he had been there for some time as his limbs were quite rigid.

The remains were taken to Walker's undertaking parlors and Dr. McKinley will conduct an inquest.

CONFERENCE DECIDES ON A COMPLETE BLOCKADE

British Order-in-Council is so Interpreted in Scandinavia—Opinion is That Blockade of Germany Will be Prosecuted With More Rigor

LONDON, April 3—Special—A great stir has been caused in Scandinavia by the report that Great Britain has decided to suspend Section 19 of the Declaration of London, according to the Copenhagen correspondent of the Exchange Telegraph Company. The general opinion is that the decision is attributable to a determination to prosecute the blockade of Germany with more rigor.

Some newspapers suggest the suspension is possibly a preliminary to a formal announcement of a complete blockade, which may have been decided upon at the Paris conference of the Entente allies.

Great Britain issued an order-in-Council March 30, which declared that "neither a vessel nor her cargo shall be immune from capture for a breach of blockade upon the sole ground that she at the moment is on her way to a non-blockaded port." This is in contravention to Section 19 of the Declaration of London which declared neither a vessel nor her cargo on the way to a non-blockaded port could be captured.

Loaded Chicken Barred From N. Y. Market

NEW YORK, April 3.—An order forbidding the sale of live poultry with food in the crop at the time of sale will be put in effect on Monday in New York city. The order was issued by John J. Dillon, state commissioner of foods and markets, who says that several million consumers suffered in health and in purse from the widespread practice of stuffing the crops of birds to increase the weights.

Conditions investigated and described by the Federal Department of Agriculture two years ago still persist, Mr. Dillon declared. New Yorkers are paying $7,000,000 a year for a mixture of sand, gravel, meal paste and water, and the chickens whose crops have been so stuffed become diseased as a result and will die in three or four days if not killed.

The commissioner said that where crops had been stuffed according to the approved process the weight of the stuffing amounted to about 20 per cent. of the weight of the bird. There are 7,000 carloads of live poultry shipped to New York from Western states annually, with approximately 5,000 fowls to a car, totalling about 140,000 pounds of poultry. This poultry retails for approximately 25 cents a pound, making the cost to the consumer $35,000,000.

SPASMODIC ATTACKS ON THE FRENCH FRONT

Canadian Press Special.

PARIS, April 3.—Afternoon statement: A Zeppelin last night threw down eight bombs on Dunkirk. Material damages were not great, but two persons were killed and four wounded. To the west of the River Meuse, the bombardment has continued at the villages of Haucourt and Esnes, but without any action of infantry. To the east of the Meuse, fighting which went on last night in the region of Douamont and Vaux was favorable to us. We gained ground in the wood of Vaillette. Our line resting on the right on the Pond of Vauv, then crosses the Caillette wood the northern corner of which is occupied by the enemy and rejoins our positions to the south and west in the village of Daoumont.

It has been confirmed that the attacks of the enemy yesterday were extended over the front of three kilometres. They came forward in successive waves followed by small columns. Activity of our artillery and fire of our infantry caused heavy losses in the ranks of the enemy. In the Woevre district the night passed quietly.

In Lorraine the fire of artillery caused flames to break out at Les Remabois, to west of Leintrey and in the region of Ancerviller south of Blamont.

A reconnaissance of the enemy, which was attempting to reach our positions, was repulsed by our fire at a point near Moyen.

YOUNG TENNANT GETS D. S. O.

LONDON, April 1.—During the debate in the House of Commons, Tuesday, on the British air service, which Noel Pemberton Billing attacked, and H. S. Tennant, Under Secretary of State for War, defended, reference was made by the latter to a feat performed by one of the British airmen.

Speaking of "death dives," Mr. Tennant said that he would give the House an instance. An officer made a descent on German sheds from a great height. He had travelled at a great rate and was able to cover eight miles without his engine going. He came down so low upon the sheds that the explosion which took place did much damage to his areoplane. When he tried to switch the engine on again it would not work, and he went right into the German lines. Just at the last moment the engine worked again.

Only a few of Mr. Tennant's friends knew that the airman referred to was his own son, whose name appeared in the list of officers gazetted this morning as recipients of the Distinguished Service Order.

CHEMISTS MAKE DIAMONDS

Swiss Experiments Result in Gems by a Synthetic Process.

GENEVA, April 1.—The synthetic diamond, long sought by science, appears at last to have been discovered says the Geneva Tribune today.

"Research work is being carried out at Geneva Laboratory of Inorganic Chemistry," adds the newspaper, "on the separation of carbonic anhydrides in the form of snow by chlorophylous pyridine in solution, and other nitrous organic liquids.

"In the residue, besides free carbons of varying weight, have been found very hard and very heavy white tetrahedral and octohedral crystals, which burned without leaving ashes and were insoluble in aqua regia, possessing, as far as the analyses made up to the present show, all the properties of the diamond."

Air Cleared In the Kyte Sensation

Members of Government Pleased With Course Adopted by Sir Robert Borden—New Facts Disclosed

OTTAWA, April 1.—The situation in reference to the charges made by Mr. George W. Kyte regarding the fuse contracts had cleared in a marked degree as a result of the Prime Minister's announcement yesterday of a Royal Commission of inquiry. The members of the Government side are pleased with the course adopted by Sir Robert Borden, and they are confident that it will meet with the approval of the great majority of the people of the Dominion.

The members of the Opposition, on the other hand, are not at all satisfied with the turn things have taken. They do not conceal their disappointment at the restriction of the inquiry to the specific charges that have been made and at the proposal to have the inquiry before a commission rather than before a Parliamentary committee. Another thing that will not cheer the Opposition is the fact, which was learned today, that the American companies having the fuse contracts have made deliveries to date according to contract. It is also learned that these contracts are guaranteed by the Trusts Indemnity Company of New York. The British Government could not have lost the money advanced as claimed by Mr. Kyte.

This money was doubtless placed with the Trust Company and it is apparent that the division of huge profits by Allison, Yoakum and Lignanti, though it may have been planned, has not actually been carried out as yet. There was a rumor here tonight that the agreement between Allison, Yoakum and Lignanti was not genuine, though it may have been believed to be so by the Liberals when read in the House by Mr. Kyte.

The genuineness or otherwise of the agreement will be established at the inquiry, before the Royal Commission.

CHICKEN HITS TRIGGER AND YOUTH IS KILLED

Eaton, Pa., High School Student Loses Life Hunting Rats.

EATON, Pa., April 1.—Calvin Harding, aged 17, a senior in the Pen Argyl high school, was shot and instantly killed when hunting rats in his father's chicken coop. The bullet passed through his head. A chicken pulled the trigger.

Rats had been infesting the coop and making away with his father's poultry. Calvin took his rifle and started hunting the rats. One of them ran across the floor of the chicken coop as he entered.

He picked up a prize chicken to protect it from the rat and was transferring it from one arm to the other. He still clasped his rifle under his arm with the barrel raised. The chicken kicked its legs in an effort to escape. One foot struck the trigger of the rifle and the cartridge exploded, its ball lodging in the boy's head.

PEOPLE ARE NOT TOLD OF GERMAN ARMY'S REVERSES

Reports Reichstag Are Confidential—State Success in Recruiting Are Assured For a Long Time to Come—True Conditions Withheld

BERLIN, April 3.—Special—The Minister of War has made a confidential report to the main committee of the Reichstag concerning the situation of the German army.

According to newspaper reports here the Minister said that success in recruiting is assured for a long time to come. He said it is not planned to extend the age limit beyond forty-five, but, on the contrary, soldiers who have passed this age during the war are to be withdrawn from the front. The Minister attributes the feasibility of this procedure largely to the excellent care which has been given to the wounded.

Figures submitted by the War Minister regarding German losses, go to prove that they have not been heavy as compared with those of the enemy.

The Minister reported that Germany is well provided with raw material for a long time. He added that it will be necessary to husband these stores carefully, but that there was no reason for fear, no matter how long the war continues.

VANCOUVER, B.C., April 1.—An Irish baronet serving in France, writing to relatives in Canada, gives a most remarkable instance of the pranks played by a 5.9 high explosive shell. A grave over which lay a huge slab fully six feet long and several inches thick was completely turned over. The rotten timbers of the coffin had been torn open by the force of the explosion, and the remains which it contained had been thrown into a sitting position back against the upturned stone, the head twisted back and resting against the stone slightly to one side on the right shoulder, the vertebrae of the neck having snapped in the upheaval.

SUBMARINES ACTIVE IN NORTH SEA

Measures Taken to Bar More Effectively Entrance to Channel—Allies on Alert

PARIS, April 3.—(Special.)—Owing to the fact that bad weather has damaged the entente allies' barriers, causing mines to drift and making the entrance to the channel easier, submarine activity in the North Sea has been more active during the last three weeks than for four months, according to a semi-official communication dealing with the marine situation. The communication says::

"During four months there was no torpedoing in the channel, but in the last three weeks enemy submarines have shown activity in this sea. This activity has succeeded owing to the fact that bad weather damaged the allies' barriers, caused mines to drift and made entrance to the channel easier. The enemy doubtless possesses a large number of submarines and can simultaneously attack in the North Sea and in the Mediterranean. Measures have been taken in concert with Great Britain to bar more effectively Pas de Calais and to multiply the trolls.

RECRUITING MEETING

The members of the 155th Battalion Orchestra left today for Picton, where they will this evening play for a recruiting meeting to be held in that town.

PRESENTATION OF COLORS.

While at present it is not definitely known when the beautiful colors will be presented to the 80th Battalion, the ceremony will take place within a few days. In conversation with a representative of the Intelligencer, Col. Ketcheson, the popular commanding officer of the 80th Battalion, stated it would take place within a few days, and the occasion would be graced by several military officers of distinction and others.

RAN AWAY FROM HOME

Mr. J. T. Yateman of Toronto, telephoned to the police of Belleville to be on the lookout for his son, William a lad 14 years of age, who had run away from home. The boy in question, it appears, is anxious to become a bugler in a battalion, and not being able to enlist in Toronto had gone eastward presumably for this purpose. From enquiries it was apparent that the boy was not in Belleville.

The examinations of the C.O.T.C. of Queen's University are in progress.

Lieut.-Col. Brown, G.S.O., left Saturday for points between Kingston and Picton for the purpose of inspecting provisional schools.

BELLEVILLE

Capt. Wilson, A.D.D.C., returned to the city from Kingston on Saturday.

Capt. R. E. Layfield, 80th Battalion, was in Kingston on Friday as was also Lieut. W. J. Boyd, 8th Brigade, A.C., of Ottawa.

Griffin's Opera House was filled to capacity last evening, when the 155th Band gave a sacred concert under the capable leadership of Bandmaster Hinchey. During the evening Bandsman Burke rendered solos which were very much appreciated by the audience and was forced to respond to oncores.

Lt.-Col. Adams, O. C. of the 155th Battalion, left for Picton to-day, where he will attend a recruiting meeting and also a banquet given by the citizens of Picton to Major Hepburne of the 224 Forestry Battalion.

Lieuts. Webb and Allen, and Sergts. Wills, Marvin, Bollidd, Morrison MacKenzie and Mitchell of the 155th Battalion, will leave shortly for Montreal, where they will attend a school of instruction in bayonet fighting and physical training.

Several changes have taken place in the 155th Battalion, the following officers being given different commands:

Lieut. Hambly has transferred from Belleville to Tweed; Capt. Wrightmeyer, from Tweed to Belleville; Capt. Bleecker to Marmora; Lieut. Davie to Madoc; Lieut. Wilson to Deseronto; Lieut. Raymond to Belleville; Lieut. Pattison to Marlbank; and Lieut. Turnbull to Picton.

The following is the strength of the county battalions of Eastern Ontario that are being formed. The local Bay of Quinte Battalion is in the lead with the 109th a close second.

Nerves Were So Upset Could Not Endure Noise

Neuralgic Headaches and Extreme Nervousness Caused Keenest Suffering—Lasting Cure by Use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food

Once the nervous system gets run down everything seems to tend to make it worse. You worry over your condition, are unable to get the required rest and sleep, noises excite and irritate you and the future is most discouraging.

The nervous system does not get the proper nourishment from the food you eat, so you must have something also to lift you out of the run-down condition. You may find that your experience coincides with the writer of this letter and be encouraged to put Dr. Chase's Nerve Food to the test.

You will make no mistake in employing this food cure, for, acting as it does hand in hand with Nature, it is bound to do you good.

Mrs. Jas. Jensen, Gwynne, Alta., writes: "About ten years ago I was troubled with severe attacks of neuralgia and nervousness, and was for several months so bad that I could not get a night's rest. I used several medicines recommended by the druggist. My doctor also prescribed, but nothing he gave me brought any relief. Instead I got worse and worse until I could scarcely do anything or bear the least bit of noise. My nerves were all upset.

"My husband read about Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and got me some. Although I had no faith in it, I began its use, and after a few doses began to sleep well and the neuralgia left me entirely. I used six more boxes and have never had any troubles from neuralgia or the nerves since.

"This is to certify that I know Mrs. Jensen and believe this statement to be true and correct. Fred Freeman, J.P."

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, 50 cents a box, 6 for $2.50, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

Memorial Service For Fallen Hero

At St. Thomas' Anglican Church last evening a memorial service was held for the late Corporal Leslie Evans, who recently died in France as the result of wounds received while on active service at the front. Deceased was a member of St. Thomas' Church, having been confirmed on Whitsunday, May 31st, 1914; and while here was a devout communicant of the church.

A large congregation was present at the service, which was conducted by the Rector, Rev. Canon Beamish. During the service appropriate hymns were sung and prayers for the dead were recited.

The Rector preached a sermon which was in every respect worthy of the occasion. His text was from the 23rd Psalm, 4th verse: "Yea though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death I will fear no evil, for thou are with me: thy rod and thy staff they comfort me."

In his opening remarks the speaker referred to the young shepherd king who was thinking over his task while watching his sheep, and also of God's merciful protection over him. He thought of death, which was and is overtaking all human souls. There is an overhanging cliff of sin and pain to which all human beings are subject. These two overshadow all human life. Some men there are who meet death without fear as they do not fully realize the judgment which will follow. They have not fully realized their personal responsibility. Others there are who meet death as a solace from pain and suffering and even ask and pray to be relieved from the pain they are suffering. We must, however, have a different view of life. We must realize that we have to appear before the judgment seat of God to answer for deeds done in the body. Death for the Christian means the summing up of life and the end of probation. It means a call to a higher sphere of existence, to be with God. The shepherds' crooks were used to direct the sheep, and figuratively is the road that leads to eternal life. The rod and staff symbolize much. The staff symbolizes the staff of life. Christ says he is the staff of life, and he that eateth of My flesh eateth meat indeed, and he that drinketh My blood drinketh life indeed. The rod and staff of God are what all need in the last hour. Two things we need essentially are the heavenly food and the drink by which we will not thirst by the way. These come from the hand of God. They are strength to the pilgrim on his last journey. The words of Christ to the penitent on the cross were prophetic, when He said "This day shalt thou be with me in paradise, that beautiful home of God and the redeemed. It is within the precincts of the spirit land. Then we shall be free from all earthly bondage. We shall be in God's eternal and everlasting glory and be face to face with Jesus and known even as we are known here. Tonight we commemorate the passing of one who was known as a modest youth, who was sweet and pure, one of nature's gentlemen. In this church he was confirmed by the Bishop and prepared for the final summons. He has sacrificed his life for his King and country. The Rector stated that one hundred and forty-two from the congregation had enlisted for active service, and three had lost their lives, namely, H. Ablard, Reservist Coburn and Corporal Evans. We commend their souls to God's keeping, assured of a joyful resurrection in paradise and life everlasting. During the service, Prof. Wheatley rendered suitable selections upon the organ.

Soldiers Attend Divine Service

The 80th Battalion Goes to St. Thomas And the 155th Boys March Over to Holloway Street Church

The 155th Overseas Battalion, C. E. F., yesterday morning under the command of Col. Adams, Commanding Officer, attended divine service at Holloway Street Methodist Church. There was a good turnout and the church was filled with soldiers and attendants of the church. The pastor Rev. J. N. Clarry, B. D., officiated and preached an appropriate discourse. His text was from 1st Juige 21st verse: "Keep yourselves in the love of God." The hymns were in keeping with the service and the selection by the fine band of the battalion, under the able leadership of Bandmaster Hinchey, were much appreciated, and rendered in a manner which showed careful preparation. During the service Mr. Pindott rendered a solo entitled "A Clean Heart," which was sung in a manner that was most pleasing.

80TH BATTALION AT ST. THOMAS'

The 80th Battalion, under the command of Col. W. G. Ketcheson, on Sunday morning attended divine service at St. Thomas Anglican church. The turnout was a most creditable one, all officers and men being out on parade. The fine band, under the able leadership of Lieut. Stares, played to and from the church. Rev. Canon Beamish, rector of St. Thomas' church, preached, and his discourse was in keeping with the occasion. Special music was rendered by the choir, and Prof. Wheatley, organist, gave instrumental selections of a high order.

LETTERS FROM OVERSEAS

FROM FRANK DAY

Dear Mother—I received your letter and was very glad to hear from you, as it cheers one up. Hope everyone is well at home, as this finds me all O. K. I had quite a surprise the other morning; I was trying to get a few hours' sleep by my gun when I heard the sentry call "Bon Day," and I thought there was something doing, so I jumped up and there stood Jack Clark, the butcher's son. I was so glad to see him; he is looking fine, but he has only been in action a couple of weeks. So father can tell Mr. Clark that I saw Jack, and was talking to him, also to tell George Williams that I saw Ed. Keating, and he was looking fine. I also saw Ted Clark from the station, and Frank Elvins, but I have not been around much to talk with them. Well, mother, I wish you would send me the papers as I would like to read the news. I hope to be home soon, as I think this war won't last another year, but I suppose things have changed since I left. Give my love to all. Write soon.

Your loving son,

FRANK.

AN APPREICATED GIFT

Sir Mackenzie Bowell is in receipt of a letter from Mr. Harry F. Alford, son of Mr. Walter Alford of this city, bearing date Alexandria, Egypt, Feb. 20th, 1916, accompanied by a "curio," secured by him at "a famous bazaar in Cairo, where," he says, "he had a chance to visit," and that "while there he took time to watch the natives do this kind of work"; adding, "Fortunately labour is cheap there, or such things would hardly be possible." The curio is a neat brass vase, about four inches in height, exquisitely hand-worked.

SOCIAL and PERSONAL

The many friends of Dorothea Stewart, Turnbull St., will be sorry to hear she is under a physician's care.

Mrs. (Rev.) A. M. Hubly, who has been quite ill, is slowly improving.

Mrs. Harold Prest is seriously ill in the Belleville General Hospital.

Miss M. S. Dunning of West Huntingdon, and former employee of The Intelligencer Office, who graduated from a nursing school in New York, is leaving shortly for Overseas as a Red Cross nurse.

Madoc Hotel Damaged by Fire

At a rather early hour on Sunday morning a fire broke out in the St. Lawrence Hotel, Madoc village, and before the flames were extinguished, considerable damage was sustained to the interior, by fire, water and smoke. The blaze originated in the rear part of the premises, but from what cause is unknown. Mrs. McGuire is the owner of the hostlery, and conducted the house which was up to date in every respect. The loss sustained, is fully covered by insurance.

MOTHER'S FAT BABY BOY

The fat baby lay flat on his pink back and blinked owlishly at his doting parents. He waved his arms and legs lazily and gazed at his father and mother with steady eyes that seemed to wonder what, after all, that part in this strange scheme of things might be.

Henry Porlett stood with his hand on his chin and his head cocked on one side. Behind his nose glasses his blue eyes twinkled with unconcealed pride. Adele Porlett bent forward, her tightly clasped hands down in front and her face alight with the joy and marvel of possession. The fat baby put his chubby fists against his eyes, then waved his arms generously, cooed and crowed, and then completed the performance with a smile. It included Henry and Adele and everything else in the room.

Adele leaned forward and patted the little hand. "Henry," she said, having appropriated the smile to herself, "I just know he thinks about things we suppose he doesn't understand."

Henry Porlett appreciated her point of view that is, he knew what she meant. But he had his own idea about the purpose and direction of that smile. A father has some rights. "Well," he admitted. "I guess he knows his own father, all right."

The fat baby was good. He had never been sick and he had never seen the moon or learned to cry for that and all his other simple wants were supplied even before he came to the place where he wanted them. He ate and went to sleep, with little crowings and chirrupings; he slept and woke, drowsily, with happy little sighs, and eyes that laughed even before his rose of a mouth spread into its slow smile. He was the best baby that ever happened.

"You'll notice, Adele," said Henry judicially, "that he's bald on the back of his head. That, I have learned from folks who are supposed to know, is a sure sign of a fine temperament in a child. I mean he's a baby with the right sort of disposition. And, my dear, you'll notice also that his father is bald on the back of his head. Two and two still make four, I presume. So you'll have to admit, if you don't go dead against evidence, that it is his father's disposition he his. Now won't you?"

Adele sniffed and tossed her pretty head with a familiar gesture. "I will—not!" she retorted. "I'll have to concede that he's bald on the back of his dear little noodlums, if that's what you want me to say, but that doesn't mean that his precious little disposition was inherited from anyone who hasn't any of his sort to spare. You are bald on the back of your head, I must say, but then you are bald on the front of your head, too, and he isn't at all. So that settles that. And, besides, you have admitted that he looks just like his mother. And if he has my features, why, of course, it's my disposition he has, too. That's what makes him such a precious little dear—isn't it, icky bicky, honey funny, baby bestest?"

She twiddled a finger at the fat baby and the fat baby regarded it impassively. Adele smiled victoriously.

Henry considered. "I never saw a woman yet who would reason with anything like common honesty. You believe what you want to believe, like all the rest of 'em. Gosh, Adele! If you were in business and somebody asked you to bid on the construction of a building he was just thinking about starting if things went as he planned, you'd order the material and hire the man and present your bill for the completed contract before he got through counting the pedestrians to see if it would pay to put the shack on that corner. You don't take anything for granted—oh, no! Nothing except in sight, and some things it wouldn't do to look at too closely.

"Now just stop and think about what you are saying. Reason a little. You say he has your features, then you want to claim everything else as well. Of course, he looks like you—I admit it, even if he has got my nose and eyes and a mouth like I used to have when I was a baby. But, gee whiz, Adele, doesn't he belong to us both? And if he belongs to both of us, I've got to be represented somewhere, haven't I? He can't be all you. I tell you it's my disposition he's got. No doubt of it at all."

The fat baby took no sides. He continued to smile sleepily and to wave his fat arms and legs. Then as they gazed fondly down at him his expression began to change to something they did not recognize. It was a new face and a new baby. The little mouth pursed and the little cheeks began to puff out. The little arms drew down and into the little pink sides. The fat little legs drew up and bent double. Then the dewy mouth opened square and there was a new sound in the room. "Yaa-aa-aaa!" it went. Henry jumped and looked behind him. It was startling and cataclysmic.

Adele reached him first. She was stunned, too, but her mother instinct worked automatically. She snatched him up from the cozy, white bed and held him in her arms. Henry clutched at him, also, wildly, and with an inchoate jumble of ideas, impressions and fears rioting in his mind. As the man pawed at him the fat baby slackened and the noise diminished just a little. Henry was already congratulating himself that he had brought this relief, when the little lungs began again with doubled intensity. He had only stopped for breath.

'Oh, Henry," wailed Mrs. Porlett, her eyes big and frenzied, "what in the world do you suppose can be the matter?"

Henry hazarded a guess conscious that it was a lame one. "Maybe it's a pin. Seems to me I've heard my mother say something——"

Adele cut him off shortly. "Oh," she snapped, finding time even in her misery to be scornful. "I looked for pins first thing. It's something serious."

Henry strove for composure in this crisis. He tried to get a grip on himself. "It must hurt like thunder," he stated, recalling the only really severe pain he had ever known. "Maybe it is the—the toothache."

"Toothache?" blurted Adele. "Why, Henry Porlett! How could he have the toothache when he hasn't a tooth in his head?"

"Well," countered Henry shamefacedly defensive, "the teeth are there under the skin, aren't they. And if he had toothache in a tooth under the skin it would be worse than having it in one out in the open, I guess. It must be something that hurts, and if it isn't that, what is it?"

Adele did her best to be calm. She tried to remember what she had read and the admonitions received from her own mother and from all her female relatives and friends. But she went hunting the symptoms, anyway. She felt the soles of his feets; she felt the small of his back; she looked at his eyes. The fat baby had every symptom she had ever heard of. The fat baby continued to cry until the electric fixtures rattled and Henry raised his voice above the din.

"Adele," he said with grave earnestness, "do you suppose it could be one of these new diseases the little ones have nowadays? Something the doctors haven't provided for?"

Adele began to cry in turn. The thought was terrible, but it had to be considered.

"I'll run for the doctor," said Henry, and she knew instantly why and how much she loved him.

Adele spent a horrible five minutes while her husband went a few doors down the street in search of Dr. Garyson. He came back breathless and worried. "Doctor's gone way over east on a case," he informed her; "I will have to run to the corner for that new fellow."

Adele stared at him dumbly, with an any port in a storm expression, and wondering why he didn't go. And as she stared Henry's eyes grew round with wonder. He leaned forward, then approached slowly. Suddenly fear gripped at Adele's heart. She was conscious that the fat baby had stopped crying. Her own eyes widened as she looked down at him.

The fat baby ceased making any sort of sound. He didn't even snuffle. He relaxed. He lay back in his mother's arms luxuriously. He stretched his little arms and legs. He drew in his cheeks. The purse went out of his rosebud mouth. He opened his eyes and gazed up at them impassively. Then he smiled, a slow comfortable, all embracing smile. There couldn't be anything the matter with a baby that could smile like that.

Reverently Henry and Adele examined their offspring. The fat baby took it all in good part. He let them examine and his smile assured them they wouldn't find anything.

The two stood without words. Gradually it dawned on them. The fat baby went blissfully to sleep in his mother's arms even as they wondered. He had been crying just because he wanted to cry.

Henry snorted. "Humph!" he whispered back. "That's as much like you as—as—as he is."

Father O'Connor Laid at Rest

Impressive Services at Brockville And at St. Michaels Church, Belleville—Obsequies Largely Attended

St. Francis Xavier Church, Brockville, has been the scene of many solemn and impressive services in the years since it was opened for regular services, but none in the past have been more deeply impressive than those of Saturday morning, when the last holy offices were conducted over the body of Rev. Father John J. O'Connor, who died on Thursday at St. Vincent de Paul Hospital. Deep sorrow was depicted on the countenances of the large congregation, who assembled to pay a tribute of love and respect to his memory.

Friday afternoon the body of the deceased was removed from St. Vincent de Paul Hospital to the church. It was accompanied by a delegation from Brockville Council K. of C., and visiting priests. At the church door, Very Rev. Dean Murray received the body and preceded by a cross bearer and sanctuary boys, accompanied it to a place in the centre aisle, after which the Solemn Libera was chanted.

Saturday morning at 9.30 o'clock Solemn Pontifical Requiem Mass was conducted by the Most Reverend Michael J. Spratt, Archbishop of Kingston, assisted by Very Rev. Dean Murray, of Brockville, as High Priest, and Rev. Fathers Rheaume, of Smith's Falls, as Deacon, and Rev. Father Corrigan, Brockville, as subdeacon, respectively. Rev. Father A. J. Hanley, rector of St. Mary's Cathedral, Kingston, was master of ceremonies. Other clergymen in the sanctuary were Rt. Rev. Monsignor Masterson, Prescott, and Rev. Fathers McDonnell, Portsmouth; Hartigan, Deseronto; O'Rourke, Westport; Crowley, Chesterville; Hanley, Toledo; Nicholson, Prescott; Meagher, Marysville; O'Reilly, of Frankford; O'Riordan, Madoc; Traynor, Brown's Mills; McCarthy, Reid; Cullinane, Ballycanoe; O'Hanlon, Tedford; Kingslay, Kingston Mills; V. Meagher, Keystone; Foley, Apple Hill; Staley, Railton; O'Farrell, Gananoque; Grey, Carleton Place.

The Rev. Father Staley, parish priest of Railton, a former assistant at St. Francis Xavier church, preached the sermon. He took for his text St. Luke, Chap. 12: "At what hour the Son of Man cometh ye know not."

At the conclusion of the service the remains were taken to the G. T. R. station and conveyed to Belleville, where despite the inclement weather many gathered at the station and escorted the body to St. Michael's church where the Libera was sung. Archbishop Spratt of Kingston, was present also the following Priests of the Diocese: Revs. Father Hanley, Kingston; Father Killeen Belleville; Father Connally, Trenton; Father Carson, Picton; Father McFadden, Wooler, and Father O'Riordan, Madoc.

At the conclusion of the service those present were permitted to take a farewell look at the remains of the beloved Priest. The body was then conveyed to St. James cemetery for interment.

"FAGGED-OUT" WOMEN

Will Find a Helpful Suggestion In This Letter

Overworked, run down "fagged out" women who feel as though they could hardly drag about, should profit by Mrs. Carter's experience. She says:—"I am the mother of six children and i got so weak and run-down that I couldn't eat anything and it seemed almost impossible for me to get around and do my work. I tried different doctors' remedies without benefit. I saw Vinol advertised and decided to try it, and received so much benefit from the first bottle that I continued to take it, and it has built up my strength and made me strong and well. I consider Vinol the best medicine I have ever taken, and advise all weak, run-down women to try it." Mrs. Bessie Carter, State Road, N. C.

If all the tired overworked, run-down women in Belleville could only realize how our delicious cod liver and iron tonic, Vinol, supplies the vital elements necessary to build up blood and strength, we wouldn't be able to supply the demand. J. S. McKeown Druggist, Belleville, Ont.

THIS IS THE 609TH DAY THE BRITISH EMPIRE HAS BEEN AT WAR WITH GERMANY.

ANOTHER LIBERAL FALSEHOOD NAILED.

One after another Liberal allegations of dishonesty against the manufacturing interests of the country are being proven as unreliable as a gambler's oath.

One of the things which did valiant duty among the Pugsley-Carvell scrap-book Shell Committee charges was an alleged interview with Mr. D. A. Thomas, Lloyd George's envoy, which appeared in the Montreal Herald, the organ of Hon. George P. Graham. Mr. Thomas was reported as having said:

> "There is more politics in Canada at the present time than there is in England, and it is a bad thing for Canada. Big political interests here at the present juncture, who are intimately connected with manufacturing concerns, are out after orders. Orders come first, the making of munitions being a secondary consideration. It is a bad thing for Canada."

Exploited by Grit Press.

This alleged interview was held up by the Liberal press all over the Dominion to prove that the Borden Government was composed of a lot of political adventurers and our manufacturers a pack of thieves. The "Liberal Monthly," published in Ottawa under the direction and supervision of Sir Wilfrid Laurier himself, used its blackest type to give the story all possible publicity, and even some Conservative newspapers fell into a trap and used it.

Sir Robert's Letter.

Meanwhile Sir Robert Borden wrote an indignant letter to Mr. Thomas, which was, in part, as follows:

> "Your observations are construed as a declaration that the Government, regardless of its duty has permitted political considerations to interfere with the production of munitions in Canada. If you were of that opinion it would seem to me the proper course to bring the subject in the first place to the attention of the Government. I repudiate in the strongest manner any suggestion that we were in the slightest degree influenced by any such consideration."

Mr. Thomas' Reply.

To this letter of the Prime Minister's, Mr. Thomas replied:

> "I reply to your letter drawing my attention to a statement alleged to have been made by me to a representative of the Montreal Herald, I have only to say that I never made such a statement as that attributed to me, and that had I thought that the Dominion Government had permitted political considerations to interfere with the productions of munitions in Canada, I should certainly, as you suggest, have brought the matter in the first instance to the attention of the head of the Government."

It is not necessary to comment upon this exposure of Liberal falsehood and trickery to bolster up allegations of graft against fellow-Canadians in the interests of a bankrupt political party. To the honest independent reformer the thought must suggest itself: Is the standard of public and private morality in this country going to be raised higher by such a pack of journalistic slanders?

PUGSLEY'S "GLORY."

Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his chief colleagues not only disregarded the warning and advice of the British Admiralty in 1912, but treated contemptuously the secret and solemn warning of the British Government of the peril confronting the Empire from German aggression, ambition and militarism.

Everybody is familiar with the famous Admiralty memorandum placed before Parliament in December, 1912. In this memorandum the British naval experts advised Canada to add to the British fleet "the strongest ships of war which science can build or money supply" to meet the impending German peril. Sir Wilfrid and his followers, especially Hon. William Pugsley, treated this advice and warning with contempt; and successfully blocked the emergency naval measures so that Canada today is unrepresented in the Grand Fleet, the bulwark between the Empire and German domination.

Mr. Pugsley's Shame.

To Mr. Pugsley's obstruction Sir Robert Borden gave chief credit for Canada's shame today, while discussing the subject in the House of Commons a few days ago, Sir Robert declared:

> "I think this may at least be said for the hon. gentleman (Mr. Pugsley) that he is entitled, perhaps more than any other of them, to the glory, or whatever it may be, of preventing three Canadian dreadnoughts from flying the British flag today and assisting in the defence of the Empire. If he is still disposed to take pride—as apparently he does take pride in this, for he said that the measure proposed by this Government was one of the most iniquitous measures ever presented in this House, thus glorying in the defeat of the attempt to enable Canada to participate in the naval defence of the Empire—he is entitled to all that glory if it is any satisfaction to him."

Hon. William Pugsley will always be remembered as the chief obstructionist in the party of little Canadians who deprived Canada of the honor of being represented in the Grand Fleet in its fight for the preservation of the unity of the Empire and the liberty of the world.

Montreal Gazette: The Ontario Temperance Act promises to give an impetus to the native wine industry which has already assumed respectable proportions. Manufacturers of the beverage are to be allowed to sell it in five-gallon casks and in quantities of twelve dozen bottles. The wine must be made from grapes grown in the province. The sale of native wine has been growing in recent years and today this wine is handled by dealers all over Canada. The port, which is a fair substitute for the imported article, comes both sweet and dry, and varies in price from 25 to 50 cents per imperial quart, according to quality. That its sale is permitted on such a generous scale by the Ontario Government may be due to a desire not to antagonize the growers.

Hamilton Herald: We all know what an investigation by a parliamentary committee would mean. It would mean a prolonged squabble by the party politicians composing it, one group spreading wide the drag-net and trying to place upon record a lot of irrelevant as well as relevant evidence that would serve as campaign material, and the other group bent upon preventing the enemy from making political capital. An investigation conducted decently and in order by a bench of judges is far preferable to the parliamentary variety. The difference between the two is that the prime object of the one is to get at the truth, whereas in the case of the other the truth is a secondary consideration.

Toronto News: For a generation Governments in Canada protected the rascals within the party. Through the example of Sir James Whitney and Sir Robert Borden a new fashion has come in. In the Dominion and in Ontario there is now no more toleration for Conservative rascals than there is for Liberal rascals. Unlike the Laurier Government, which blocked and denied inquiry, the Borden Government grants and assists investigation into charges of political wrongdoing.

Hamilton Herald: Carranza has refused the use of the Mexican railways for the transportation of supplies to the American force that is pursuing Villa. As a result, hundreds of auto trucks have been sent to Mexico—and, of course, there are fewer auto trucks for exportation to the allied armies. It looks very much like German intrigue.

Current Comment

Mr. Carvell reminds Mr. Blain about certain horse purchases in Peel county and Mr. Blain retorts with something about a hay purchase in New Brunswick. Statesmanship to the nth degree!

"What looked like an embarrassing situation to the government has been turned into a position of extreme dissatisfaction to the opposition," remarks the Ottawa Journal regarding the Kyte charges.

Many of the newspapers which call upon President Wilson to take "drastic action" against Germany to uphold the dignity of the United States, also warn him that he must on no account allow the country to go to war.

The impulse which has driven the citizens of Berlin, Ontario, to change the name of the city is very commendable. But if anything is calculated to make them stick to the old name it is the lists of suggested new ones which appear from time to time in different newspapers.—Montreal Star. For instance, "Editheavelle."

At Ottawa members on the Conservative side of the House are wondering if Sir Sam Hughes will quit meekly. What an absurd idea. Sir Sam will not quit meekly or in any other way. He will have to be pried loose.—Toronto Globe. And yet, is it not creditable to possess a record for stamina?

The women have the vote in Manitoba, and now Mrs. Robert Bullock has been elected vice-president of the Kildonan and St. Andrew's Conservative Association. If she is of strong personality she may aspire to boss the president. The day seems approaching when a woman will be elected to a Canadian Legislature.

What will Sir Sam do? Will he attempt a great flanking move, or will he entrench? Or will he do a little scouting by aeroplane? In any event we are sure of no interference from the censor in describing the coming struggle.—Ottawa Free Press. It will be a quick act with offensive retreating. Well prepared as was the attack, the results will be nil.

THEY REFUSE TO EAT

At periods in most childrens' lives they fail to relish their meals and refuse to eat even the delicacies prepared to tempt their appetites. They lack ambition, and growth seems impeded, which causes anxiety and worry.

To compel them to eat is a grave mistake, because nutrition is impaired. Healthful exercise in fresh air and sunshine is important, but equally important is a spoonful of Scott's Emulsion three times a day to feed the tissues and furnish food-energy to improve their blood, aid nutrition and sharpen their appetites.

The highly concentrated medicinal-food in Scott's Emulsion supplies the very elements children need to build up their strength. They relish Scott's—it is free from drugs. Avoid substitutes.

ANCIENT MEALTIMES.

When They Rose at 5, Dined at 9 and Supped at 5.

To rise at five and dine at nine,
To sup at five and bed at nine,
Will make a man live to ninety-nine.

But one suspected that the change is in the names of the meals rather than in the hours. Our ancestors would have termed our luncheon dinner and our dinner supper. It is a curious fact that in some of the Oxford colleges, where the founders made allowances for the meals of the students, a much larger sum is alloted for supper than for dinner, implying that the former was the more substantial meal. Taken at 5 or 6 o'clock, it was really "early dinner."

"With us the nobility, gentry and students do ordinarily go to dinner at 11 before noon and to supper at 5 or between 5 and 6 at afternoon. The merchants dine and sup seldom before 12 at noon and 6 at night, especially in London. The husbandmen dine also at high noon, as they call it, and sup at 7 or 8, but out of the term in our universities the scholars dine at 10. As for the poorest sort, they generally dine and sup when they may, so that to talk of their order of repast it were but a needless matter."—London Chronicle.

Melbourne, a City That Planned.

There is and always has been a great amount of public spirit in Melbourne, due, in large part, to the Scotch element that has predominated from the beginning. "The first citizens, led by Scots, as a rule, set to work with magnificent faith in the future. A city was planned worthy of being the capital of 10,000,000 people, and the public buildings were designed on the same generous scale. The soil on the site was deep and rich. That suggested tree planting, and most of the streets are today relieved by handsome foliage, and the parks which ring the city round have trees worthy of the forests of Europe. The avenue of elms in Fitzroy gardens certainly represents that tree at its best.—Bishop E. E. Hoss

The Blind Man's Lantern.

A blind man in Khoota (a Caucasian village) came back from the river one night bringing a pitcher of water and carrying in his hand a lighted lantern. Some one meeting him said: "You're blind. It's all the same to you whether it's day or night. Of what use to you is a lantern?" "I don't carry the lantern in order to see the road," replied the blind man, "but to keep some fool like you from running against me and breaking my pitcher."

Not a Gay One.

"Do you believe all men are gay deceivers?" asked Mrs. Twobble.

"Yes?"

"In his efforts to deceive me he even goes so far as to shed tears."

Antagonists.

How many who have deemed themselves antagonists will smile hereafter when they look back upon the world's wide harvest field and perceive that in unconscious brotherhood they were helping to bind the selfsame sheaf!—Hawthorne.

No Escape.

Bella—I understand your sister married a struggling young man? Gus—Yes; he struggled hard, but he couldn't get away from her.

The Saving Grace of Humor

There are just a few elemental things in life that we all want. One of them is surely success—that is, success in some form—not necessarily financial, perhaps, but in the realm that seems important to us. And so we find it interesting to recall what William J. Locke wrote about success in one of his novels.

"As for success, that elusive will-o'-the-wisp," says Locke, "the man who has never enjoyed the humor of failure has never deserved success."

One is tempted to ask at once, "Why the paradox?" But the person who has failed now and then, and let it teach him rather than discourage him, knows full well the reason. It is the humor of failure that Locke asks us to look for, not the failure itself.

Know," then, just what this man means by a sense of humor. We have it from his own pen. It is worth reading.

"Your sense of humor—that delicate perceivance of proportion, that subrident check on impulse, that touch of the divine fellowship with human frailty, is a thing of mellow growth. It is a solvent, not an exciatant. It does not stimulate to sublime effort, but it can cool raging passion. It can take the salt from tears, the bitterness from judgment, the keenness from despair."

It is, then, the ability to meet failure and to profit by it, to have it touch us and leave us with a sense of the relative value of things, which makes us truly capable of carrying success when it comes to us.

Without doubt one of the most beneficial experiences in life is that of meeting failure and knowing with a fine sense of humor that you are not quite as infallible as you thought you were. It need not make one unnecessarily meek, but it is a mighty wholesome and helpful thing to be touched with a little gentle humility once in awhile.

Some of the biggest things that people have ever done in their lives have been done on the rebound from just such a half humorous recognition of their own limitations. For it is not well to go on indefinitely without a sense of them. But the thing to do, of course, is to see in such failure humor of a passing thing, not the finality of defeat.

Her Sunday Go to Meeting Very Best Coat.

Here is another variation of popular glazed leather. White, yoked, belted and trimmed with Hudson seal, this coat makes an attractive spring garment for eight-year-olds. A white coney cap gives just the right finish, and please observe how correct sister's white kid gloves are.

SO MODISH.

Gauntlet Gloves Worn.

Gauntlet gloves a la d'Artagnan are the latest craze in Paris. These gloves are made of white chamois leather and also in all the tan shades. They are worn with the most unexpected costumes, fragile frocks composed of chiffon, as well as practical suits in heavy whipcord. The gauntlets of these gloves are deep and supple. They are drawn up over the coat or dress sleeves, and they give a sporting, attractive appearance to the whole toilet.

Many of these gauntlet gloves are made of cotton tissue, which imitates suede very cleverly. Gloves made of this tissue are very inexpensive, and they are ideal because they are so easily cleaned. Doeskin is also much used in this connection. With rose pink sweater coats, gauntlet gloves in pale gray doeskin are charming. When long gloves are worn the favorite color of the moment is pale stone gray.

That war tax on scent means we shall all have to pay through the nose.

A Run On Icings

Chocolate Icing.—Add two squares of chocolate melted over hot water just after the sirup has been beaten into the egg.

Maple Icing.—Use one and one-half cupfuls of brown sugar and one-half cupful of granulated sugar in the boiled icing.

Coffee Icing.—Use one cupful of weak coffee in place of the water in the boiled icing.

Marshmallow Icing.—Add twenty marshmallows cut in fourths to the sirup, being sure that it is hot enough to melt them. If not soften the marshmallows first over hot water, or soften in the oven.

Nut or Fruit Icing.—Add one cupful of chopped nut meats just before spreading on the cake. Add cocoanut or chopped raisins. Add a raisin or fig paste made by cooking one cupful of chopped raisins or figs with one tablespoonful of water and one tablespoonful of sugar.

Butter Icing.—Butter, one-third cupful; confectioners' sugar, one cupful; cream, two tablespoonfuls; flavoring, one teaspoonful. Cream the butter, gradually add the sifted sugar, and beat until the mixture looks like whipped cream. Add the flavoring and cream until of the right consistency to spread. Do not put on a hot cake.

Mocha Icing.—Add two tablespoonfuls of cocoa to the sugar and two tablespoonfuls of coffee in place of the cream.

Chocolate Marshmallow Icing.—Slice marshmallows in thin slices and lay on the cake while hot. When cool spread over the chocolate icing.

Fudge Icing.—Sugar, two cupfuls; milk, one cupful; butter, one teaspoonful; chocolate, two squares; salt, one-half teaspoonful; vanilla, one teaspoonful. Combine the sugar, cut chocolate and milk and let stand over a very low flame until the sugar is dissolved and the milk melted. Then boil hard without stirring until a soft ball is formed when dropped in cold water. Remove, add the butter and let stand until cold. Beat until creamy and spread on the cake. This will burn very easily.

A QUAINT DESIGN.

With This Model In Mind Matrons Can Make One Like It.

Simple as it looks, this frock nevertheless conforms to fashion's dictates in that it masses the skirt fulness on the hips, has full sleeves and panniers. The material used is a silvery gray crepe de chine, with elaborate embroidery done in heavy silk of the same tone, but different weights, massed on the panniers and sleeves. The princess front is belted loosely with a heavy silk cord and tassel. This frock is exceedingly picturesque on a certain type of woman.

A HOUSE GOWN.

Boiled Salt Mackerel In Cream Sauce.

Wash the fish in several waters, remove the head and part of the tail, scrape off the thin black skin and soak in cold water over night. In the morning tie the fish in a cloth, cover with fresh cold water, bring slowly to a boil, cook one-half hour, then take off the cloth, remove the backbone and lay the fish on a heated dish. Scald a cupful of milk, thicken with a teaspoonful of cornstarch wet in a little cold milk, add a teaspoonful of minced parsley, two tablespoonfuls of butter and pepper and salt to taste. Remove from the fire, add a well beaten egg, return to the fire, cook a minute longer, then pour the sauce over the fish and serve. Garnish with sprigs of parsley and slices of hard boiled eggs.

A DASHING MODEL.

A LA MODE.

Brimless, high, springy, this new turban combines much of style. The piquant wing is of hello cerise velvet, a deeper shade than the five floppy roses at its base. The straw itself is a novelty in one of the new tan shades. Please observe the net veil with its attractive border in triangles and dots.

THE ART OF DRESS.

How Clothes Influence Character and Even Destinies.

The influence of clothes on human destinies is enormous. We say "it is not the cowl that makes the monk," but that is another erroneous proverb. Its stamp always remains and molds the individual, body and soul, in a certain way. The prestige of the costume has a great deal to do with the sacerdotal or military vocation. Who will ever know how much Mlle. de Montijo's dresses had to do with making an empress of her? She ordered her dresses for Compiegne from Worth, whose fame was just beginning, and, according to her own expression, they were her "battle horse." On them she won her victory, and we all know the effects of that victory.

"The death of a delightful man of my acquaintance," declares Pierre de Coulevain in one of her sprightly books, "was caused by a hat being worn on one side. One of his mother's friends wanted him to marry a pretty girl she knew, who was very charming and well off. He happened to be staying at her house near Vernon when this young protegee was going through on her way to Rouen.

"Anxious for her guest to see the girl, she persuaded him to go to the station with her. He went, saw the girl; but, alas, she had her hat on one side, in the most comical way possible. It was no doubt one of those odious hats, so badly balanced that no pin in the world could keep them straight. The harm was done, though. He never dared tell his mother's friend what his objection to the girl had been. He owned it to me later on, adding, 'I should always have seen her like that.'"

Imagination plays tricks on Frenchmen as it does on no other men. This one married another girl who wore her hats straight, but whose head was rather turned.

The marriage ended in a divorce and the divorce in sudden death, such sudden death that it was generally believed to have been suicide.

Delicious Salad.

Mix with the following dressing: One teaspoonful mustard, two teaspoonfuls sugar, one-quarter teaspoonful salt, a teaspoonful flour, blended into a tablespoonful soft butter; a well beaten egg, one-half cupful milk, one-quarter cupful vinegar. Cook in double boiler until thick. Have all ingredients ice cold and mixed some time before serving so as to be well blended. Serve on lettuce leaves garnished with hard boiled eggs. This makes a hearty supper for five persons.

Woman's World

A Prima Donna Gives Her Home For War Sufferers.

MME. MELBA.

After sixteen months of personal service to war victims Mme. Melba recently gave the use of her apartment in Paris for an army hospital.

The gift of the hospital came as a surprise, topping the singer's systematic economies in dress, food and personal comforts.

"See my tight skirt," she said, pointing to a much worn serge. "I have bought neither gowns, hats nor blouses since the war began. I can't afford new garments until every suffering man, woman and child has food and shelter.

"This war was declared without consulting women, but our jobs as women seem to be well laid out for us, and where there is a will there's a way. I have lost all my men folk in this war, either by shot or insanity."

Mme. Melba said her apartment at 91 Avenue Henri Martin has large, airy rooms, with solarium and roof garden, and will accommodate 200 beds. Equipment for each bed will cost $25.

Mme. Melba has pledged even the maintenance of the majority of these, in memory of Arnold Quilter of the Grenadier guards, who fell at the Dardanelles.

TRAYS FOR EVERY USE.

One of the most interesting details of the modern china closet is the tray. Trays for muffins, for sweets and services for tea and after dinner coffee are as popular as the breakfast tray. Whether or not the present status of breakfast as a movable feast is the result of the beetle existence mankind leads today it is hard to say.

If this meal is to be served in bed a delightful individual tray would be one, with folding legs. Such a tray naturally contains only service for one. A variety of designs, however, may be found in this style of tray with individual sets of china suited to every purse.

For the member of the family who wishes only a cup of black coffee or tea with a dash of cream perhaps a small tray containing three pieces of silver to which is added the cup is a convenient service.

The after dinner coffee set has its own tray and is easily carried into the drawing room or library. At the country house, where all sorts of impromptu meals are served in the garden, the pantry must be supplied with trays of every description—black or white painted ones to accord with old furniture and quaint cottons, glass covered chintz ones set in wicker; even perfectly plain white enameled trays may be used. The housekeeper's soul will delight in the variety and beauty of this practical adjunct to housekeeping, and her only difficulty will be in selecting.

Eggplant Straws.

Cut into one-fourth inch slices an unpeeled eggplant. Salt each slice and press them for an hour or so under a heavy weight. Now cut the slices into equal lengths, about a fourth of an inch wide, discarding the skin; dry in a cloth and roll them in a mixture of equal parts of fine cornmeal and flour; season with pepper, salt and a slight dash of nutmeg. Drop a few at a time into salad oil (hot) and fry them until they are a delicate brown. Dry on a soft paper as you would French fried potatoes and serve at once while they are crisp and tender.

Attractive Blotters.

Guest room blotters are covered with stiff chintz covers, the blotter leaves inside being held in place by narrow satin ribbons. The chintz is the same as that used in the hangings of the room. On the outside cover of the blotter a picture, clipped from a magazine or Sunday paper, is pasted, and then the entire cover is shellacked. These blotters are very handy for guest room use and may be renewed cheaply and often enough to keep them fresh and inviting in appearance.

USEFUL FAVORITES.

The Daisy.

Did you ever hear the story of the daisy which looks like a star? Once upon a time there was a little star up in the sky that belonged in no group of stars at all, but just had to wander around by itself all the time. Every evening it watched the evening star tow the new moon over the edge of the dark and envied it. It heard much talk among the other stars, some of them of less magnitude envying those of greater magnitude, and the little lone star thought to itself that no one saw it even to envy it. Down on the earth it looked so much easier to get into a group and have companions, so one day when the earth was swinging over from dark to daylight the little star did not try to preserve its equilibrium, but just dropped down, down, until it came to earth. It fell so far that it fell deep down into the earth, but some star seeds at its heart shot up from the earth, changed through the influence of the soil, and there stood a beautiful star flower, and never is it lacking for companions of its own kind.

Conventionality.

Woman is much less conventional than man. She does all the conventional things and attacks other women savagely for breaches of convention. But you will generally find that where a man may with impunity break a convention he will not do so, while if secrecy is guaranteed a woman will please herself first and repent only if necessary. It follows that a man is conventional because he respects convention, women conventional because she is afraid of what may happen if she does not obey convention. The typical Englishman of the world wrecked upon a desert island would get into his evening clothes as long as his shirts lasted; his wife alone in such circumstances would wear a low cut dress to take her meal of cocoanuts, even if her frock did up in front.—Atlantic.

There is a satisfaction and a very certain educational value as well in being able to record one's impressions by rough notes and sketches and to show others one's ideas in the same manner. Every boy, even though he possesses no talent whatever for drawing, may learn to roughly sketch an outline if he properly develops a simple sense of proportions. The noting of interesting facts, read over often more than once later, fixes them in the memory and is good practice in expression if one tries constantly to set forth these notes clearly and correctly. Try it.

Frost Cracking Trees.

The traveler in the winter woods during extreme cold and especially after nightfall is sometimes startled by sounds like pistol shots and as loud, near and far away. It is not difficult to locate these sounds as coming from the larger trees around, the frost so shrinking the wood as to cause the fibers to separate in the weakest places, and they do this in such a hurry as to resemble an explosion.

Poverty of Language.

Travelers tell us that there is a very wild tribe near the upper Amazon that possesses a language singularly devoid of needed words. For instance, they have nothing to express a number greater than three, but this word is one of nine syllables.

SHINING TRESSES.

Although it may not be possible or indeed desirable for every woman to have tresses of Godiva-like abundance, it is within the power of almost everybody to have a fine head of hair or to possess what looks like one, whether her locks are long or short, thick or thin, dry or oily, dark, fair or just mid-brown. The whole secret lies in the state of the health and the daily care of the hair.

If the hair is in an impoverished condition, abnormally greasy or abnormally dry, showing a tendency to become brittle and break off short; if it loses its color and bulk, then it is no good in beginning any hair treatment without first attending to the general state of the health.

One should take sufficient exercise and rest and correct any indiscretions in diet. Where an anaemic condition exists a tonic often does wonders, so will a course of cod liver oil, while raw eggs and unboiled milk are articles of diet which directly beautify the hair.

As to the general care of the hair, it should be washed as often as it requires cleaning. Once a week is not too often for a very oily type of hair, and about once in three weeks is a good average for ordinary hair.

If it is washed at home liquid soap is the best thing to use. The hair should be thoroughly wetted with warm water, then a handful of the liquid rubbed in. If it does not lather at once use a little more water and a little more liquid till the whole head is in a perfect foam; rinse out the lather very thoroughly, take the worst of the moisture off with hot towels and dry by brushing and fanning. Do not on any account seek to dry it by the fire.

The daily care of the hair is most important. It should be well brushed every night, the scalp being first of all treated with a rather hard brush to stimulate the circulation and the long hair afterward brushed with long, sweeping strokes, two brushes with rather long, stiff bristles being used. This is to keep the hair clean and give it a natural gloss.

Some Tasty Sandwiches.

The Midnight.—One cream cheese, twelve olives stoned and chopped fine, moisten and spread between thin buttered slices of white or entire wheat bread.

The Boston.—Mash cold baked beans, add two tablespoonfuls horseradish to each cupful of beans, spread between thin slices of brown bread, buttered. Tomato catsup or prepared mustard may be used to season beans instead of horseradish if preferred, seasoning to suit the taste.

The Walnut.—Butter the bread, spread over each slice a layer of cheese, then a layer of chopped nuts. Sprinkle with salt and cover with another slice. Serve with olives.

The Onion.—Soak finely cut Bermuda onions in ice water for an hour, the water being previously sweetened and salted. Drain and mix with mayonnaise and place between slices of white bread.

Smurche.—Two packages of cheese, one hard boiled egg, a ten cent bottle stuffed olives, salt and cayenne to taste, one tablespoonful melted butter and a little chopped onion. Chop and mix all together and spread between slices of bread.

Homemade Tea Wagon.

A discarded gocart may be used for the purpose. Remove the seat part from the gocart, leaving the wheels and handle. Then saw the legs off from an old wicker table about five inches from the ground. Fasten the table to the gocart and paint all a dark green. Place on top of the table first a piece of cretonne, then a piece of glass over that. Hold both in place with four strips of molding nailed on firmly and painted the same dark green.

About Wedded Bliss

The old fashioned diagnosis of rheumatism is coming into disfavor. Too many distinctly different types of ailments have been classed under rheumatism.

The old fashioned verdict of incompatibility is bound, too, in time, to come into disfavor. Too much of marital infelicity that is caused by selfishness or unrest or unpreparedness for marriage or unpropitious circumstances in marriage is laid at the door of incompatibility.

Of course incompatibility exists. It is present in every marriage in a greater or lesser degree. It is an inevitable concomitant of every marriage. But unless it is pronounced, as in some cases where a man and woman marry in haste, without any community of thought and interest, it does not cause serious trouble.

The average couple are attracted before marriage not only by the call of sex, but by many attributes of mental and spiritual affinity. After marriage it is apparent that they are not as completely in unison as they were before marriage. Traits that were hidden by the glamour of courtship come into the foreground. For husband and wife are each the product of dissimilar environment and heredity, and, being so, many of their ideas, tastes and habits are bound to clash. Then, too, as they are man and woman, their inclinations and emotional natures are fundamentally different. Thus it is to be expected that at times the unlike natures of man and wife should cause discord.

The couple who are idlers or one of whom is an idler find incompatibility a bugbear in their lives. With real work—with something serious to think about and something worth while to do—they would find little time to worry about their discrepancies in opinion and taste.

To those who are unready for marriage, who are bad tempered, eccentric and shiftless in habit and management—to this type of people incompatibility is a scapegoat for all their misdemeanors.

A RENAISSANCE.

The Battenberg Braids Are Said to Be Coming In Again.

For needleworkers is this attractive design in renaissance braid and buttons. Please notice how cleverly Mexican drawn work doilies have been used as centerpieces to build the pattern around. Do Your Spring Sewing Now

The long winter days are ideal for sewing, and the woman who is wise will begin her spring sewing now.

When March comes we all get the spring fever. The call to come out of doors and listen to the birds sing is pretty hard to resist, but if necessary sewing is left undone until those balmy days come the chances are one will resist this springtime call and remain in the house at the very time of the year when one should be out in the air as much as possible.

Many women protest at sewing. They declare it does not pay—that in these days of ready made garments sewing is a waste of time—but sewing does pay. If it is a lost art, as many women seem to think it is, why is it taught in most schools nowadays, as well as in the fashionable finishing schools? True, in the latter places sewing is more in the line of embroidery, but many a woman in times of stress has turned to good account the sewing and embroidery lessons taught her in the schoolroom.

Every woman should learn to sew and should take a certain pride in that accomplishment. Where children are in the household, being able to sew for them is a godsend to the average mother, and the woman with any taste at all can design little frocks far smarter than any ready made garment. Furthermore, two of these dresses can be obtained for the price of one ready made.

Table and bed linen can also be obtained now at "white sales" at most attractive figures, and if one can hemstitch many charming pieces can be had at a nominal cost.

Sewing is just as necessary today as in the days when women spun their linen thread and afterward wove it into cloth, and where money is "an object" the work of "making ends meet" comes less hard on the woman who can sew.

Another excuse women offer for not sewing is that they "haven't time." A large number of women never have any time simply because they do not manage their work systematically. They are always on the verge of nervous prostration, trying to do several things at one time, an impossible feat for a human being.

Arrange your work systematically. Have a time for sewing as well as for cooking and sweeping. Then you will have much more time for everything. In fact, you will have time left over, which, if you are wise, you will devote to rest and recreation.

JUST LIKE AN ESKIMO.

An Unusual Evening Wrap of Charming Lines.

Just as Eskimo women swathe themselves in hooded wraps of silvery sealskins, so the debutante may fashion her opera cloak on the same lines. Patches of fox fur are used to further beautify the cloak, and the hood, so cozy in the carriage, on arrival may be thrown back in a graceful drape.

FROM THE NORTHLANDS.

Sandwiches For Whist Parties.

Celery Sandwiches.—Mix a cupful of finely chopped celery, a quarter cupful of chopped nuts and a quarter cupful of chopped olives (if liked), moisten with salad dressing and spread on thin slices of brown bread.

Rolled Bread.—Cut fresh bread while still warm in as thin slices as possible. Spread evenly with butter which has been creamed. Roll slices separately and tie each with baby ribbon.

Bread and Butter Folds.—Remove end slice from bread, cut off as thin slices as possible. Remove crusts, butter each slice and put thin slice of entire wheat bread or brown bread between two white ones. Cut in squares, oblongs, circles or triangles. Shapes of hearts, spades, clubs and diamonds might be used for sandwiches.

FOR EARLY SPRING.

So Modish Is This Costume of Such Quaint Lines.

A NEW MODEL.

Cut of tan silk poplin with a full skirt and a flared basquelike coat, this suit is springy as possible. All shades of tan are now good style. A picturesque effect is gained by the smocking around the frilled collar and the narrow velvet ribbon banding. The cuffs and buttons are also novel.

FOUR DUMPLINGS.

A Run on These Appetizers So Seasonable For Winter.

Chicken Dumplings.—Mix and sift three level teaspoonfuls of baking powder and one-half a level teaspoonful of salt with two cupfuls of flour. Add sufficient milk to make a soft dough. Roll lightly on a floured board and cut into small biscuits. Place on a greased pieplate in a steamer and cook twenty minutes. Do not move or uncover the steamer while the dumplings are cooking. Do not start to make the dumplings until the chicken is tender. It can wait, but not the dumplings.

Suet Dumplings.—One cupful of finely chopped beef suet, one generous pint of flour, one teaspoonful of black pepper, one and one-half teaspoonfuls of salt. Mix well together and add enough cold water to make as thick as biscuit dough. Roll out and cut with a biscuit cutter or knife, drop into boiling water and cook for one-half hour, drain and serve hot. Serve with roast meat, or the dumplings may be slightly browned in the oven after boiling. They are also good added to a meat stew.

Liver Dumplings.—Chop one-half pound of liver and one-fourth pound of bacon, uncooked, as fine as possible. Beat two eggs lightly and add one-fourth cupful of butter to them. Then add the meat, the seasonings of chopped parsley, white herbs, salt and pepper and one and one-half cupfuls of breadcrumbs, adding more breadcrumbs if necessary. This will depend on the softness or dryness of the crumbs and on the size of the eggs. The mixture should be just stiff enough to make a paste which can be formed into balls. Divide into portions, roll smoothly in the hands and poach in boiling water, before boiling, cooking about fifteen minutes.

Potato Dumplings.—Grate four cold boiled potatoes and add to them one cupful of stale breadcrumbs soaked in a little milk, just enough to moisten, also one cupful of breadcrumbs crisped in a little butter or drippings. Add two eggs, two tablespoonfuls of flour and seasoning of salt, pepper and nutmeg. Form into medium sized balls and steam or boil twenty minutes. Turn on to a serving dish and sprinkle with the remaining fried breadcrumbs.

No Pins or Sewing.

Here's a good way to save both time and labor and yet enable one to always have a clean ironing sheet at home. Take a length of factory cotton a little longer than the ironing board. If the board is of ordinary width one length will make two sheets or a change. Hem each side with small pieces of tape, attach small brass rings (such as are used for stocking bags or fancy work) about nine inches apart and lace across the underside of board with tape or corset strings. This does away with the old way of tacking or pinning the sheet on board and makes it easy to remove.

Kidney Stew.

Cut kidney in small pieces, rejecting tubes and hard portion; blanch, then cook until tender, adding one onion finely minced. When tender thicken gravy slightly with two tablespoonfuls of butter rolled in two tablespoonfuls of flour; add one tablespoonful of finely minced parsley. Place a border of mashed potatoes around the dish and fill the kidney in the center.

OUR UNRULY SUN.

It Seems to Be Trying to Dilate to the Bursting Point.

The French astronomer Puiseux has been busying himself with the constitution of the sun. He finds that, instead of condensing and shrinking little by little, as was formerly supposed, the sun is constantly dilating more and more and reaching the point of bursting. And if the sun blew up there would be no more need for us poor mortals to worry about worldly affairs.

Big suns every whit as important in their own constellations as ours are frequently victims of an explosion. There was one in the constellation of Perseus early in 1901, and since then two at least have occurred in other celestial groups.

Observation has shown long since that the great orb which is our all in all is a most uncertain character. Sun spots, fire blasts and such like phenomena are by no means the most of which he is capable. The manner in which the sun throws off atomic energy and transforms the heavy into light elements, hydrogen, helium, nebulium, archonium and what not spells nothing good for this world, and a mere nothing might lead to a disaster any day.

In short, it is bound to come at some time or other. Unfortunately science can give us no idea as to when. Centuries and even hundreds of centuries are as but a moment in the history of the universe, says Professor Flammarion, and for all we know the sun may have millions of years more life before it. No man can tell, though, and, just as the strongest of us are struck down in a moment, so the all powerful planet may give out at any time, and when it does it will make but short work of all of us here below.

Protecting Open Face Watch.

Some years ago I read in a sportsman's journal a good way to protect an open face watch from wet. This also helps to keep it from falling out of a pocket. "To keep one's watch dry, even though you go overboard, take a piece of pure rubber dental dam eight inches square, put the watch in the center and bring the rubber together at the stem, tying the puckered up rubber with a bit of string. When you wish to see the face simply stretch the rubber over the front and you can see the hands clearly through it."

Artillery of Antiquity.

"Engines to shoot great stones" were no doubt the progenitors of the "catapult" of Greek and Roman times and the devices in use today for hurling "hand grenades." In a recent visit to the island of Rhodes I was amazed at the great number of stone balls in the edge of the sea, among the ancient towers and battlements and indeed all over the island. They ranged in size from five inches in diameter to more than two feet, and the largest must have weighed at least a ton. The smashing power of such a mass must have been very great. Such stones are found about the walls of Constantinople and other cities of the orient

Bullock Skin Boats.

There are few more primitive methods of transportation than those in use today by natives of northern India who make their homes in the vicinity of the swift flowing Sutlej. The boats of these aborigines are nothing more or less than bullock skins inflated by the breath of the natives themselves. Two natives may be seen hard at work filling the skins with air. Having inflated them to their satisfaction, they will leap overboard and paddle themselves across the river, great skill and strength being necessary to sustain their equilibrium during the passage. But even should the boats overturn they are easily righted, and the natives are without exception expert swimmers.

Argentina's Natural Bridge.

In Argentina there is a natural bridge that is one of the most wonderful in the world. It spans the Rio Mendoza and is known as the Inca bridge. But it is the work of nature, says the Scientific American, and not, as was popularly supposed, of the Incas. The road on which it occurs was probably a colonial highway made by the Peruvian Incas, who took advantage of the phenomenon by leading their road over this natural viaduct.

Origin of Spoons.

Two natural objects seem to have furnished the model for the spoon to primitive man—the river or sea shell and the leaf of plants. In southern China shell spoons are still used, that are closely reproduced in the familiar porcelain spoon of that country, while metal spoons are found in India on which are reproduced even the veins of the leaves from which they were copied.

Faint Hope.

Doctor (cuttingly)—Are you to be allowed to drink beer, eh? Didn't I tell you just a week ago to let the stuff alone? Patient—I know, doctor; but, you see, I thought there might have been some progress in medical science since.

Mean Fellow.

"Your wife has a muscular affection which renders her speechless. I can cure her, but it will take time."

"Take all the time you want, doc," responded the mean man.

Too Fond of Them.

"Is he fond of outdoor sports?"

"Yes. His wife complains that he even invites them home to dinner."—

HEALTH AND APPEARANCE.

Health is inseparable from that good appearance we all like to make. The definition of "good appearance" may vary with the individual viewpoint, but on analysis health is the foundation of an enduring and attractive appearance and an engaging personality. Every little daily habit and every little thought that flits through the human brain helps make our appearance. No man has dignity, self control or real power unless his care of his body, his food, his reading and trend of thought are hygienic and fine. No woman is truly beautiful, with serenity and poise, unless she leads a healthful life that is free from enervating excitement. While youth is attractive in itself, nothing is more pitiable than children in unhygienic surroundings, living unwholesome lives. It does not take a large income and luxurious housing to follow the laws of health. Indeed, we find more violation of the laws under these circumstances than elsewhere.

Not long ago a woman said, "If I could afford to have a course of treatment in a beauty parlor I might do something for my appearance." She needed to be told that the daily bath, plain, nonpoisonous food, eight hours of sleep every night, a daily walk, sensible clothing and really good books would do more for her attractiveness than any beauty parlor could possibly do.

To have health means to live the daily life of work and play in a state of bodily ease, mental vigor and spiritual growth. We must consider health in this threefold aspect, for mere animal health is not desirable nor a fine mind in a stunted, pain racked body nor soulfulness that disregards the laws of the body and intellectual attainment. It is the all round person who is the telling, efficient force in the world, and the world greatly needs every human being developed to his greatest capacity.—Good Health.

The jealous man as a husband is not a success, for such a man can make life most uncomfortable. When you are first married it may seem clever to have a man jealously watching every move you make, but it soon ceases to be a pleasure when you see his eyes turn green at some commonplace remark you receive from a male friend. Some women think that where there is no jealousy there is no true love, but where there is confidence there is peace, and the green eyed monster does not abide long, even if he does make a fleeting visit. What bids for happiness is absolute trust, and the compliment of such trust goes far to keep a man straight. So avoid the jealous man, for he is likely to be exacting and petty in other ways.

Creamed Cabbage.

Soak a cabbage for half an hour in cold water, then trim it and cut it in eighths, and drop it into a saucepan of boiling salted water. Add a clove and a whole onion and cook until tender. Remove the onion, drain the cabbage and chop it fine. Put in a saucepan with a tablespoonful of butter and slowly add three tablespoonfuls of cream. Heat thoroughly, season with pepper and salt and serve.

Now that the heads of the Allied nations have come together, the only Capital the Allies will want will be Berlin.

NO DRY BATTERIES.

They All Contain Moisture or They Would Be Useless.

So called dry batteries are in common use for small electric call bell systems and private telephone lines and were used extensively for ignition on earlier makes of automobiles. Applying the word "dry" to the battery is misleading, for there is no such thing as a "dry" battery. There never was, nor will there ever be.

If it were dry no current would generate, as it requires moisture to produce chemico-electric activity when the circuit is completed from the plus to the minus elements.

The so called dry battery is really an "inclosed wet battery," which retains its moisture to its limit of life, whether in service or not. The limit of life depends on the stored capacity, how frequently the circuit is applied to it, evaporation due to age and deterioration of the conducting elements.

The battery consists of a zinc cylinder case containing a carbon in the center, the intervening space filled in with a paste compound of one part zinc oxide, one part sal ammoniac, three parts plaster of paris and two parts water. The quantities are greater as the capacity of the battery is increased.

As soon as a circuit is completed a chemical combination is started, and the current flows from the internal part of the zinc to the carbon, then out from the carbon to the appliance and returns to the zinc. The external terminals of the battery are the reverse of the internal.

When the battery is exhausted it can be recharged by sending current into it from a close circuit battery, such as a nitric or sulphuric acid cell. Pouring water through a small hole at the top of the battery is an aid to the return of its life, but neither this nor the former will restore the battery to its original efficiency.

Matrimonial Dyspepsia.

"Well, how do you like married life?" inquired the friend.

"Not at all," replied the man who had married money and was suffering for it. "I'm a case of matrimonial dyspepsia."

"Matrimonial dyspepsia?"

"Yes. She never agrees with me. She's too rich."

Siam's Royal Palace.

One of the most remarkable buildings in the world is the palace of the king of Siam. It is inclosed in dazzlingly white walls over a mile in circumference. Within these walls are temples, public offices, seraglios, stable for the sacred elephant, accommodation for a thousand troops, cavalry, war elephants and an arsenal. There is also a very fine theater.

Tar Water.

Tar water was a cure-all in the eighteenth century. It was prepared by pouring a gallon of water on a quart of tar, and the dose was half a pint in the morning and a second glass in the afternoon. Its use became so fashionable that a contemporary noted. "It's as common to call for a glass of tar water in a coffee house as a dish of tea or coffee."

Where Does Lightning Go?

Lightning is the light caused by the passage of an electric current or an electric discharge, so we say. Now, where does the lightning go when it reaches the ground? With the passing of the electricity the lightning flash is gone. But it is not the lightning that reaches the ground; it is the electricity. That passes into the ground and causes changes that man is just beginning to understand. It has a definite effect on the soil and upon the life contained in the soil.

The stenographer: A pleasant old party with singular weaknesses and a strange capacity—rarely exercised, however—to make one cry.

"That so? What's his secret?"

Nature Study.

Animals that hunt are not only "front eyed," but also have front nostrils, with noses especially fitted by their flat tips and the openings squarely in front, where they can be brought to bear upon the same spot of ground in concentrated attention in order to pick up a delicate trace which human nostrils could not perceive. A dog trots along, his nose close to the ground, and bends his course to the right or left as though tracing over some invisible chart by means of his power of scent. The dog is a natural meat eater and if not supported by man must be a hunter, so his nose is the most important part of his outfit, as it is of the other "front nostrils"—the wolf, tiger, lion, mink, weasel, etc.

But the hunted are the "side nostrils," eaters of vegetation, such as deer, rabbits, etc. These are keen scented, too, but their interest is less in knowing what animals passed before them than in detecting those that may be approaching, so their nostrils run around to the sides, where they can read the message of each passing breeze and be warned of coming danger.—Farm Journal.

Sword of Damocles.

Did you ever hear the story of the sword of Damocles? Damocles was never tired of saying how happy the rich and powerful should be. So one day, to show him just how happy they were, Dionysius, the tyrant of Syracuse, invited him to a wonderful banquet, with all the delicacies of the season spread before him in the most luxurious way. Damocles was happy to be thus treated like royalty and was about to eat the good things set before him when he happened to glance above his head and there discovered a sharp edged sword suspended by a single horsehair. Of course he became immediately more interested in the sword than in the delicacies of the season and so learned that it is better to eat bread and herbs in peace than to sit at a king's board with a sword over one's head. But one does not have to be a king to have worries on account of riches, and it is not the worst thing in the world to be poor if one is happy.

The Black Bear.

Did you ever see a black bear with its hair different from the covering of other bears? He is said to be very fond of honey and loves to reach into the honeycomb and take out the sweet. Sometimes he finds the wild bees' hiding place for their honey in a tree. He puts one arm around the tree and with the other reaches in and takes out the honey. The bees cover him all over, but their stings cannot get through his hair.

Popping Corn.

These cold days it is so nice to pop corn in the kitchen, and let me tell you a nice way to do it. Take a granite dipper and put a spoonful of lard in it and place it over the flame until melted. Then put your corn into it and hold it by the handle so that you can shake it. If you are careful you can pop it in a few minutes without burning. You can use butter, but the lard is best.

We only see in a lifetime a dozen faces marked with the peace of a contented spirit.—Beecher.

Woman's World

QUEEN WILHELMINA.

Queen Wilhelmina has occupied the throne of the Netherlands for twenty-five years from the 23d of last November, celebrating the event very quietly with her husband, Prince Henry; their little daughter, Princess Juliana, and her mother, dowager Queen Emma.

She would not allow her subjects to spend any money on festivities in her honor, stipulating that the appropriation made by the state for this occasion should be donated to the fund for the war sufferers in Holland. The newspapers, in recently noting this kindly act of charity, brought to the minds of people in other countries the first remembrance that the young queen had actually passed a quarter of a century upon the throne. She will be thirty-six next August and was a very plump and dimpled little girl of ten when her father, King William III., died and she became queen. She was under the guardianship of her mother until she reached the age of eighteen, since which time she has been very much of a sovereign.

THE CLOSET DOOR.

The possibilities of the small clothes closet are often underestimated by many women. The narrowest wall closet, measuring at the most only a foot in depth and two yards in length, will hold more clothes than one would imagine if proper hanging apparatus is used. There are rods now that come for the closet door which stand out at angles to the door and to which may be attached many coat and skirt hangers. These rods may be had in nickel plate in all lengths, or they may come in white enameled wood, with hooks attached for holding the clothes hangers. Some are made with a hinge, so that they can be let down when not required for use.

The service these rods render for small space is easily seen when you realize that layers and layers of clothes on hangers may be slipped over them or over the hooks and when the closet door is opened may be easily selected without disturbing half a dozen other coats and frocks to find the garment wanted.

A similar arrangement for the sides of a small closet was tried by one ingenious girl. Instead of trying to hang several hangers on one hook, she stretched across the width of her closet from one hook to the outside wall a bit of stout picture wire. Over this she was able to slip any number of clothes hangers with large hooks and could select one garment without disturbing the others. If the width of the closet permits, it is a good plan to stretch a rod the length of the closet and hang the hangers crosswise across this, like the large cases in the suit or dress department in the shops.

One end of a closet may be shelved to hold a girl's hats if she is limited for space. It is to be preferred to the bandbox under the bed, especially if a cretonne bag made sufficiently large is at hand to cover the best bonnet as it reposes on the shelf.

Personal Appearance.

While clothes are an important factor in one's appearance it is not the only one to be considered. So many busy housekeepers neglect to pay sufficient attention to their own personal appearance. We are not all born beauties, neither are we born homely, unless the case be abnormal. A clean, healthy woman who carries herself erect and dresses herself properly is never homely, while, on the other hand, a slovenly, sickly, cranky person is never pretty. However our features may differ, if we are normal we all have hands, feet, hair, complexions and figures that need attention to keep them in good order.

SYNOPSIS OF COAL MINING REGULATIONS.

Coal mining rights of the Dominion, in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Yukon Territories, the North-West Territories and in a portion of the Province of British Columbia, may be leased for a term of twenty-one years at an annual rental of $1 an acre. Not more than 2,560 acres will be leased to one applicant.

Applications for a lease must be made by the applicant in person to the Agent or Sub-Agent of the district in which the rights applied for are situated.

In surveyed territory the land must be described by sections or legal sub-divisions of sections and in unsurveyed territory the tract applied for shall be staked by the applicant himself.

Each application must be accompanied by a fee of $5 which will be refunded if the rights applied for are not available, but not otherwise. A royalty shall be paid on the merchantable output of the mine at the rate of five cents per ton.

The person operating the mine shall furnish the Agent with sworn returns accounting for the full quantity of merchantable coal mined and pay the royalty thereon. If the coal mining rights are not being operated, such returns should be furnished at least once a year.

The lease will include the coal mining rights only, but the lessee may be permitted to purchase whatever available surface rights may be considered necessary for the working of the mine at the rate of $10.00 an acre.

For full information application should be made to the Secretary of the Department of the Interior, Ottawa, or to any Agent or Sub-Agent of Dominion Lands.

W. W. CORY,
Deputy Minister of the Interior.

SYNOPSIS OF CANADIAN NORTH-WEST LAND REGULATIONS.

The sole head of a family, or any male over 18 years old, may homestead a quarter section of available Dominion land in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta. Applicant must appear in person at the Dominion Lands Agency or Sub-Agency for the District. Entry by proxy may be made at any Dominion Lands Agency (but not Sub-Agency) on certain conditions.

Duties—Six months residence upon and cultivation of the land in each of three years. A homesteader may live within nine miles of his homestead on a farm of at least 80 acres, on certain conditions. A habitable house is required except where residence is performed in the vicinity.

In certain districts a homesteader in good standing may pre-empt a quarter-section alongside his homestead. Price, $3.00 per acre.

Duties—Six months residence in each of three years after earning homestead patent; also 50 acres extra cultivation. Pre-emption patent may be obtained as soon as homestead patent, on certain conditions.

A settler who has exhausted his homestead right may take a purchased homestead in certain districts. Price $3.00 per acre. Duties—Must reside six months in each of three years, cultivate 50 acres and erect a house worth $300.

The area of cultivation is subject to reduction in case of rough, scrubby or stony land. Live stock may be substituted for cultivation under certain conditions.

W. W. CORY, C.M.G.,
Deputy of the Minister of the Interior.

The Message of The Cross Today

Rev. A. M. Hubly delivered the fourth sermon in the Lenten series yesterday morning, in Emmanuel Church. The note in the message of the cross strongly emphasized was "Divine love."

All valued learning and intellectual greatness of this world is as foolishness and ignorance compared with the knowledge obtained by due appreciation of the revelation of redeeming love as exhibited in excruciating agony upon the cross.

"God so loved that far beyond the mind of the deepest thinker and beyond the reach of the greatest statesman or philanthropist of all kingdoms, He perfected a plan of salvation by the triumph of love. God's way of saving a lost world is God-like—a way of His own making; the plans of the wisest men would but add fuel to the burning.

"Human wisdom invariably results in vain conceit, puffed up by an imaginary power, which alienates society more and more from God and holiness. The Almighty Father's outpouring love, and unspeakable gift, to a rebellious world must ever be to the selfish and covetous heart of man most unreasonable. But, by the preaching of this cross, and the suffering love of its victim in the heart of those who believe, a new idea of God is born. A true knowledge of God and His Christ is experienced: this is the new birth from which evolves wondrous development, even eternal life.

"As we receive and believe this message of infinite love sounding out from the cross today, it imparts to us divine wisdom, power and grace, and we behold it to be justice, holiness, goodness and truth. "History, from its opening pages until now, and from now until the end of time, will evolve the subject of infinite love contained in the message of the cross as the noblest theme that can engage the earnest thought of mankind.

CALLED BY DEATH

WALTER F. STRONG.

Death came suddenly on Sunday morning to Mr. Walter F. Strong, who resided at 312 Albert street, in this city. Deceased was about the house, engaged in doing some chores when he was suddenly stricken with heart failure and expired in a few minutes. Mr. Strong was 65 years of age and was born in the Township of Cramahe, Northumberland County. He had lived in Belleville for the past 35 years and for 33 years had been a traveller for the Patterson Biscuit Company, of Brantford. Deceased was exceedingly popular with the travelling public, was a member of St. Andrew's church and a member of the A.O.U.W. society. A widow and a daughter, Miss Francis Strong, survive.

ROSA A. LARUE.

After a lingering illness, borne with Christian fortitude, Miss Rosa Agnes LaRue, second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel LaRue, of the 1st concession of Thurlow Township, died yesterday. Deceased was 17 years of age and was a young lady esteemed by all who knew her. In addition to the parents one brother, Wilfred, and a sister, Mrs. M. Cousins, both of Thurlow, survive.

WM. A. SCRIMSHAW.

William A. Scrimshaw, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. M. W. Scrimshaw, residing on south George Street, Belleville, died yesterday. The little one had been ill for some days.

VINCENT SNIDER

An aged resident is dead in the person of Vincent Snider, who died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. G. C. Shorey, 272 George St. The deceased had been in ill health for several months. He was a widower and leaves one son, Marcus A. Snider, Foxboro, two daughters, Mrs. S. H. Gould, Sulphide; Mrs. G. C. Shorey, Belleville. He was a Methodist in religion and was born in the Township of Thurlow in 1833, where he has resided all his life.

March Concert at Queen Alexandra

Creditable Programme Rendered By Pupils of School—Military Drill Calls Forth Applause

It is the custom at this progressive school for three rooms to combine in giving a short concert in the assembly room the last Friday of each month. This time the program was provided by the pupils of the Misses Fleming, MacKay and Stafford. The highly amusing and finished quality of the selections rendered, not only showed good ability in the pupils, but cast a creditable reflection on their teachers as well. The youthful chairman, Master R. Smith, acted his part in a very manly and business-like manner.

Chorus—Khaki..Miss Fleming's Class
Recitation—Elmer La Barre
Twelve Maxims (not guns)—Miss Mackay's Class.
Solo—Florence Brown.
Recitation—Margaret Stewart.
Duette—Lila Sprague.
Chorus—Miss MacKay's Class.
Rifle Drill—Clifford Ketcheson.
Chorus—Marching to Germany" —Miss Fleming's Class.

A pleasing and unique feature was the rifle drill by Master Clifford Ketcheson, a little soldier of five. He obeyed commands promptly, and went through the various phases of the drill with the neatness and precision of a veteran.

The closing feature of the hour was the announcing by the vice-principal, V. E. Bullock, of the results of the Bird contest among the rooms, for March. A check list was kept by each room, recording the name of the bird, the date of its first appearance and the pupil seeing it. The Junior Fourth grade won the contest by a fair margin, having seventy-eight species recorded, and sixty-five of them are migratory birds. The birds are back very early this year.

A similar contest, with the addition of flowers will be carried on during April. The object of these contests is to arouse and stimulate the pupils' interest in Nature so that they will learn to love and protect Her. The result on the pupil is very beneficial in many ways, as it not only broadens their powers of observation, thus giving them a keener enjoyment in living but it also has a marked effect in the class room. They are more keenly alive in everything.

The pleasant hour closed with "God Save The King." The parents and the friends of the children are always cordially invited to attend these concerts.

MUSIC AND DRAMA

"A KNIGHT OF THE RANGE"

Coming to the Palace Theatre tonight and Tuesday, matinee and night, is the greatest of all Western film dramas, the Universal Red Feather feature, "A Knight of the Range," a stirring five-act romance of life on the plains with the Universal star, Harry D. Carey, in the title role of a real play written by himself. This production is the second of the Red Feather features and is unquestionably the most exciting Western drama ever shown on the screen. Prominent in the cast are Peggy, Coudray, Olive Fuller Golden, Hoot Gibson, William Canfield, Bill Gettinger and an all-star cast of champion rough riders and cattle ropers.

"WITHIN THE LAW" THURSDAY

It is a rare enough thing nowadays to find a play which has received the universal endorsement of dramatic critics everywhere. It is unprecedented to hear of a play that has received not only the endorsement of the men whose business it is to consider a play from a technical viewpoint, but from the prominent laymen who judge a play only by the personal appeal which it makes to them. It is therefore of increased interest to learn that we are soon to see "Within the Law", a play by Beyard Veiller, which has been commended publicly by such eminent thinkers as Woodrow Wilson, Theodore Roosevelt, Dr. C. H. Pankhurst, the Bishop of Wyoming, Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont, Mrs. Harriet Stanton Blatch, and which has just concluded a run of more than a year at the Eltinge Theatre, New York City. Manager Forhan has secured this remarkable play, which deals with present-day conditions in the populace, and which will be seen at Griffin's Opera House next Thursday night, for one night only.

MILESTONES OF LIFE

"Milestones of Life," an absorbing 4 part story embracing 4 seasons and featuring the popular Thanhouser star, Mignon Anderson, and a company of distinguished players is the feature offering at Griffin's Opera House to-night and Tuesday and Wednesday evenings. Besides the above offering, Little Billie's Triumph, an amusing Keystone comedy; The Zaca Lake Mystery, a 2 part detective story, and Applied Science, a splendid Reliance comedy, will also be exhibited.

THE 80TH BAND CONCERT

Belleville music lovers are promised an extraordinary treat next Friday evening, when the band of the 80th Overseas Battalion C.E.F. will give their farewell concert in Griffin's Opera House, assisted by Miss Gertrude Stares and Miss Victoria Stares. These singers are vocalists of marked ability. Both have received their training abroad under the most capable masters. Miss Victoria Stares needs no introduction to the Belleville audience, she having made a grand success at the last 80th concert. Miss Gertrude is soloist in St. Thomas' Church, Hamilton, has toured Western Canada and the States several times, and at a recent concert in Ottawa was received with an ovation.

The plan will open to the public at Doyle's Drug Store on Thursday morning at 9.00 a.m. Be on hand early and secure a choice seat.

Chas. S. Clapp

DOMESTIC BLISS.

Shown in the Confessions of a Happily Married Man.

It takes my wife a long time to read anything. I skim whole pages instantly. She hates to be read aloud to. I love it.

When we travel I always suggest to her in advance the car we shall take. She agrees, but will suddenly change her mind and insist upon taking another one. I grumble to myself and obey. She likes the top of the auto up. I loathe it up. It remains up.

I always praise her golf, no matter how badly she plays. She always deprecates mine, no matter how well I play. When I criticise anything she does I don't say it; I think it. That sometimes makes trouble enough.

I compliment her occasionally before others. She pretends that she doesn't understand why I do it.

When I buy a new suit she will never admit that she admires it until it is worn out. Then she says the next one isn't half so becoming as the last. When she gets a new gown I admire it intensely until it is about time to replace it with another. She never liked any hat that I have ever bought. I like every one of hers—on principle.

I laugh at her when she gets too serious. When I get too serious she scolds me.

I keep her informed about my business only when she asks me. She never asks me, so you know the result.

I tell her a funny story every day. If I have two I keep one for the next day. Sometimes she laughs at them.

She asks me occasionally if I think her hair is as long as it was. I always tell her it is longer.

I hate bridge, dinner parties, dancing and the opera. She respects my opinion and makes me do them all.

She makes out checks and forgets to enter them on the stubs. Every time I catch her in this omission she reminds me of the celebrated occasion when I left the tickets to a large theater party in my other suit.

She always keeps her temper when I lose mine. I keep mine when she loses hers.

I once told her she was thoroughly spoiled. She kissed me and said she knew it.

Mescal Buttons.

The "sacred mushroom" of the Aztecs, which was called by them teonanacatl and used as an intoxicant, was, it appears, not a mushroom, but the narcotic cactus Laphophora Williamsii, now well known for its use by the South American Indians in religious ceremonies. It is popularly called "mescal button," though a better name is peyote. Early writers on Mexico described it as a mushroom, and this notion as to its botanical status still survives. The mistake is due to the fact that in one of the two principal forms in which it is prepared the head of the plant is cut off transversely, and when dried it bears a close resemblance to a mushroom.

Secret of Perpetual Youth.

"Fall in love and keep constantly falling in love if you wish to remain young," said Dr. Josiah Oldfield in the course of one of his lectures on the "Secret of Perpetual Youth:"

"There is nothing more important than this to prevent men and women from growing old.

"If you are married all you have to do is to fall in love all over again with your husband or your wife. If you do this you will never find time to adapt the nagging habit, and nothing ages like matrimonial nagging. If you do not know how to fall in love you must practice until you learn, and, when you have learned, then you are young again."

For a Mere Song.

Many composers, like Coleridge Taylor, have missed the just reward of their labor, but there is another side to the picture. Sullivan received £10,000 in royalties for "The Last Chord." "In Old Madrid" rewarded Trotere with a similar amount, and Bishop, it is said, drew something like £2,000 a line from "My Pretty Jane."—London Standard.

An Easy Way to Run Ribbons.

When about to send a piece of lingerie to the laundry a piece of narrow tape should be tied to the end of the ribbon and the latter drawn out of the beading, leaving the tape in its place The knot is then fastened, and the lingerie can be sent to the wash, the ribbon being replaced on its return in exactly the same manner.

Life in a Nutshell.

"Stop, look, listen."

"Those three words illustrate the whole scheme of life," said he.

"How so?"

"You see a pretty girl. You stop. You look. After you marry her you listen."

The Attraction.

Miss Sassy—What do you want that shopworn old nobleman for? There's nothing to him.

Miss Bargain—Well, he's been on the market so long I can get his title cheap.

Exchange of Compliments.

Maud—My mamma says she can remember when your mamma kept a grocer's shop.

Marie—My mamma says she can remember how much your mamma owes her for groceries.

Water is doubtless a very important question to Montreal, and, believe us, it is not a bit likely to be overlooked by such pronounced believer in water as the Tramways interests.—Beck's Weekly.

LUNGS OF A BATTLESHIP.

One of the most difficult problems in building a battleship is to secure satisfactory ventilation. She is a very complicated creature, made up of so many steel boxes, large and small, for the accommodation of officers, men, coal, ammunition and stores, dotted here and there with so many steel ladders, automatic lifts, steel bulkheads and water tight doors, varied here and there by miles of electric wires belonging to lights, telephones, bells and motors, to say nothing of the endless mileage of pipes for flooding, draining, pumping, fresh water, fresh air or compressed air and speaking tubes.

First in importance comes the ventilating of the boiler and engine rooms. When you begin to think of gangs of coal black demons working away in the bowels of the ship at a temperature of 120 degrees; when, too, you commence to realize that unless the furnaces receive their required draft the speed of the battleship drops to below that of her sisters in the squadron, you appreciate the importance of the steam driven fans to the furnaces and boiler rooms. The supply of air comes down through large water tight trunks, which are continued right up to the weather deck, armored gratings being provided at the protective deck.

For ventilating engine rooms large electric fans are employed. So, too, the coal bunkers have to be ventilated, owing to the gas which the coal gives off. This gas when mixed with air forms an explosive, so in order to prevent the possibility of injury to men or ship supply and exhaust pipes are fitted in such a manner as to cause a current of air.

Saving a Black Fox Skin.

Presence of mind is the soul of manly exercises. If soldiers and sailors owe it to many of their lucky escapes hunters and sportsmen are not less beholden to it for many of their successes. In a noble forest in Russia I met a black fox whose valuable skin it would have been a pity to tear by ball or shot. Reynard stood close to a tree In a twinkling I took out my ball and placed a good spikenail in its room, fired and hit him so cleverly that I nailed his brush fast to the tree. I now went up to him, took out my hanger, gave him a cross cut over the face, laid hold of my whip and fairly flogged him out of his fine skin.—Munchausen.

Monarch.

I am the real ruler of the universe. I cover with dust the masterpieces of the earth. Ancient forms shrink before my ever awakening presence.

Men bow before my scepter like slaves of the light. And women, their eyes fixed by my spell, follow where I lead.

The puny baby in the nursery and the gray bearded patriarch alike hearken to my magic voice. I paint the earth with divers colors, and the scientist, the doctor, all the rulers of man, awake to do my bidding.

I am monarch of all I survey. None disputes my eternal majesty.

My name is novelty.

An Ancient House.

"The ancient Romans had a catapult that could hurl rocks more than a mile."

"Now I understand it."

"What?"

"My landlord told me the house was a stone's throw from the depot. He must have had it on his hands since the time of the Caesars."

Ballot and Suffrage.

"Ballot" and "suffrage" show the language perpetuates the memory of primitive methods. A "ballot" should be a vote taken with balls—one of the various ancient Greek instruments of secret voting. And the word "suffrage," which by some is derived from "suffrago," a knucklebone or ankiebone, in that case recalls an early method of recording the vote.

Star Points.

The supposed "points" of a star are not there at all. A star is round, like the earth or the moon or the sun. But the human eye, largely because of its mode of sending sight impressions to the brain, sees matters in straight lines, and the haze around a brightness always seems to be pointed. The brighter the object the more points there seem to be.

Human Mystery.

Almost every man believes in the mystery of woman. I do not. For men are also mysterious to women; women are quite as puzzled by our stupidity as by our subtlety. I do not believe that there is either a male or a female mystery; there is only the mystery of mankind.—W. L. George in Atlantic Monthly.

Luck.

Jack—Congratulate me, old man. Tom—What's up? Are you engaged. Jack—No. Miss Roxleigh refused me the day before her father made an assignment.

His Own Den Too.

Husband—A man is coming to see me on business. Can I have him come into my den? Wife—And interrupt my dressmaker? Never.

To Her Taste.

Jess—Why did Mae marry Harold? He's a perfect blockhead. Bess—Well, you know she always liked hard wood trimmings in a house.

FRONTENAC FARMERS FACE BIG LABOR SHORTAGE

KINGSTON, April 4.—(Special.)—That many farmers in Frontenac County will be compelled to sell their stock unless there is some means of getting the necessary help is the statement of several prominent farmers of the county today. The farmers are of the opinion that the militia department should release some of the men in the training camps to help with the seeding.

There were 1,586 men recruited for units in military district No. 3 in the last two weeks. There were 234 men secured for Kingston units.

Drive Foe Back in Caillette Wood—Pour Direct and Flanking Fire Into Advancing Germans, Inflicting Heavy Losses

LONDON, April 4.—Special—East of the Meuse around Vaux there has been considerable fighting between the French and Germans, in which the French were victorious in driving the Teutons back to the northern outskirts of the Caillette Wood and in reoccupying the western part of the village of Vaux, which they had previously evacuated.

The occupation by the Germans of the Haucourt-Bethincourt front followed a vigorous attack, in which, however, the Germans met no foe, the French having evacuated their positions at night without the Germans observing the movement. From their new positions south of the Forges brook and at Bethincourt the French poured a direct and flanking fire into the attacking Germans, who suffered heavy casualties.

Germany's casualties for the first quarter of 1916 are unofficially estimated at 300,000. The principal losses were suffered at Verdun. It is estimated that the aggregate of Germany's reserve strength is 700,000. She has 175,000 men fighting with the Austrians, 15,000 with the Turks and 10,000 with the Bulgarians.

BILL TO CHANGE NAME WAS LOST IN THE LEGISLATURE

Canadian Press Special.

TORONTO, April 4.—Without calling for a vote on the question, Chairman Lucas of the Private Bills Committee in the Legislature, this morning declared the bill to change the name of Berlin was lost. Solicitor Simms and S. J. Williams argued strongly in its favor. Their side presented a petition with 1,170 signatures, many of which, however, the opposing side claimed, were not those of voters, property owners or even tenants. A. B. McBride presented a petition of nine hundred opposed to the bill. Several members of the committee recommended a popular vote on the question, but Simms and Williams claimed it would result in a bitter race cry.

CITY TO INVEST $80,000 IN GOVERNMENT BONDS

Recommendation That the Taxpayers on Front and Bridge Streets Pay For Flushing Pavement Defeated—Statement of Unpaid Taxes Presented—Minor Matters Disposed Of

At the Council proceedings last evening some matters of more or less importance were disposed of. Considerable discussion ensued in reference to a recommendation from the Public Works Committee that the ratepayers on Front and Bridge streets pay the expense of flushing the pavement. By a majority of votes it was decided that the flushing would be paid for out of the general tax of the city. A recommendation from the Executive Committee that the city invest $80,000 of the sinking fund in Government bonds was unanimously adopted.

The members present were: Mayor Ketcheson, Aldermen Smith, Woodley, Platt, Parks, Whalen and Duckworth.

Minutes of the last meeting read and confirmed.

On motion the Council went into committee of the whole on reports, communications, etc. Ald. Whalen in the chair.

The accounts recommended to be paid by the various committees were passed and the following recommendations were disposed:

That a by-law be prepared, authorizing the investing of $80,000 of the City of Belleville sinking fund in Government 10 year bonds.—Carried.

That an auditor be employed at once to complete the city audit for the year 1914.—Carried.

That tenders for the leasing of the market for 1 year from April 20th, 1916, be called for.—Carried.

That the Walker Foundry Co. be notified that after 31st of March, the city will pay nothing for the privilege of a carter's stand in front of their works, and that the carters be notified through the press that they can use the southeast corner of the market, also along the stone wall by the upper bridge on Mill Street until further arrangements.—Carried.

That Jack Roblin be authorized to proceed with the repairs of the city clock, putting same in proper repairs for the sum of $25.—Carried.

Ald. Duckworth said that some carters are finding fault because they are being moved and do not like the places proposed.

That repairs be made to the footbridge at an early date as possible, such repairs to be of such a nature as the chairman of Public Works and street foreman think advisable.—Carried.

Cleaning Front Street

That as it is not deemed proper for the city at large to pay for the flushing and cleaning of Front and Bridge streets pavement, that if the tenants and property owners on these streets desire to have same attended to they will have to present a petition to the Council, asking that the same be done and the expenses charged to the property through the taxes.

Mayor Ketcheson said this was an unpopular move, as many were against it and it would be almost impossible to get a petition to have the streets sprinkled or flushed in the manner proposed by the recommendation. He moved that the recommendation be struck out.

Ald. Woodley spoke in support of the Mayor's proposition.

Ald. Duckworth contended that the tenants were paying for the paving of Front street. Rents have gone up as a result of the pavement on Front street. He was not in favor of the Mayor's proposition, and suggested that the matter be left in abeyance and hear a deputation of merchants.

Ald. Parks said that in Toronto he understood all streets were swept and watered and were charged up to the taxes of the property benefited.

Liberals Float Another Rumor

Contrary to Statements There is No Government Crisis at Ottawa

OTTAWA, April 3—Someone started from somewhere Sunday a rumor that the Duke of Connaught had sent for Sir Wilfrid Laurier and that he was in consultation with him in regard to the shell situation. The rumor was started by the Liberals and, as far as can be found out, it was done for political purposes.

Apparently there is no foundation for the story. Sir Wilfrid was not in his office this morning, but his secretary says that as far as he knows his chief did not visit Government House either Saturday or Sunday.

It can be stated positively that there is no political crisis at the Capital. The only crisis is for General Sir Sam Hughes.

The Government members are solidly behind their leader and probably never has the Premier had the confidence of his followers more firmly than at the present time.

The promptness and boldness with which he handled the present situation has raised him in the esteem of his party.

The atmosphere is now clear. If Sir Sam comes out of the inquiry satisfactorily then he will remain in the Cabinet; if he cannot clear himself, then his resignation will come as a matter of course.

A high official at Rideau Hall stated positively to-day that there is nothing in the story.

INTERESTING MESSAGES TO N. Y. MAN

Eugene Carnier Receives Letters From Overseas Containing Graphic Information

Canadian Press Special.

NEW YORK, April 4.—Eugene Carnier, a hotelman, has received a letter from Pierre Legall, a French aviator, by a roundabout route. It was written by Legall as he was about to start on a raid upon German supply stations.

"The night is very dark," he wrote, "and to the north we can see a glow of flares lighting up the trenches. Very soon we shall be over them."

With the letter was an enclosure in German, written by a man who did not give his name, saying: "I found this letter in the clothes of a French observer whose aeroplane was brought down behind our lines last night, and I am sending it to you because I remember having met you once in New York. The Frenchman is injured but will recover. The next time I am over French territory I will drop a letter hoping some one will find it and mail it."

A second enclosure, written by a British censor, said: "I also remember meeting you, Mr. Carnier. I hope some time soon we may all meet again as friends."

WANT TO PROHIBIT THE MANUFACTURE

Amendment is Urged to Bill Hon. Mr. Doherty Submits in Committee

OTTAWA, April 4.—Special—Members of Parliament last night sought to strengthen the Government bill respecting the importation of liquor into dry provinces by striking at the manufacture of intoxicants. Hon. Mr. Doherty submitted his measure, the principle of which, he claimed, had been approved by the substitution of the Bennett amendment for the sweeping Stevens-Marcil total prohibition resolution to the House in its committee stage.

Mr. Hugh Guthrie urged that the Government should also prohibit the manufacture in dry provinces. Without this provision many believed that provincial prohibition would be seriously handicapped. In Ontario, Mr. Guthrie was assured, an overwhelming majority of the people would favor the prohibition of manufacture.

The Minister of Justice replied that a Province could now prohibit manufacture for use in the Province. If a Province exercised all its powers it could prohibit importation altogether, and everything else, except manufacture for export. Mr. Doherty did not see what evil the latter would do.

Hon. Mr. Pugsley did. He held that so long as liquor was manufactured there would be illegal sale and use of it.

Mr. J. H. Sinclair asked why no penalty had been provided to cover the sale of liquor in one province for use in another.

The Minister replied that, while it might be advisable to amend the bill, a seller of liquor must necessarily ship it, and this would bring him under the provisions of the act.

Mr. H. H. Stevens gave notice of two amendments to penalize brewers or distillers in a dry province who violated the prohibitory law of that province, and to penalize all those who had anything to do with the importation into a dry province of liquor in package not marked as liquor, or who sent liquor to a fictitious person who was not the actual consignee. The committee reported progress and will sit again.

SHELL INVESTIGATION TO BE OF WIDEST NATURE

Royal Commission Not Limited as to Transactions—Extension of Inquiry Welcomed by Liberals and Conservatives Alike

OTTAWA, Ont., April 4.—(Special.)—The government has practically decided upon a sweeping inquiry into all suspicious transactions of the shells committee. The order-in-council laid upon the table of the house today not only authorizes the directors Sir Wm. Meredith and Justice Duff, constituting royal commission, to inquire searchingly into the four transactions referred to in the prime minister's announcement on Thursday last, but further authorizes and empowers them, "also to inquire into such other matter, relating to the act or proceedings of the shell committee as may be referred to these commissioners by order-in-council from time to time, and to report the result of any such further inquiries with the evidence taken herein."

The extension of the investigation and the powers of the commission appear to have given general satisfaction to members on both sides of the house. The debate upon the Laurier resolution, being for a parliamentary investigation, will be resumed tomorrow but it may be voted down, after Hon. W. T. White has finished his speech begun last Tuesday night, and Sir Wilfrid closes for the opposition.

French Batteries Succeed in Shelling German Supply Train—Other Features

Canadian Press Special.

PARIS, April 4.—(Afternoon statement). In the Argonne district we have bombarded certain of the German organizations, particularly in the region of Montfaucon and Malancourt.

To the west of the River Meuse there has been artillery fighting of considerable violence along the front from Avocourt as far as Malancourt.

East of the Meuse the night passed relatively quietly.

"The Germans have made no attack against the front between Douaumont and Vaux re-established by our counter attacks of yesterday.

French batteries have been particularly active in firing upon the enemy positions in this region. The enemy has responded but feebly. East of the Forest of Le Pretre a strong reconnaissance by the enemy has been dispersed by our fire.

In Alsace French batteries were successful in shelling a German supply train on the highway between Thann and Muelhausen.

Government Wins In School Case

Judgement Says it Had Power to Appoint Commission

TORONTO, April 3.—By a judgment handed down today by the Appellate Court, the creation of the Ottawa School Commission by the Provincial Legislature was held to be within the jurisdiction of the latter body, and an injunction asked by the Roman Catholic, Separate School Board and certain ratepayers of Ottawa, which, if granted, would restrain Ottawa property holders from paying taxes for the use of the Commission, was denied.

In to-day's decision the Court held that the creation of the Commission was not prejudicial to the rights of the minority. The case was viewed from the standpoint of the British North America Act.

Canada Not Cheated In Sub. Purchase

OTTAWA, April 4.—(Special.)—Final evidence was taken today by the Davidson war contracts commission in the purchase of two submarines by the Canadian Government from the Electric Boat Co. G. C. Davidson, vice-president of the company, stated the reasons Chile had refused the boats were trivial ones, and he believed the Canadian Government had secured good value in the boats at $555,000 each. Davidson said there were many people in Canada who would back him up in the opinion that these vessels had protected the Pacific coast from invasion at the time the German squadron was supposed to be contemplating an attack.

"If the German vessels had put in an appearance they would most likely have been sent to the bottom by these submarines," Davidson deposed.

J. F. Patterson, president of the company, had been given a commission of $40,000 for negotiating the sale.

BRITISH RECAPTURE MINE CRATER AT ST. ELOI, SOUTH OF YPRES

Canadian Press Special.

BERLIN, April 4.—Strong French positions southwest of Douaumont and in the Caillette wood, northeast of Verdun, have been taken by the German troops, the war office announced today.

The re-capture by the British of a mine crater at St. Eloi, south of Ypres, which the Germans had been occupying, is also recorded in the official statement.

SUCCESSFULL RECRUITING AT PICTON

Large Gathering Held Last Night—Banquet Follows An Energetic Appeal To The Patriotic

At the town of Picton last night a recruiting meeting was held in the Armouries, which proved to be a most successful affair. The occasion was a memorable one owing to the presence of several distinguished gentlemen, namely, Hon. T. W. Crothers, Minister of Labor, who is an old Prince Edward boy; Sir Mackenzie Bowell, Hon. H. Corby, Mr. J. W. Johnson, M. P. P. for West Hastings, Major B. R. Hepburn, M. P. for Prince Edward County; Colonel Adams, Commanding Officer of the 155th Battalion, and ex-Mayor Wills of Belleville, all of whom gave addresses. The Armouries were filled and the addresses given aroused enthusiasm. The orchestra in connection with the 155th Battalion was present and discoursed suitable selections. The meeting closed with the National Anthem and cheers for the King.

At the conclusion of the meeting a banquet was held at the Royal Hotel, which was a most enjoyable affair. Upwards o[illegible]00 prominent citizens were present and thoroughly appreciated the proceeding. Mr. G. M. Farrington was chairman. The menu provided was all that could have been desired. After supper addresses, chiefly of a patriotic nature, were given by Hon. T. W. Crothers, Sir Mackenzie Bowell, Hon. H. Corby, Mr. J. W. Johnson, M.P.P., ex-Mayor Wil's and others.

During the evening Major B. R. Hepburn, M. P., was called upon and a beautiful illuminated address was read to him, accompanying which was a handsome wrist watch. The presentation was made on behalf of the popular member's friends in Picton and Prince Edward County. The recipient made a most suitable reply and in his remarks urged recruiting in the County of Prince Edward.

Some officers of the 155th and 80th Battalions who were present, were called upon and made suitable remarks.

The pleasing affair was brought to a close by the singing of the National Anthem.

The result of the gathering will no doubt be an incentive for further recruiting in Picton and the County of Prince Edward.

Girl Slid Down Rod in Fire Hall But Broke Her Hip

OWEN SOUND, April 3—While selling copies of a patriotic paper issued here to-day Miss Florence Bunt, the fifteen-year-old daughter of Mr. Wm. Bunt of this town, with a number of companions visited the fire hall and were being shown over the place. Two of her companions were taken down safely by the descending rod from the dormitories, but Miss Bunt started prematurely to descend with the assistance of fireman Munroe, with the result that they struck the floor with such force as to fracture the socket of the young girl's hip seriously. First aid was rendered by Sergt. Fred Corkran of St. John's Ambulance Brigade Bugle Sergt. of the 147th Battalion, and she was taken to the hospital.

Ald. Platt considered it was an injustice to ask all citizens to pay for the watering or sprinkling of Front street.

Ald. Duckworth was in favor of a committee being appointed to ascertain what increase there had been in rents on Front street since the pavement was put down.

Mayor Ketcheson—We are proud of our stores on Front street. We will have to clean the street if the property owners object to pay for same.

Ald. Parks was in favor of the recommendations as presented from the committee.

Ald. Woodley—The cost would be upwards of $10,000 to keep clean and flush Front street for the season. Under the circumstances he would be in favor of the work being done as it had in the past, and charged up to the general tax. Front street ratepayers would pay about half the expense.

Mayor Ketcheson—It is as little as we could do to continue as we did last year and clean Front street.

Ald. Woodley—The builders of the pavement stated that it was essential that the pavement should be flushed.

Ald. Duckworth—I think it is unjust to ask citizens as a whole to pay for cleaning Front street. The owners of Front street property should at least pay half the expenses.

Ald. Woodley—If the ratepayers refuse to pay, then where are we at?

Ald. Parks moved an amendment that the recommendation be laid upon the table until next Council meeting and the taxpayers and merchants be notified to attend the meeting and discuss this matter.

Upon a vote being taken on Ald. Parks amendment 3 voted for it and 3 against it.

Ald. Whalen voted for the amendment, which prevailed.

Communication

The following communication was read:

There is a spring running from the rear of my property and on city property which runs into my kitchen, from there into my cellar. Said water at very little cost could be drained into the sewer. Trusting your honorable body may see your way clear to remedy same.

I remain yours,
R. BATEMAN,
Crystal Hotel.

Relief Fund

A communication was read asking the Council to contribute towards the Serbian Relief Fund.

On motion the matter was referred to the Executive Committee.

Tax Account

Ald. Woodley presented a statement which showed that the following taxes for 1913-1914 and 1915 were due, and what had been collected:

1913

March 6th amount due city	$7383 79
Collected since that date	3454 01
Balance	$3929 75

1914

March 6th, amount due city	$28 556 28
Collected since that date	930 14

1915

March, 6th amount due City	$50 970 40
Collected since that date	972 99
Balance	$49 997 41

There is still about $500 collectable by distress in the 1913 account, and this will be in bailiff's hands for collection.

Ald. Woodley—We are doing our best to clean up the 1913 roll, hence very little has been collected for 1914 and 1915. The 1913 roll is all collected but about $500, the remainder taxes being against city and other property, from which taxes cannot be collected.

The committee rose and reported. The report was received, and on motion that it be adopted, Ald. Smith moved that it be not now adopted but referred back for the purpose of reconsidering the matter of the flushing of Front and Bridge Streets.

The motion prevailed and the Council went back into committee, Ald. Parks in the chair.

Mayor Ketcheson moved that the recommendation re flushing Front and Bridge Streets be struck out and that the cost of same be paid for out of the taxes as a whole.

Ald. Platt moved an amendment that the matter be left over until the next meeting of the Council.

The amendment was lost, but two voting for it, namely the mover and Ald. Duckworth.

The Mayor's motion prevailed and the committee rose and reported. The report was received and adopted.

Enquiries

Ald. Smith—Is there a bylaw prohibiting dealers from buying upon the market before 10 o'clock in the morning. Complaints had been made to him in reference to dealers buying before the time specified.

Ald. Parks—There is such a bylaw.

It was suggested that the matter be looked into by the police.

Unfinished Business

Under this head Mayor Ketcheson stated that Mr. Thomas Ritchie of this city had given a cheque for $15,000 for the erection of a Children's Shelter, which was sufficient to erect an up-to-date building. The furnishing and placing the grounds in proper shape would entail an expenditure of about $5,000, which the city and County of Hastings Councils were asked to provide for. It was proposed to have a committee of two from the Children's Shelter, two from the County Council and two from the City Council to carry out the proposition of furnishings, etc. The Children's Aid Society had appointed Messrs. A. E. Bailey and J. Elliott as their committee of two, and on motion the Mayor of the city, and chairman of Finance were selected as the city representatives in this matter.

Council adjourned.

Within the Military Circle

KINGSTON

KINGSTON, April 2.—The Militia Department has decided to adopt the recommendation of the Royal Military College Board of Visitors and replace the rather obsolete cadet uniform with that used in other military colleges of the Empire. The old pill box cap will be seen no more, being replaced by the officers forage cap. The changes will save expense and make the uniform of use to the cadet after he leaves the college.

BELLEVILLE

An order has been issued from the Militia Department that all men of good character who wish to engage in the spring ploughing and seeding may secure a month's furlough by application to the Adjutant of their Battalion. Men availing themselves of this opportunity may secure transportation to any point within three hundred miles. Many of the local boys have expressed their intention of aiding the farmers by taking advantage of this opportunity.

Six men enlisted with the 155th Battalion yesterday.

Owing to the scarcity of instructors the military authorities have deemed it inadvisable to permit any member of the Instructional Cadre to enlist in any overseas unit, as their services are required in this country at the present time.

Bn. Sergt. Major Cooper of the 155th Battalion reported for duty this morning.

Six signallers of the 155th Battalion left this morning for Kingston, where they will attend School of Signalling.

Grade A.—Corp'l. Williams.

The strenght of 155th, Battalion including officers, up to this morning is 1026.

BREEDERS' SALE OF CATTLE A SUCCESS

Upwards of Eighty Holstein Animals Disposed of—Prices Slightly in Advance of Last Year—Many Buyers Present

The sixth annual sale of Holstein cattle held under the auspices of the Holstein-Friesian Breeders' Club took place in Belleville on Thursday, Mar. 30th, and was in every respect a success. It was an ideal day and in consequence many came to the city to attend the sale. Buyers were numerous and the bidding was fairly brisk. Some buyers came a considerable distance to attend the sale which, considering everything, was one of the best held under the auspices of the club. The class of cattle offered for sale was good and the prices realized seem to give general satisfaction, being on an average slightly in advance of last year, when the number of cattle offered for sale was about equal to this year. Col. D. L. Perry, of Columbus, Ohio, was the auctioneer, and he is well versed in his calling. Mr. Jas. A. Caskey was sales manager. The sale took place beneath a large tent erected in the spacious yard in the rear of the Albion Hotel. Last year the total receipts were $10,080, whereas this year the receipts were $11,555. The highest price paid for one animal was $285 for Bell Hengerveld, a beautiful cow owned by J. M. Branscombe, of Bloomfield. The consignors, purchasers and prices paid were as follows:

The Racking Pains of Sciatic Rheumatism

Were Well-nigh Unbearable—After Five Years of Suffering Cure Was Effected by Dr. Chase's Medicines.

For downright excruciating pain few ailments can be compared to sciatic rheumatism. Since this condition of the sciatic nerve denotes exhaustion of the nervous system the logical cure is found in the use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food to nourish the starved nerves back to health and vigor.

Reports are continually coming in to us regarding the splendid results obtained in the treatment of sciatic rheumatism by using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food after each meal and Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills occasionally as a means of arousing the action of the liver, kidneys and bowels and thereby keeping the system freed of pain causing poisonous impurities.

Mr. W. J. Talbot, Edenwold, Sask., writes:—"It is a great pleasure for me to recommend Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills and Nerve Food as a cure for Sciatic Rheumatism. The pain I have suffered has been well-nigh unbearable. It would start in the hips and run down the legs to the toes gradually getting worse. The nerves contract until one is practically useless. My doctor tried many different treatments, but could only afford relief for a time.

"For about five years I was subject to this trouble with severe attacks which would last about two months. The last attack I had was shortened to two weeks by the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills and Nerve Food. This treatment was continued until I was satisfied that the cure was lasting."

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, 50 cents a box, six for $2.50. Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills 25 cents a box, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Company, Limited, Toronto.

MUSIC AND DRAMA

MILESTONES OF LIFE AT GRIFFIN'S LAST NIGHT

A beautiful child with a big white rabbit in her arms; a manly little chap with a Scotch coolie dog. "Let's make 'em kiss," suggested the arch little miss. The dog and the rabbit kiss—it becomes contagious, and the children kiss. This was the initial of an entrancing story of life at Griffin's Opera House last evening that should bring a lesson to many a disturbed home.

"A little boy deeply in love serenades a little girl at midnight; the double doors of the upper balcony open, a girl-child in night robes appears and flowers drop upon the musician's head. As the boy is led away by his laughing mother the girl-child stretches her arms towards him with the heartcry, "Alas, my love!" portraying an unforgettable scene. Then came entanglements; a grown young lady appears on the sacred ground, and the child-lover forgets his first love for the snares of the second; this brings about the first quarrel in a life of more or less disagreements, which deepen after the marriage vows have been given, to continue until separation ensues—the luxurious home is divided. The jealous wife repents, but too late. Finally, an act of charity prompts the forsaken woman to visit a humble home; a fire breaks out from an overturned lamp; the benefactress is hemmed in; a rescuing party is organized and the husband scene. A note, inviting a reunion at the old tryting place, cannot be resisted, and broken hearts are welded. "Milestones of Life" is indeed a model photoplay, in which many star players were featured to advantage. "The Zaca Lake Mystery", a splendid 2-reel detective story, in which a plucky girl shines to advantage, is also a drawing film. The entire programme will be repeated this evening and Wednesday evening.

"WITHIN THE LAW" THURSDAY

Lovers of good plays and fine acting are certain to welcome the announcement that "Within the Law," Bayard Veiller's absorbing melodrama of modern American life, which was the dramatic sensation of the world, is to be presented at Griffin's Opera House next Thursday night, for one night only.

Forsaking the conventional paths pursued by playwrights Mr. Veiller has, in "Within the Law", devised a virile and exciting drama of a certain phase of contemporaneous life in the larger cities that appeals with equal force to every class of theatregoers. The story is that of a young girl who is unjustly convicted and sent to prison for theft who tries to live honestly when released, but is hounded by the police until she loses her position and who then turns on them and matches her wits against their brutality; keeping "within the law" and employing the intricacies and false standards and technicalities of the law to shield her from arrest. She develops ingenuity, daring and makes the man who sent her to prison pay for her four years of drudgery for him and her three years in a felon's cell, almost breaking his heart through his son and heir.

For "Within the Law" an adequate cast has been engaged of individual and collective excellence, while the extensive scenic investiture required for the mounting of the play, is on a scale of lavishness not usually attempted in the line of dramatic productions.

GRAFT

On Eve of Huge Exposure

If you have ever visited a large city, have you ever stopped to figure how people exist in the tumble-down unsanitary tenements that are allowed to stand in spite of the law? Have you ever really understood the frightful conditions that surround hundreds of thousands of people in direct poverty in large cities? Do you know how cruel and crushing landlords and tenement owners are in the cities? In the new 18 complete 2 part episode serial series Graft, by eighteen of America's most brilliant authors, Graft is shown to exist in traction lines, public institutions, foodstuffs, liquor, railroads, paving and subway companies, and in many other law-defying trusts and corporations. A two part episode of this wondrous serial Graft will be exhibited at the Palace Theatre every Wednesday and Thursday, matinee and night, commencing to-morrow. See it all vividly portrayed on the screen; also see the desperate legal battle put up by Bruce Larnigan in his endeavor to crush the Grafters. Throughout the many episodes runs a thread of the most beautiful story of love and accomplishment ever presented in any serial on a local screen, between Hobart Henley, the hero of the story, and Jane Novak, who portrays the leading feminine role.

No Trouble to Remove Superfluous Hair

(Toilet Tips)

It is an easy matter to rid the skin of objectionable hair or fuzz, if you proceed as follows: Mix a paste with some water and a little powdered delatone, apply to hairy surface and in 2 or 3 minutes rub off, wash the skin and the hairs are gone. This method of banishing hairy growths is painless and does not mar the skin, but to avoid disappointment be certain to get real delatone.

J. H. Moffatt of Napanee Suffers Severe Injury—Ice Has Disappeared From River

NAPANEE, April 3.—J. H. Moffatt, superintendent of the Gibbard Furniture Company's factory here, met with a painful accident on Saturday morning in the finishing room, by getting his hand into an exhaust fan. The back of his left hand was terribly lacerated.

About half of "C" Company, 80th Battalion, left for their homes to spend a few days prior to leaving here. The other half will go next week. The boys were inspected by Col. Brown in the morning, and are overjoyed at the prospect of going overseas at an early date.

The ice went out of the river last night, and it is now clear nearly all the way down to the mouth. The water is very high this year; in fact, higher than it has been for years.

Why It Is Nut Brown.

If your Roman Meal Porridge tastes of flaxseed, it's a positive sign you've stirred it while boiling. Try again, and follow directions on package. Properly made, it's delicious.

Dr. Jackson's Roman Meal is nut brown, because made from entire grains. To be highly nourishing, the dark parts must be used. These parts also carry the salts which prevent the blood from becoming acid. Roman Meal not only makes the best porridge obtainable, but can be served in all sorts of nourishing baked products. Try also the really-cooked form, known as Roman Meal Nuggets.

THIS IS THE 610TH DAY THE BRITISH EMPIRE HAS BEEN AT WAR WITH GERMANY.

THE LIQUOR QUESTION IN BRITAIN

Few who have not given attention to the question of the consumption of liquor of various kinds, including beer, in the United Kingdom of Great Britain, have any conception of the cost to consumers of intoxicants in the Kingdom.

A reference to a report just published by Mr. George B. Wilson, secretary of the United Kingdom Alliance, gives the drink bill of Great Britain and Ireland in the year 1915, a study of which will surprise most people. He points out that in 1874 the records show that the consumption of beer per head in the United Kingdom was 33.84 gallons, of spirits 1.25 gallons, and of wine 0.53 of a gallon. In 1913 the figures had declined to 27.30 gallons of beer, 0.69 of a gallon of spirits, and 0.25 of a gallon of wine. In 1914 the disturbing effect of the war began to be felt, and the consumption record showed 27.6 gallons per head of beer, 0.68 of a gallon of spirits and 0.23 of a gallon of wine.

Mr. Wilson, on the authority of the Government records, makes the following comparison of the quantities consumed in the United Kingdom in 1914 and 1915:

British spirits, gallons . . .	25,941,000	28,378,000
Other spirits, gallons . . .	5,753,000	6,642,000
Total, gals.	31,694,000	35,020,000
Beer, barrels . .	35,741,000	30,960,000
Wine, gals. . . .	10,686,000	10,226,000
Cider, etc. gals.	15,000,000	15,000,000

These figures do not include supplies to the army and navy outside of the United Kingdom stations. They show a decrease in the use of beer of 4,781,000 barrels, but an increase in the case of spirits of 3,326,000 gallons, of which nearly a million gallons was imported rum. Measured in pure alcohol, however, the total consumption was equal to 78,750,000 gallons in 1915, whereas in 1914 it was 85,000,000 gallons. The consumption per head in 1915 was put at 24.18 gallons of beer, of spirits at 0.76 of a gallon, and of wine at 0.22 of a gallon.

In money the outlay of 1915 was the greatest in the record. Mr. Wilson puts it at £55,156,000 for spirits, £116,100,000 for beer, £9,203,000 for wine, and £1,500,000 for cider, British wine, etc. The total comes to £181,959,000, which, assuming the population concerned to be 46,089,000, comes to £3 18s 11d per head, or £19 14s 7d per family of five persons. In 1914 the value of beverages consumed was calculated at £3 10s 10d a head or £17 14s 2d a family of five persons. Mr. Wilson puts the amount paid in taxes by the consumers as £60,300,000, or nearly one-third of the entire drink bill. Mr. Wilson, seeking the cause of the state of affairs noted where quite other conditions might have been expected, attributes it to the extraordinarily high rates of wages paid, to the large numbers of unsteady casual laborers who are earning double or treble their ordinary pay, to the abnormal development of the practice of treating, to the unprecedented disturbance of normal family life caused by the vast enlistment for the army, and to conditions of labor which have resulted in a marked and deplorable increase of drinking among women. The story is an old one, with variations. When money is easily earned, people spend it easily on liquor and other things.

With these records, is it any wonder that Lloyd George attempted a reform in the drink habits of the people, particularly at a period in the history of the Empire when all its monetary and other resources are required.

THE ALLIED WAR COUNCIL.

A conference of the Allies has just closed its sessions and war deliberations in Paris, France. This meeting of representatives from the nations now engaged in a life and death conflict with Germany, Austria, Turkey and Bulgaria, is without exception the most important since the war began. Among the representatives were Sir Edward Grey, Lord Kitchener, General Joffre, General Cadorna, Prince Alexander, General Sir Douglas Haig. Others were also present. Among them were the Prime Ministers of Britain, France, Italy, Belgium and Serbia, the personal representative of the Czar of Russia, the Ambassador of Japan, an ex-Premier of Portugal, and the heads of most of the allied war staffs.

This congregation of warriors and eminent statesmen represented no less than seven hundred and forty-two millions (742,000,000) of the earth's population, as follows:

British Empire	425,000,000
Russian Empire	171,000,000
France	40,000,000
Italy	35,200,000
Japan	53,000,000
Belgium	7,500,000
Serbia	4,500,000
Portugal	6,000,000

A contemporary aptly remarks: "Perhaps that council may rightly be called the greatest human council the earth has yet seen. Hague international conferences have included the representatives of a larger number of nations and of more people, but they were not representatives who had authority to do anything except to discuss and recommend."

Apart from war bearings, is there not, in this great council, war council though it be, a good promise for the future of civilization? The leaders of half the world, coming together in a joint cause in which under terrible stress their nations have striven together for a year and a half without friction, now conferring harmoniously, acting decisively, and parting cordially, constitute an unprecedented object lesson of the probability of the ultimate dominance of common sense and international co-operation among the nations of not only half the world, but the whole of it.

A SLANDER.

Carvell and the slandering combination of the present Opposition in Ottawa insinuated through a witness that Mr. H. S. Clements, M.P. for Comox-Atlin, had been paid by the British Columbia Harbor contractors $1,500 for his influence. Mr. Clements replied that "If Mr. F. B. Carvell or Mr. C. E. Mallory says I got one cent out of dredging contracts at Victoria, he is a liar and a slanderer." They will repeat it. There is no lie they will stick at if it will injure an opponent.

* * *

At a crowded meeting in the Town Hall, Bowmanville, Sunday night, which brought to a close a spirited three days campaign to recruit "B" Company of the 136th to strength, Major S. B. Scobell, in a rousing address said the present Minister of Militia was Canada's Kitchener, and that no other man in Canada could have accomplished what he had done, and that today, in spite of rumors, every officer in the militia believed in him and was behind him. He was sure that on his return Sir Sam would prove himself innocent of any knowledge of wrongdoing. These remarks were received with great applause.

Stratford Beacon: There are some sections of the province where toll gates are still in existence, and it is no wonder that Mr. Sam Clarke, member for West Northumberland, and Mr. L. P. Wigle, member for South Essex, made a protest in the Legislature for their abolition. They are so objectionable that they have been denominated "relics of barbarism." This was years ago, and still they linger, which shows how hard it is, once anything is established, however objectionable it may be, to get rid of it.

A speaker in Toronto called attention to the plague of flies in Egypt. These troublesome insects are not confined to that country, and now that warm weather has come their multiplication will commence wherever they can get suitable breeding places, which are accumulations of filth. Simply swatting them is of no use as long as any filth is allowed to remain about the premises. Therefore, get to work cleaning up as soon as possible.

A new source of revenue will be tapped by Mr. McKenna, Chancellor of the Exchequer, in his next budget speech. The little incomes are likely to be attacked and the big ones to be additionally taxed, according to advance information. The coins in the pockets which have so far escaped the eagle eye of the Chancellor must be rattling with apprehension.

Women are being employed on the Liverpool docks, handling cotton imports and other bagged goods. From this it would be an easy stage to looking after the heavier articles which make the 'longshoreman's task one of the most laborious. Eventually, unless peace comes soon, there may be female labor in the mines.

The Swedish Parliament yesterday passed the army bill appropriating 140,000,000 kronen. The money is to go largely for artillery and flying apparatus. The adoption of the measure was a foregone conclusion. Sweden is well within the European danger zone, which is growing in extent.

THE SHOPPING GIRL

She was a very particular miss.
She didn't like that; she didn't like this.
She pulled out the bottom garment first
And over the counter the rest dispersed.
She was only shopping.

She sampled the gloves, she looked at the hose;
She rumpled up all the new spring clothes;
She glanced at the ribbons; she fingered the lace.
On whatever she touched she left her trace.
She was only shopping!

And at last; when the clerks were nearly dead,
She actually bought a small spool of thread
And then, in a manner quite grand to see,
Said, "Send it up quickly, please, C. O. D."
She was only shopping!

DIABOLICAL OATS "FORK"

Richard Harding Davis Sends Evidence of Hun Atrocity

NEW YORK, April 3.—Richard Harding Davis has sent to the New York Times a "petite fourchette," or little fork, many of which, the French say, have been put into American oats and other horse feed by Germans or German sympathizers in America, to cause death by tearing the intestines of the animals of the Allied armies.

To the French eye the small fork might be likened to a diabolical torture prong, similar to those pictured in use by small caricatured devils. To the German eye it might be a dislodged part of a feed-mill mechanism. The "fourchette" is about three-quarters of an inch long, and breaks into two sharp prongs in its middle.

"Knowing to what lengths German 'propagandists' are going in this country," Mr. Davis writes, "I believe the charge made by the Matin is true. That in this land of the 'free and the brave' an act so cruel and cowardly is possible is disheartening and sickening. The only way to put an end to it is to uncover it."

He continues that this can be done "by giving the widest publicity to this torturing of dumb animals, and by warning Americans against the Germans, who are masquerading among us as American citizens."

It is said that "any quantity" of the forks could be obtained in France.

CHAPTER I.

A Hundred Thousand Years.

His handsome head, with its shock of black hair, roughly cropped between sharpened stones, was high held, the delicate nostrils questioning each vagrant breeze for word of Oo, hunter of men.

Now his trained senses catch the familiar odor of Ta, the great woolly rhinoceros, directly in his path, but Nu, the son of Nu, does not hunt Ta this day. Does not the hide of Ta's brother already hang before the entrance to Nu's cave?

No; today Nu hunts the gigantic cat, the fierce, saber toothed tiger, Oo, for Nat-ul, wondrous daughter of old Tha, will mate with none but the mightiest of hunters.

Only so recently as the last darkness, as, beneath the great, equatorial moon, the two had walked hand in hand beside the restless sea, she had made it quite plain to Nu, the son of Nu, that not even he, son of the chief of chiefs, could claim her unless there hung at the thong of his loin cloth the fangs of Oo.

"Nat-ul," she had said to him, "wishes her man to be greater than other men. She loves Nu now better than her life, but if love is to walk at her side during life, pride and respect must walk with it."

Her slender hand reached up to stroke the young giant's black hair.

"I am proud of Nu," she continued. "Among the young men of the tribe there is no greater hunter or no mightier fighter than Nu, the son of Nu. Should you, single handed, slay Oo before a grown man's beard has darkened your cheek none will be greater in all the world than Nat-ul's mate, Nu, the son of Nu."

The young man was still sensible to the sound of her soft voice and the caress of her gentle touch upon his brow. Even as these things had sent him speeding forth into the jungle in search of Oo while the day was still so young that the night prowling beasts were yet abroad, so they urged him forward deeper and deeper into the dark and trackless mazes of the tangled forest.

As he forged on the scent of Ta became stronger, until at last the huge, ungainly beast loomed large before Nu's eyes.

He was standing in a little clearing, in deep, rank jungle grasses, and had he not been head on toward Nu he would not have seen him, since even his hearing was far too dull to apprehend the noiseless tread of the cave man moving lightly up wind.

As the tiny, bloodshot eyes of the primordial beast discovered the man, the great head went down and Ta, ill-natured and bellicose progenitor of the equally ill natured and bellicose rhinoceros of the twentieth century, charged the little giant who had disturbed his antediluvian meditation.

The creature's great bulk and awkward, uncouth lines belied his speed, for he tore cyclonically down upon Nu and had not the brain and muscle of the troglodyte been fitted by heritage and training to the successful meeting of such emergencies there would be no tale to tell today of Nu, the son of Nu.

But the young man was prepared, and, turning, he ran with the swiftness of a hare toward the nearest tree, a huge, arboreal fern, towering upon the verge of the little clearing.

Like a cat, the man ran up the perpendicular bole, his hands and feet seeming barely to touch the projecting knobs marking the remains of former fronds which converted the towering stem into an easy stairway for such as he.

About Nu's neck his stone tipped spear hung by its rawhide thong down his back, while stone hatchet and stone knife dangled from his gee string, giving him free use of his hands for climbing. You or I, having once gained the seeming safety of the lowest fronds of the great tree, fifty feet above the ground, might have heaved a great sigh of relief that we had thus easily escaped the hideous monster beneath. But not so Nu, who was wise to the ways of the creatures of his remote age.

Not one whit did he abate his speed as he neared the lowest branch, nor did he even waste a precious second in a downward glance at his enemy. What need indeed? Did he not know precisely what Ta would do?

Instead, he swung, monkey-like, to a broad leaf, and, though the chances he took would have paled the face of a brave man today, they did not cause Nu even to hesitate as he ran lightly and swiftly along the bending, swaying frond, leaping just at the right instant toward the bole of a nearby jungle giant.

Nor was he an instant too soon. The frond from which he had sprung had scarcely whipped up from beneath his weight when Ta, with all the force and momentum of a runaway locomotive, struck the base of the tree head on.

The jar of that terrific collision shook the earth. There was the sound of the splintering of wood, and the mighty tree toppled to the ground with a deafening crash.

Nu from an adjoining tree looked down and grinned. He was not hunting Ta that day, and so he sprang from tree to tree until he had passed around the clearing and then, coming to the surface once more, continued his way toward the distant lava cliffs, where Oo, the man hunter, made his grim lair.

From among the tangled creepers through which the man wormed his sinuous way ugly little eyes peered down upon him from beneath shaggy, beetling brows and great fighting tusks were bared as the hairy ones growled and threatened from above. But Nu paid not the slightest attention to the huge, ferocious creatures that menaced him upon every hand.

From earliest childhood he had been accustomed to the jabberings and scoldings of the ape people, and so he knew that if he went his way in peace, harming them not, they would offer him no harm. One of lesser experience might have attempted to drive them away with menacing spear or well aimed hatchet and thus have drawn upon him a half dozen or more ferocious bulls, against which no single warrior, however doughty, might have lived long enough to count his antagonists.

Threatening and unfriendly as the apes seemed, the cave man really looked upon them as friends and allies, since between them and his own people there existed a species of friendly alliance, due, no doubt, to the similarity of their form and structure.

In that long gone age when the world was young and its broad bosom teemed with countless thousands of carnivorous beasts and reptiles and other myriads blackened the bosoms of its inland seas and filled its warm, moist air with the flutter of their mighty batlike wings man's battle for survival stretched from sun to sun—there was no respite.

His semiarboreal habits took him often into the domains of the great and lesser apes, and from this contact had risen what might best be termed an armed truce, for they alone of all the other inhabitants of the earth had spoken languages, both meager, it is true, yet sufficient to their primitive wants, and as both languages had been born of the same needs to deal with identical conditions there were many words and phrases identical to both.

Thus the troglodyte and the primordial ape could converse when necessity demanded, and as Nu traversed their country he understood their grumbling and chattering merely as warnings to him against the performance of any overt act. Had danger lurked in his path the hairy ones would have warned him of that, too, for of such was their service to man, who, in return, hunted the more remorseless of their enemies, driving them from the land of the anthropoids.

It's all very well to hope for a pull or a push along the road of life, but keep moving yourself every minute until help arrives.

A SPLENDID PROGRAMME

The Band of the 80th Battalion will give their farewell concert next Friday evening, April 7th, in Griffin's Opera House. This will be the last opportunity of hearing this famous band in concert work before their departure for Overseas. The citizens of Belleville are sure to turn out en masse at this concert to show their appreciation of the band's efforts in trying to have an organization that would bring honor to the City of Belleville and the Dominion. It is certain that those who attend will receive a rare musical treat and full value for their money. Remember your presence will be an inspiration to the boys and your money a help to the funds. The band will be assisted by Miss Gertrude Stares and Miss Victoria Stares. The sale of seats will commence at 9.00 o'clock Thursday morning at Doyle's Drug Store. Secure your seats early.

Alkali Makes Soap Bad For Washing Hair

Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali, which is very injurious, as it dries the scalp and makes the hair brittle.

The best thing to use is just plain mulsified cocoanut oil, for this is pure and entirely greaseless. It's very cheap, and beats the most expensive soaps or anything else all to pieces. You can get this at any drug store, and a few ounces will last the whole family for months.

Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in, about a teaspoonful is all that is required. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather, cleanses thoroughly, and rinses out easily. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and is soft, fresh looking, bright, fluffy, wavy and easy to handle. Besides it loosens and takes out every particle of dust, dirt and dandruff.

Rioting Soldiers Arrested at Winnipeg

WINNIPEG, Man., April 3.—Rioting took place last night on Main street in the neighborhood of the police station on Rupert street, following the arrest of a soldier by the police, which was resented by his comrades and men of other battalions. The trouble started at seven o'clock and went on intermittently until midnight, with the result that one soldier and one civilian are in the hospital with severe injuries and a number of persons, including innocent civilian lookers-on, received cuts and bruises, chiefly from batons of the police.

The crowd that gathered divided its sympathies between the soldiers and the police and finding expression some times in fisticuffs. Colonel Ruttan finally turned out three companies and confined the mob to cross streets until the score of men under arrest were taken away by officers. There was something in the nature of a resumption of rioting this afternoon around the police station, for which, apparently, the police themselves were to blame. Another display of force sufficed to quell the disturbance, and the military authorities have the situation well in hand. It is impossible that local troops will be confined to barracks for a few days.

Material damage was confined to broken glass.

GinPills FOR THE KIDNEYS

How They Cure

PLESSISVILLE, QUE.

"I suffered from Kidney Trouble for several years, and tried numerous remedies and doctors' prescriptions without permanent relief, my case being chronic. After seeing about Gin Pills, and as it is a well known fact that Juniper, without alcohol, is excellent for the Kidneys, I decided to try Gin Pills. One single pill gave me great relief. I have now taken four boxes of Gin Pills and find myself completely cured. No more bad humor—increase in weight—clear eyes—fresh color—more strength and vigor. This is what Gin Pills have done for me."

VIOLENT ATTACKS OF DYSPEPSIA

ST. JEAN DE MATHA, Jan. 27th, 1914.

"After suffering for a long time with Dyspepsia, I have been made well by "Fruit-a-tives." I suffered so much that at last I would not dare to eat for I was afraid of dying. Five years ago, I received samples of "Fruit-a-tives" and after taking them I felt relief. Then I sent for three boxes and I kept improving until I was well. I quickly regained my lost weight—and now I eat, sleep and digest well—in a word, I am fully recovered, thanks to 'Fruit-a-tives.'

Martin Re-Elected Montreal's Mayor

Wins by Handsome Majority of 9,819—Duncan McDonald Ranged Second In Race

MONTREAL, April 4.—Special—Mayor Mederic Martin was re-elected Mayor of Montreal for the next two years by a vote of 9,819 over Mr. Duncan McDonald, a retiring member of the Board of Control, while Ald. L. A. Lapointe, who has been for sixteen years in the City Council and was also a candidate for the Mayorality, lost his deposit.

Mr. E. W. Villeneuve was elected to the Board of Control at the head of the list, polling a heavy vote, while Mr. A. Guy Ross, the only English-speaking candidate of the entire list of nine, was also elected, with Mr. Tancrede Marcil running a close third. This makes the new Board of Control as follows: Messrs. Ainey, Cote, Villeneuve and Ross.

The three new faces in the Council are Lafortune, Lemaire and Brodeur. Five were elected by acclamation, as follows: Boyd, O'Connell, Rubenstein, Denis and Ward.

Veteran Methodist Called by Death

Passing of Rev. William Burns, a Pillar of Church in Pioneer Days

TORONTO, April 3.—In the death of Rev. William Burns, 28 Rolyat Avenue yesterday, the Methodist Church of Canada has lost one of its strongest pillars of pioneer days. The deceased gentleman, who was in his 89th year, spent a half century in active work prior to his retirement some twenty years ago. He was a native of Ontario of Irish descent and was born in Goulburn Township, near Ottawa. He was ordained in 1851, fourteen years before Confederation, after having served four years as a probationer. He held the pastorate of many churches throughout the province, his last charge being Wesley church, Dundas street. At one time he was President of the Bay of Quinte Conference. He is survived by a son, Rev. R. N. Burns, pastor of Berkeley Street Church and chaplain of the 124th Battalion, and two sisters, Mrs. Spencer and Mrs. (Dr.) Culbert, of Toronto.

C. N. R. BILLS AGAIN BEFORE THE HOUSE

Mr. J. D. Armstrong Has an Amendment to Propose in Commons

OTTAWA, April 3.—The contentious C. N. R. Bills will be before the House again to-day, and it is expected the Hydro supporters will again make an effort to talk them out. However, they will have a bigger task on their hands than they did Friday night, as the Bills may be discussed all day, whereas on Friday night there was but an hour's discussion possible.

Mr. J. E. Armstrong, member for East Lambton, one of the most vigorous of the Hydro champions, will likely propose an amendment to the Bills. If his amendment proves acceptable to the House that will end the discussion and the bills will go through as amended.

Mr. Armstrong's amendment is that the House accept a clause in the proposed railway Bill of two years ago which was not then passed to the effect that work on a railroad cannot proceed if it is not approved by the Minister of Railways.

Bilingual Question Before Legislature

TORONTO, April 3.—After remaining inactive throughout the greater part of the present session, Gustave Evanturel, who won his way back to the Legislature after a sudden exit from the House and from the Liberal party previous to the last General Election, has come to the fore on the order paper with a series of questions on the subject of his platform in that election—bi-lingualism.

Mr. Evanturel is taking the number of bi-lingual schools from which grants have been withheld by the Government, and concerning the Government's future intentions. He also wants to know if German is taught in the schools and if so, when this is going to be stopped.

In view of the circumstances surrounding his sudden exit from their party, and of the fact that so far they have not attempted to make any issue of bi-lingualism in the present session, it is doubtful if the Liberals will give any great degree of support to Mr. Evanturel in his essay.

$4,000,0000 Loan For Province

TORONTO, April 3.—A new $4,000,000 loan for the Province is forecasted in a notice of motion by Hon. T. W. McGarry on to-day's order paper, for public works and the covering of Provincial indebtedness.

Another notice of motion authorizes an annual $2,000,000 loan on account of war tax, and provides for the charge of six per cent. interest, on the amount of this tax remaining unpaid by municipalities after January 15th in each year.

Still another provides that the Province may increase its purchase of municipal drainage debentures from $200,000 to $400,000 and that the limit of investment of surplus of consolidated revenue fund in such debentures be raised from $350,000 to $500,000.

LEAFS STARTS WORK AT JERSEY TO-DAY

JERSEY CITY, N. J., April 4.—(Special.)—Practically all of the Toronto ball team reported to Manager Birmingham here yesterday afternoon. To-morrow morning it is hoped to hold the first real workout of the season. The park formerly used by the Jersey City International Leaguers is in fine condition, and the training arrangements are much better than could be had in any southern camp ever used by the Leafs.

In camp to-night are the following players:—Catchers, Kelley and Kritchell; pitchers, Herbert, Cook, Smith of New England League (a left-hander), McQuillan, Corbett, Lyons, Dye, June, all youngsters; infielders Mahoney (semi-pro.) Graham, Wheeler (Georgia League); outfielders, Brackett (with Albany last season), Reid (New England League, formerly of University of Maine), Trout, Becker (New England League), Layden (New York Americans), and Manager Birmingham.

Neal Ball continues to hold out in the hope that he will be released so as to manage the Bridgeport team of the New England League. Bert Wilson, Frank Truesdale, Blackburn and Hayden are expected to-morrow. Truesdale wintered in Texas and writes that he will report in condition and ready to get into the game immediately. Blackburn is also ready for the opening game. Catcher Hayden of the Portland club is coaching the Y. M. C. A. basketball team in that city and cannot get here for a few days.

Manager Birmingham is now negotiating for a couple of pitchers who are en route north from training camps with major league teams. He is very much elated over the prospects for a first team. He demands speed in all departments and feels that he has been successful in securing it. Including a number of youngsters who are trying out at their own expense, Birmingham will have 25 players in uniform to-morrow.

MY DEAR!

Are you aware that an ointment applied to the skin is absorbed into the system just as surely as medicine that is swallowed? It is! You see, therefore, how necessary it is we should use a pure ointment; and the purest you can get for yourself and your children is Zam-Buk

Dr. Scott, the great English analyst, says: "I have analysed Zam-Buk. It is composed entirely of herbal essences; is free from the harmful mineral drugs and animal fats found in ordinary ointments, and I have no hesitation in certifying its purity."

There is another reason why you should prefer Zam-Buk. It is of such a refined nature that it can penetrate to the very seat of skin diseases; whereas ordinary ointments, owing to their coarse ingredients, remain on the surface skin. Skin diseases, like plants, have their "roots." Zam-Buk can get down to the very root of the disease, kill all the germs and thus effect lasting cures. There is nothing like it for ending eczema, old sores, eruptions, or any of the skin diseases which occur at times in every family.

Proof. Mrs. A. J. Cameron of Melita, Man., writes: "My little son's head and hands were completely covered with eczema, and the agony he suffered with the burning and irritation was terrible. I tried numerous ointments and medicinal soaps, and he was under doctor's treatment for some time, but nothing would cure him. One day a friend said "Why don't you use Zam-Buk"? I procured some and commenced applying it. After a week's treatment I noticed an improvement, and perseverance with Zam-Buk resulted in a complete and permanent cure."

Mrs. Deason of Peterboro writes: "Zam-Buk healed a bad cut on my little girl's foot, caused by broken glass."

A PATRIOTIC SACRIFICE

Lord Shaughnessy Expresses Resignment to the Death of His Son on the Battlefield

MONTREAL, April 4.—(Special.)—When Lord Shaughnessy, President of the Canadian Pacific, was interviewed in connection with the death of his son, the Hon. A. T. Shaughnessy, who was killed at the front on Saturday, he said to his mother, myself and the family: "The sacrifice is indeed cruel, and almost overwhelming, but after all, we are only passing through the same sad experience as thousand of others in every portion of the Empire. He had a sweet wife and two little children, and everything in the world to live for, but he recognized his duty, and the attendant risk. If his example arouses a feeling of patriotism and responsiveness in those hundreds amongst us of military age, many of whom are without his family cares, who thus far through indifferance or because of bad leadership or petty local issues, have failed to assume their responsibility as citizens and subjects, we shall feel that there is additional compensation for the sacrifice."—J. W. Fox.

Fifty Per Cent Shoddy in Khaki

OTTAWA, April 4.—Special—Further details as to the alleged practice on the part of the Auburn Woollen Mills Co., Limited, of Peterboro', Ont., of employing shoddy in the manufacture of khaki garments for the Canadian militia department, was given before the Davidson War Contracts Commission by George Graves charged that the company had commenced making garments of about 50 per cent. shoddy almost as soon as their tender was accepted. Samplus of the cloth were produced by counsel to the commission, some of which he declared were 50 per cent. shoddy and others first-class.

Charles Burns, assistant director of contracts in the militia department, said that the department had purchased 225,000 yards of khaki cloth from the Auburn Mills since the beginning of the war.

The hearing will continue to-morrow.

Head Crushed Under Hammer

WELLAND, April 4.— Special—Giovanni Carrelli, an Italian, twenty-six years old, had his head crushed under a 1,300-pound steam hammer at the Billings-Spencer plant yesterday afternoon. Apparently, curiosity led to the fatality. The plant was not in operation, and Carrelli was engaged in carrying brick for the repair of the furnace. In passing the hammer he apparently placed his head in it, and at the same time placed his foot on the trip. His head was smashed flat.

CHEERFUL STOWAWAY-PIRATE NOW RESTS CALMLY IN CELL

Man Who, Single Handed, Captured British Steamer and Crew Of 56, Denies Patriotic Motives

LEWES, Del., April 3.—The young stowaway who, single handed, captured the British steamship Matoppo, forcing the captain and crew of 56 men to divert the vessel from its course and land here yesterday afternoon, rested calmly in his cell in the town jail here today, while the British consul-general at Philadelphia, and United States officials endeavored to fathom the motive of his alleged act of piracy.

Despite his assertions that he had not concealed any bombs on the Matoppo and that his threats to blow up the ship were merely to frighten the captain and crew into obeying his commands, there was still some doubt in the mind of Captain Bergner, and a thorough search of the cargo of barbed wire and farm implements will be made before the vessel proceeds on its voyage to Vladivostok.

The alleged pirate declares that his identity must remain a mystery. "I prefer to be known as Schiller," he said. "I may have several other names, but that is my own business."

Not a Patriot.

He denied that he was actuated by patriotic motives and asserted that he was after the 2,000 pounds which he believed was in the vessels safe when he made his bold attempt to capture the ship. In describing his experience he said:

"I spent three weeks in Hoboken preparing for this. I went along the docks buying drinks for the sailors and learning from them what ships were sailing with contraband.

"I lay in the life boat on the upper deck, waiting for the ship to sail, from Thursday until the following Wednesday night. For two days I did not eat I had only brought some sandwiches with me, but I stuck it out."

Although Dr. Messick, who examined the prisoner declares that he believed the man is mentally irresponsible. Captain Bergner says he is "far from being simple minded."

"This fellow may act the fool now," said Captain Bergner, " but he is far from being simple minded as you will see by what happened. We left New York Wednesday evening and had passed Sandy Hook light at 8 o'clock when I was in my cabin. I was bound for Vladivostok with railroad material for the Russian government and had a crew of 56 men, of whom only 14 were Englishmen. The others are Chinese.

"Hands Up."

"Suddenly a voice from the dark shouted: 'Hands up.' I turned and faced Schiller, with two large revolvers pointed at me. 'I have your vessel mined and planted with bombs.' Schiller said.

"'You do as I tell you or you and your whole crew and ship will go down in less than two minutes. You have 2,000 pounds sterling in your safe and I want every pound of it.' I protested that I had only ten pounds.

"'We will soon see what you have,' said Schiller and produced a paper chart of my ship, on which he indicated where the money was supposed to be. His chart of my ship was all right, but the cash box he demanded held only ten pounds instead of 2,000. Then he went over all the papers in the box.

"'Look here, captain, your papers say you carry barbed wire. That's contraband and I am within my rights in sinking you.' Schiller said.

"'Just then the second engineer came and Schiller covered him too with gun and ordered him to produce his papers and fasten me. Then he asked for the wireless and locking me in my cabin he went to the wireless station and covered the two operators before they could send out any message. Before he returned to my cabin he smashed the wireless apparatus.

Schiller Takes Charge

"He locked the wireless operators up with me and let the second engineer go out to tell the other officers and members of the crew what had happened and that he was in charge.

"Schiller then started on a round of the ship, always keeping everybody covered with his guns. He ransacked every cabin. He found two revolvers and one automatic, which he confiscated, together with ammunition. All the money he found he also stuffed in his pockets as well as the papers relating to the ship and its cargo.

"In the morning he joined me again in the cabin and ordered breakfast sent in. When the coffee was served he pushed his cup over to me and took mine. "Safety first, captain, you take my cup,' he said.

"After breakfast he ordered me on the bridge with him and gave orders where he wanted us to go. He wanted us to keep down the coast and close enough for him to pick a landing place. When he had made up his mind where to land he ordered the crew brought up to launch a lifeboat for him, and picked three men to man the boat. Then he picked out his hostages and set off for the beach. That was when I got busy with my signals to let the pilot boat and the shore stations know what was going on."

Women And A Baby Run War Hospital

Little One, Hurt by Shrapnel, Picked From Mud by Wounded Soldier, Now Has 20 Daddies

NEW YORK, April 2—Mrs. Charles B. Alexander threw open her house, 4 West Fifty-eighth Street, yesterday in the interest of the hospital work of the Allies, and Miss Kathleen Burke, Honorary Secretary of the Scottish Women's Hospitals, which have done service in Belgium, Serbia, Corsica, and France, gave some inside history of the organization and its work, telling more of the personality of the men it treats than details of activities.

Miss Burke is a trim little woman, with a fresh, youthful face, and a record as a student at Oxford and later at the Sorbonne. She did not give the impression of being a student, but of a healthy, up-to-date young woman, with warm sympathies for the men among whom she has worked since the war began, and she made her audience feel it, and brought tears to their eyes, though she was always cheerful and optimistic. She wore a white uniform suit, and three medals from different countries. She gave a little military salute to each person she met.

Some of her stories were of the first French unit started in 1914 at the Abbaye de Royaumont, near Compiegne. It is equipped to nurse 35 men, and has an X-ray ambulance, besides a fleet of motor ambulances driven by women chauffeurs. All the work of the Scottish Women's Hospitals is done by women from the head surgeon to the youngest orderly.

Call Chauffeurs Angels.

"The soldiers," said Miss Burke, "say that the women chauffeurs who drive our ambulances are angels taking them straight to heaven, and it must seem like heaven to them when they are washed and their wounds dressed and they are put to bed in fresh pajamas. How they love those pajamas! There must always be two pairs—one to wear at night and another for daytime.

"A little brook runs through our grounds, and there they go to fish, wearing their pajamas. The fish are never more than three or four inches long, but the anglers' code of honor demands that everything that is caught shall be eaten.

"The French are so good and kind to each other. One will ask another where he came from, and if he finds that his first cousin's wife's grandmother once lived in that place they are friends for life. And the men are so brave when having their wounds dressed. They never cry out, though sometimes they ask to have the sheets thrown over their faces. If the man who is suffering has made one of these intimate friends, the other will come and sit by him and give his hand, which the one in pain will squeeze hard in his effort not to make a sound.

"The men want to be very helpful to us, and you will see one man who has only his left hand holding a loaf of bread while one who has only a right hand cuts it.

Baby Owns The Hospital.

"We have a baby in our hospital, and, of course, it should not be there, for we are strictly a military hospital, but it is wonderful how the military officers when they visit us for inspection, manage never to see the baby. The little thing was picked out of the mud, wounded, by one of our men. He was wounded, too, but he stopped to save the baby, and we never shall know how it all happened, but as he was passed along the baby was passed with him, and finally it reached us. Its wound was dressed—it had been hit in the back by a shrapnel splinter, and now it rules the hospital. It wakens with a cry for its father in the morning and there are twenty fathers ready to look after it and the baby loves them all, but the man who found it more than any of them. When I think of that wounded miner stopping in his suffering to pick up that little body buried in the mud, I hope the child will grow up to the eternal honor of France and to the glory of its rescuer.

"The French are not as savage as their enemies. They are not fond of fighting for itself, and it is hard to make them say anything of the medals they have won. One man said: 'I am glad to have the medal, I am glad to do what I can, but fighting is not my business. I am a grocer.'

"If I should take you to the trenches you would not find the men talking of fighting but of their families. They put some Breton soldiers into one system of trenches and I found the other soldiers making fun of them. 'We shall have to widen the trenches to accommodate you the way you go wabbling around in them,' the jokers said.

Sardines Smell Like Home

"I found some of the Bretons cooking sardines, and I asked them why they did that when the sardines were already cooked. 'It smells so like home,' they said, and I suppose with the odor of the cooking fish they could see the coasts of their own part of France. One jolly little song the soldiers sang was: 'There is Nothing Finer Than the Potatoes at Home.'

"Behind the French lines there is more English khaki than French blue, and it is wonderful how all the children are attracted by the Tommie. The Tommies always have something interesting in their pockets to show the children, and wherever one is seen there is sure to be a line of children following, and the difference of language makes no difference to them.

"The children understand much about this war. In one French family there was a little boy who was very abstreperous and he would do nothing that his father told him to do. The latter, exasperated, said finally: 'Who commands in this family, you or I?' 'Neither,' said the child, triumphantly. 'General Joffre does.' "

Speaking of the pleasant relations between the French and the English, Miss Burke told of seeing an English officer, a nobleman, at one of the stations, and an old peasant woman brushing a little dust off his uniform with her hand. "When I get home I shall dismiss my valet and send for you," he told her. She did not understand him and he did not understand her, but that did not prevent a friendly comprehension.

Not Selfish in Her Giving

She told of another old peasant woman at the Post Office with a package to send to her son. Since the war officials have grown patient: "Mother," said this one, "you have put two numbers on your package. You should have only one, that of your son." "Yes," she returned, her voice breaking as she spoke, "but if he is not there then I want it to go to another."

Miss Burke asked for assistance for her work in the interest of the women abroad. "The men are their dearest possessions," she said, "and in giving for them you do more than you could do in any other way."

There was a generous return in pledges and money. W. Fellowes Morgan presided and introduced Miss Burke. The French Consul was present.

This hospital work was started by the Scottish Branch of the National Union of Woman Suffragists, a non-militant organization, which when the war began turned its funds and energies over to the work for the Government. Now suffragists and anti-suffragists work in it side by side.

"NO 'USBAND NOR NUTHIN'."

A considerable mingling of social classes occurs in our hill village, writes a correspondent, owing to the townfolks' practice of renting summer cottages in our midst and living there neighborly with the real working people for whom the places were built. In one such case the resident from town was an unmarried lady; the "genuine" cottager next door had a husband who, to put it mildly, was notoriously no blessing to her. Making a friendly call one day the wife was greatly impressed by the pleasant air of comfort and well being achieved in a cottage otherwise the duplicate of her own. She looked around with a mildly envious air and earnestly remarked on a little sigh, "Ee, Miss X—you ought to be 'appy—no 'usband nor nothin' "—Manchester Guardian.

WHY HE CHEERED THE KAISER.

Another story that is being told of the new recruits comes from Ireland. It is of a contingent of Irish recruits who were leaving their native village for the military center, amid cheers from the assembled villagers and the departing men. Suddenly one of the recruits called for "Three cheers for the Kaiser." When the contingent arrived at its destination this man was called up before the officer in charge and asked what he meant by such conduct. He was quite cheerful about it. "Och, colonel," he said, "you don't understand Ireland. If it hadn't been for the Kaiser there'd have been no blooming war."—Manchester Guardian.

No girl who is able to bring a man to the point cares for leap year privileges.

My Corns
Are Eternal
I've pared them a hundred times. I've tried a dozen treatments which they told me would end them.
I've infected my foot by close paring. I've made my feet sore with harsh applications.
But the corns remain, as kill-joys for every occasion. And I can't believe that anyone knows how to really end a corn.

My Corns
Years ago I read of Blue-jay. One night I applied it and the pain stopped at once. In two days the corn disappeared. Since then I have done that with every corn, the moment I felt it. Then I forgot it.
In all those years I have never suffered an hour. I have never had a full-grown corn. I say it is folly to have them.

SYNOPSIS OF COAL MINING REGULATIONS.

Coal mining rights of the Dominion, in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Yukon Territories, the North-West Territories and in a portion of the Province of British Columbia, may be leased for a term of twenty-one years at an annual rental of $1 an acre. Not more than 2,560 acres will be leased to one applicant.

Applications for a lease must be made by the applicant in person to the Agent or Sub-Agent of the district in which the rights applied for are situated.

In surveyed territory the land must be described by sections or legal sub-divisions of sections and in unsurveyed territory the tract applied for shall be staked by the applicant himself.

Each application must be accompanied by a fee of $5 which will be refunded if the rights applied for are not available, but not otherwise. A royalty shall be paid on the merchantable output of the mine at the rate of five cents per ton.

The person operating the mine shall furnish the Agent with sworn returns accounting for the full quantity of merchantable coal mined and pay the royalty thereon. If the coal mining rights are not being operated, such returns should be furnished at least once a year.

The lease will include the coal mining rights only, but the lessee may be permitted to purchase whatever available surface rights may be considered necessary for the working of the mine at the rate of $10.00 an acre.

For full information application should be made to the Secretary of the Department of the Interior, Ottawa, or to any Agent or Sub-Agent of Dominion Lands.

W. W. CORY,
Deputy Minister of the Interior.

SYNOPSIS OF CANADIAN NORTH-WEST LAND REGULATIONS.

The sole head of a family, or any male over 18 years old, may homestead a quarter section of available Dominion land in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta. Applicant must appear in person at the Dominion Lands Agency or Sub-Agency for the District. Entry by proxy may be made at any Dominion Lands Agency (but not Sub-Agency) on certain conditions.

Duties—Six months residence upon and cultivation of the land in each of three years. A homesteader may live within nine miles of his homestead on a farm of at least 80 acres, on certain conditions. A habitable house is required except where residence is performed in the vicinity.

In certain districts a homesteader in good standing may pre-empt a quarter-section alongside his homestead. Price, $3.00 per acre.

Duties—Six months residence in each of three years after earning homestead patent; also 50 acres extra cultivation. Pre-emption patent may be obtained as soon as homestead patent, on certain conditions.

A settler who has exhausted his homestead right may take a purchased homestead in certain districts. Price $3.00 per acre. Duties—Must reside six months in each of three years, cultivate 50 acres and erect a house worth $300.

The area of cultivation is subject to reduction in case of rough, scrubby or stony land. Live stock may be substituted for cultivation under certain conditions.

DEATH NOTICES

The funeral will take place from the residence of his daughter, Mrs. G. C. Shorey, 272 George St., Wednesday, April 5th, at one o'clock to Foxboro Methodist Church. Interment Foxboro cemetery.

IN and ABOUT THE CITY

CALL FOR POLICE

Last night the police answered two calls, resulting in the arrests of two parties both of whom were intoxicants.

COMMITTED TO JAIL

Michael Hayden, who has been in the city but a few days was arrested last night on a charge of drunkenness and disorderly conduct. Before Magistrate Masson this morning the accused was convicted and fined $10 and costs. Not having the necessary change to pay the fine Hayden was committed to jail for 21 days.

KNOCKED DOWN BY CAR

Between the hours of 12 and 1 o'clock to-day, a rather old gentleman named Hill, was knocked down by an automobile at the corner of Pinnacle and Mill Streets, but fortunately he sustained no serious injury. The car which struck Hill was not travelling at an excessive rate of speed, and the driver was not apparently to blame for the accident as Hill crossed the street despite a warning from the driver of the car.

NEW AGENT SELECTED

At a meeting of the members of the Children's Aid Society of Belleville, held yesterday afternoon, the appointing of an agent was considered and disposed of. The result was that Capt. Ruston, who has been for some time the commander of the Salvation Army Corps in this city, was selected for the position. That Capt. Ruston will make an efficient officer there is not the slightest doubt and the Society is to be congratulated upon securing such an efficient official.

A WILD SOLDIER

Private A. Sissen, a member of the 155th Batalion, was last night placed under arrest on a charge of intoxication and drawing a razor threatening to do grievous bodily harm. The accused was taken in custody at his place of domicile on Wharf Street, as the result of a call. When the police authorities attempted to take him he drew a razor and not only made threats of a serious nature, but defied arrest. He was overpowered and taken to the police station. It is alleged that Sisson used language of a most disgraceful nature. This morning Magistrate Masson remanded the accused to jail for a week, as the authorities were not prepared to proceed with the case.

CALLED BY DEATH

PRIVATE ALDIE CAMPBELL

Private Aldie Campbell, a member of the 80th Battalion of Belleville, died last night from pneumonia at the General Hospital. Deceased is a young unmarried man of twenty-two years of age, and his home previous to his enlistment was in Haliburton.

The remains were taken to the Belleville Burial Co.'s undertaking parlors where the body was prepared for burial.

Instructional drill at the Armouries to-night at 8 o'clock. This is the night to comence drill if you have never drilled before and if you are a little "rusty", come along and you will get a little "polish." Squad drill and rifle exercise to-night. Platoon drill and company drill on Friday night. Give up your amusements for the present, at least one night a week, and come down to drill. We know it is a sacrifice, but every one has to sacrifice something. All men who are physically fit not going for Overseas Service are earnestly urged to take up drill and be intelligently capable of being a better defense when called upon to protect your mothers, your wives and your children.

SAW THRILLING SIGHT

Eye-Witness Tells of Attack on Giant Ship of the Air

LONDON, April 3.—An eye-witness of the Zeppelin in flight and its encounter with anti-aircraft guns describes the scene as a most thrilling one. The Zeppelin, which appeared to be of a larger type than that of previous visitors, flew at a considerable height. The glimmer of its surface as it passed overhead attracted the attention of hundreds of persons who came out of doors to gaze upward despite the instructions given to remain under cover. The searchlights that played on the raider illuminated it effectively and shells from the guns that opened fire could be seen bursting all round it. One gunner claimed that he had secured a hit, the Zeppelin thereupon being seen to turn about and proceed towards the coast apparently damaged.

In one town eleven bombs were dropped by a Zeppelin without causing any loss of life or property.

ROMAN CATHOLIC BILLY SUNDAY IS AMBITION OF FRANK MORAN

Man Who Failed to Beat Willard to Take up Preaching Game After He Leaves the Ring—Admits he is a Great Talker

NEW YORK, April 3.—"Don't tell anybody, but I'm going to be a Roman Catholic Billy Sunday when I'm through fighting."

The speaker was none other than Frank Moran, the Pittsburg blonde, who failed to down Jess Willard.

"Listen, if I have to say it myself, "I'm a great talker. Yes sir, the greatest ever. Benny Kauff has nothing on me. Once I did a ten-minute monologue without thinking about it. Well, believe me, old boy, it went over great."

I asked Frank if he was kidding about the Billy Sunday stuff.

"Kidding, nothing," he replied.

"On the square, I wouldn't set out to be a Billy Sunday if I didn't believe in it. I raised h—— for a mighty long time. I guess I did about everything that a man can do. And I never got anything out of it. I didn't have any friends or money, and I got sick about a hundred times. Then I stopped it. I've made all my money since then. Now I've got all sorts of friends, diamonds, an auto, an Ethiopian valet, and plenty of the old dough—your best pal.

"Don't you think it'll be something odd for a prizefighter to go out and do a Billy Sunday? Billy was a great ball player in his day. He has done a lot of good with his evangelical work. I know I'll make a hit with my ideas gathered from a kid up from the teachings of the Catholic Church.

"I wouldn't try to convert any one. I wouldn't care what a man believed, but I'd try to make everybody live up to the things they believed. I don't mind a Jew; but if a man's a Jew I want him to burn his candles on Friday night. I'd never ask a guy to hit the trail either. The only people who hit the trail are bugs and half wits. They're like the nuts who stand on the street corners and sing hymns. Eighty-five per cent. of them are mentally deficient.

"Any man who decided he'd live straight could just write me a letter and say that he was going to do the right thing. There's a lot of money in the Billy Sunday game, too. But I shall not stop fighting until I have an assured income of $3000 a year.

"A layman can do things that a priest can't. Our priests won't go on to the street corners and into circus tents to drag people into church. They don't have to. But I could do just the sort of thing that Billy Sunday does, and do it better. He's nothing but a ball player, and I am a fighter. Do you know what that means? To the kids who hang around street corners in the evening a prizefighter is the greatest thing on earth. I remember once I waited nine hours to see Fitzsimmons. He got out of a carriage and walked into a house; all I saw was a fur coat and a tight fur hat on his little pin head; but I went around for a week saying, 'I saw Fitzsimmons'.

"Kids think that a prizefighter is the greatest thing on earth. And those kids who hang around street corners need somebody to tell them that they can't get anywhere by being bums. The only reason they go after drink is because all the people they look up to go after drink."

Two Killed When Street Car Took "Y."

MONTREAL, April 3.—One man was killed and another man died yesterday as a result of an accident that happened in Notre Dame street, St. Henry, on Saturday. Sylvio Fortin, sixty years of age, of 66 St Ferdinand street, St. Henry, was killed instantly, while Albert Lepine, forty-seven years of age, of 78 St. Margaret street, St. Henry, was taken to the General Hospital suffering from internal injuries, from which he died last night. Jean Baptiste Daoust, forty years of age, of 468 Prudhomme avenue, Cote des Neiges, was taken to his home suffering from cuts on the hands, face and head.

The death of Fortin and the injury of the other two was due to the rear truck of a street car of the Notre Dame street line leaving the main track and running in on the switch of the "Y" between St. Henry square and St. Ferdinand street. Fortin and Lepine were on the sidewalk, on the west side of Notre Dame street, and as the rear end of the street car swung in over the sidewalk they were struck and crushed against the front of the tailoring establishment of B. Dufort, 1921 West Notre Dame street. Daoust was inside the store, getting a receipt from the man in charge, when the end of the street car swung in and smashed the plate glass in the window.

Corner-Stone For Salvation Army College

Commissioner Richards Foresees Host of Self-Sacrificing Workers

TORONTO, April 3.—In the presence of a large and representative gathering Commissioner W. J. Richards on Saturday afternoon laid the corner-stone of the Salvation Army's new training College on Davisville avenue, which is being erected as a memorial to the late General Booth. In laying the corner-stone Commissioner Richards spoke of the various departments of social and industrial education planned by the college. "We mean missionary enterprise,' he said, "and from this college will go forth a host of self-sacrificing missionaries to all parts of the world.'

The Booth Memorial College, when completed, will be one of the most up-to-date institutions of its kind in the country. The estimated cost of the structure is $150,000, and the site comprises eight and a half acres, purchased for $30,000. The building will be four stories high, including the basement, with two wings at the back containing class-rooms and quarters for cadets. Between these two wings a large lecture room will be located, while the reception hall, offices and dining-room will be situated at the front.

THE LATE S. G. BEATTY

Had Long Been Indentified With Business Life of Toronto

(Mail and Empire, April 3)

The funeral of the late S. G. Beatty will take place this afternoon from the residence, 168 Isabella street to the Mausoleum.

The late Mr. Beatty died suddenly at Los Angeles on March 27th. Deceased was born in the Township of Huntingdon, North Hastings, on July 18th, 1843. He was a son of the late William Beatty. He went to Belleville in 1862 and founded the Ontario Business College, the first of its kind in Canada. He wrote many educational works, including the Canadian Accountant. He came to Toronto and became president and manager of the Canada Publishing Company. Mr. Beatty retired from active business life in Toronto. He was vice-president of the Manufacturers Life Insurance Company and director of the Canadian Mortgage and Investment Company.

Mr. Beatty took a deep interest in outdoor sports, particularly shooting and fishing, and was a member and a founder of a number of shooting and fishing clubs, including the Brookdale Trout Club and Tadenac Club, in Georgian Bay. He was also a member of the National Club and Granite Club. He married A[illegible] Eastwood, daughter of the late [illegible] Eastwood, who survives him, together with three sons and two daughters, the sons being, Harold Toronto; Nelson, Belleville and Stanley, with the Royal Flying Corps, overseas. The daughters are, Mrs. W. B. Macdonald, Upland, California; Mrs. J. C. Boekh, Toronto. Deceased was a member of Sherbourne Street Methodist Church.

THE KING OF ITALY APPOINTS A NEW MINISTER OF WAR

SUPERBLY EXPERT IN FALSIFYING

Desire to Retain Confidence of Home Masses Puts Germany at Wit's End

Canadian Press Special.

BERLIN, April 5.—Chancellor Von Bethmann Hollweg, addressing the Reichstag to-day said since his last address to that body, Serbia, Montenegro and Albania had come into possession of Austria. The allies' enterprise at the Dardanelles had ended in failure, the British had failed to relieve Kut-el-Amara, the Russians after occupying Erzerum had been checked, and their attacks in East Galicia as well as Italian attacks against Isonzo positions had been beaten back. Moreover, the advantages gained one after another in the battle of Verdun had proved that the enemies' reports that Germany had expended her military forces were erroneous.

The Chancellor indicated that any suggestions of peace on the basis of the destruction of the Russian military power would make possible only one answer. "The German sword." The Chancellor stated that if Germany's adversaries desired to continue the slaughter of men and the devastation of Europe, the guilt would be theirs, and that Germany would have to stand it as men

NORWAY WILL DEMAND FULL COMPENSATION

LONDON, April 4.—A Copenhagen despatch to the Exchange Telegraph Company says that the Norwegian Government has requested the German Government to investigate whether German submarines were responsible for the torpedoing of the large number of Norwegian ships which have been destroyed within the past few days. If it is proved that German submarines were responsible Norway will demand full-compensation. Investigations on the part of Germany regarding other Norwegian vessels which have been torpedoed since the submarine campaign was intensified, have not yet concluded, the despatch adds.

MOTION BY LAURIER IS LOST ON DIVISION

Opposition Leader's Resolution For Shell Enquiry by Parliamentary Committee was Voted Down--Majority Against, Thirty-Eight

OTTAWA, April 5.—(Special.)—Following the Government announcement of a thorough investigation of the Kyte charges by a Royal Commission, the Laurier resolution calling for a general investigation of the work of the Shell Committee by a Parliamentary committee, was rejected in the House to-night on a vote of 82 to 44, a majority of 38.

Four members on the Conservative side of the House voted with the Opposition: Mr. W. F. Maclean, of South York; Hon. Andrew Broder, of Dundas; Mr. A. A. Mondou, of Yamaska, and Paul E. Lamarche, of Nicolet.

Mr. Broder had previously made a brief statement, in which he denied having given an interview regarding his intentions. He added that he was glad to see the Government going as far as it could, but said that he wished to go farther, and would support the Laurier resolution. Mr. Broder is a fellow-townsman of Colonel J. W. Allison.

Neither Mr. Maclean, Mr. Mondou nor Mr. Lamarche explained in the House the reason for his vote.

The final stage of the debate brought no new developments, so far as the Opposition was concerned, despite the diligent circulation of rumors that more "bombs" were to be dropped. Two Liberal members took part in the discussion to-day, Mr. E. M. MacDonald, of Pictou, and Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the latter exercising his right as mover of the resolution to deliver a second speech, in which he persisted in his demand for an enquiry by a Parliamentary Committee in preference to the testing of the Kyte charges by a judicial commission.

Earlier in the afternoon the Liberal leader had taken occasion to dispose of a report, widely disseminated by his own press, to the effect that he had been called in conference by the pose of a report, widely disseminated I should follow in connection with a certain investigation.". The report, said Sir Wilfrid, was without foundation.

SPANISH AND BRITISH STEAMERS SUNK BY GERMAN SUBMARINES

Canadian Press Special.

LONDON, April 5.—The Spanish steamer, Vigo, eleven hundred tons, was sunk in the Bay of Biscay, by a German submarine. The crew set adrift in a boat, were later picked up by the British steamer Polo, and taken to Gibraltar.

The British steamship Bendew, was also sunk and one of her crew lost. The Dutch schooner Elsina Helfa, was torpedoed yesterday in the North Sea.

IS A COLONEL NOW.

KINGSTON, April 5.—(Special.)—The rank of Lieutenant-Colonel has been given to Major R. J. Gardiner, A.D., M.S. of the 3rd Division, who succeeded the late Lieut.-Col. H. R. Duff.

ONTARIO TEMPERANCE GIVEN SECOND READING

No Division on Question—Eloquent Plea by Premier Hearst—Notable Address Urges Unity of Action

TORONTO, April 5.—Special—At 11 o'clock last night after a debate that had been in progress for nearly six hours the Ontario Temperance Act, the first direct prohibitory legislation this province has ever had, passed the crucial stage in the Legislature, and is now ready for consideration of its details in committee. Second reading was given the bill without a division of the House, and without even a suggestion of opposition from any source. There were in the House at the time several members who had earlier in the session declared that they would oppose the bill, but in the face of the general approval, and in response to the moving appeal that Hon. W. H. Hearst made for unity of action, and for adoption of the bill without a division, not one of them raised his voice against the measure.

The adoption of the motion for second reading was greeted with prolonged applause, in which both sides vied with one another.

It was a notable day for the temperance cause in Ontario, and when Hon. Mr. Hanna rose to move the second reading and fire the opening gun of the debate the galleries of the Legislative Chamber were crowded with interested spectators. They were not disappointed, for the afternoon discussion was made up of vigorous speeches by both Hon. W. H. Hearst and N. W. Rowell, K.C., in addition to Mr. Hanna. The effort of the Prime Minister was a splendid one, powerful and sustained. He spoke for over an hour and a half without a sign of weakening, without a single break to remind the House of the fact that not two months ago he was on the sick list, and not expected to stand the strain of a hard session.

The Government leader based his demand for support upon patriotic grounds, upon the urgent necessity for doing everything that would conserve the national resources and strengthen the fighting forces of the Empire in the great war. He declared frankly that but for the war the Prohibition Bill would not now be before the Legislature.

Mr. Hearst paid heed to the protests from within the Conservative party, and in referring to statements made to him that his course meant his political downfall he declared his readiness to accept whatever came to him, secure in the knowledge that he had done his full duty as he saw it in a time of crisis. He was confident, however, that the people of the province when the proper time came, would declare that the Government had taken the right and patriotic course.

NAVAL ENGAGEMENT IN THE CATTEGAT?

COPENHAGEN, April 5.—(Special.)—A naval engagement of some kind took place Monday in the Cattegat, according to despatches received here from Kullen, Sweden.

About noon, the despatches say, a terrific cannonade was heard from the sea, and two hours later a German torpedo boat, badly damaged, was towed past Helsingborg.

HONORABLY ACQUITTED

Ex-Conductor Reynolds, Absolved of Theft Charge.

NORTH BAY, Ont., April 4.—This an anti-aircraft gun which recently the Spanish River wreck fame, was honorably acquitted by Mr. Justice Latchford on the alleged charge of theft of moneys from the C. P. R. The case created considerable interest here, as Mr. Reynolds has been a respected citizen of the town for twenty-five years, and in all that time was in the employ of the C. P. R.

Disallowance Of Ontario Act Is Not Likely

Sir Robert Borden Has Intimated Such a Stand in Speeches

OTTAWA, April 4.—The Government will have to give a formal decision this month whether the much-discussed Act of the Ontario Legislature, around which centres the bilingual agitation, is to be disallowed. The law provides that regarding any Act of a Legislature, the Federal Government may exercise the prerogative of disallowance one year after a copy of the Act is forwarded to Ottawa.

The enactment which created a Government Commission in Ottawa to supplant the old School Board incidentally validated the famous Regulation 17. It was received by the Secretary of State on April 27 last. As a year is allowed for possible disallowance, the matter will have to be disposed of before the 28th instant.

Promoters of petitions asking disallowance claim that the signatures exceed half a million. They are being received by the Government in bundles. The propaganda has been directed in Ontario by the French Educational Association and in Quebec by a similar organization and St. Jean Baptiste Societies.

In replies which Sir Robert Borden has made to a local deputation and to letters of individuals, the Premier has indicated, as he puts it, that he will not be a party to any constitutional violation by the Dominion.

The French-Canadians claim that Regulation 17 violates their rights, but the Constitution gives the Provinces control in matters of education, and it is believed that the Premier means that the Government at Ottawa will not interfere with or infringe upon the Act of the Ontario Government.

The judgement of the Ontario Appellate Court yesterday in upholding the law as intra vires increases the improbability of Federal disallowance.

The judgment will permit of an early appeal to the Privy Council, whose finding, of course, will be conclusive.

The Federal Government may be disposed to aid in an amicable adjustment of the trouble, if such is possible, but there is little idea of the law being disallowed.

Auto Magnate In a New Role

Henry Ford Leads in Michigan Presidential Reference Primary

DETROIT, April 4—With returns received from 205 of the 215 precincts in the city of Detroit and approximately one-sixth of the voting districts in the state outside of Detroit, Henry Ford led Senator William Alden Smith by approximately 3,400 votes, as a result of yesterday's balloting in the Republican presidential preference primary. Figures available were Henry Ford, 16,508; Senator Smith, 13,138; Wm. G. Simpson, Detroit, 2,083.

Fuse Contract Reported Cancelled

OTTAWA, April 5—Special—A New York report was in circulation tonight that the contracts placed by the Shell Committee with the International Arms and Fuse Company and the American Ammunition Company had been cancelled. It could not be confirmed this evening.

It is understood, however, that the contract made on July 15, 1915, with the Edwards Valve Company, of Chicago, for a quantity of cartridge cases have been cancelled some time ago for non-delivery.

A lot of those German guns that will shoot from Europe into England would be good things to have on the Mexican border. But perhaps they are there. Pointed this way.—N. Y. Telegram.

DEMAND RESIGNATION OF SIR GEORGE E. FOSTER

North Toronto Residents Claim Member Shows Little Interest In Constituency—Petition Circulated—Mayor Church Requested to Call Public Meeting and Thresh Out The Matter

TORONTO, April 5.—(Special.)—Yesterday a number of prominent residents of North Toronto called upon Mayor Church and presented a petition requesting him to summon a public meeting for the purpose of demanding the resignation of Sir George E. Foster. These residents claim that when the Canadian Northern Railway bills were being considered at Ottawa the member for North Toronto showed little interest in his constituency.

Mayor Church pointed out that the petition was insufficiently signed. He also intimated that personally he did not wish to interfere in the matter. "As a cabinet minister Sir George Foster is a very busy man," said his worship. "It is true that the Metropolitan Railway vitality affects his constituents in North Toronto, but it is very probable that with the war Sir George had other matters to attend to at the time."

The residents are circulating the petition extensively through North Toronto and are confident of obtaining many signatures.

GENERAL CADONNA BELIEVES VERDUN WILL NEVER BE TAKEN

Canadian Press Special.

PARIS, April 5.—The Germans have abandoned all hope of taking Verdun, and are continuing their attacks to reassure their own population and prevent a French offensive elsewhere, is the opinion of a senior officer attached to the War Office staff.

A Petit Journal despatch from Udine, Italy, says it is the positive opinion of General Cadonna, after his visit to France and an inspection of the front, that Verdun will never be taken.

Brutal Attack

On Young Man Who Failed to Pay For Meal

KINGSTON, April 4.—For a brutal attack on a young citizen, who was under the influence of liquor, Christopher Derbyshire, a soldier hailing from Toronto, was fined $10 and costs, at the Police Court on Monday morning. The citizen was taxed $1 and costs for being drunk.

The young man, who had been drinking, was served with a meal in Beefsteak Jack's restaurant. He left without paying.

"Get that man for me," one of the waitresses called out to the Toronto soldier, who happened to be in the restaurant.

Derbyshire bolted out of the restaurant, and in a short time he brought back the young man, who had skipped out without paying. The young fellow had both of his eyes in deep mourning as a result of the attack made on him by the soldier. Constables Bateson and Jenkins arrested Derbyshire.

U. S. CAVALRY DISPERSE MORE OF VILLA'S MEN

SAN ANTONIO, Texas, April 5.—(Special.)—Gen. Funston to-day received word of another fight between United States troops and Villistas in Mexico. The Americans engaged were a squadron of the 10th Cavalry under Col. W. C. Brown.

Between thirty and forty Villistas had been killed in the combat and as many horses captured, and that the detachments of the cavalry, which engaged the Villistas were still in pursuit of the flying bandits, racing them through the San Antonio country of Chihuahua. There were no American casualties.

KILLED BY FALLING DOWN CELLAR-STAIRS

Mrs. Butler Had Been Resident of Pittsburg For Twenty Years

LONDON, Ont., April 4.—Mrs. Sarah Butler, mother of Major Butler, of the 70th Battalion, was killed last night by falling down the cellar. The deceased was a resident of Pittsburg for 20 years and came here recently with her son, who was a newspaper man in Pittsburg. She was 85 years old, and came to this city in 1871.

ITALY HAS NEW MINISTER OF WAR

Canadian Press Special.

LONDON, April 5.—Despatches from Rome say the King has accepted the resignation of General Zapelli, Minister of War and appointed General Paolo Morone to succeed him. One report says Zupelli resigned on account of ill health, another that he wished to serve at the front.

HAMILTON STARTS MUNICIPAL BAKERY

HAMILTON, Ont., April 4.—The action of the bakers in raising the price of bread from 6 to 7 cents a loaf and refusal to back down in the face of a storm of opposition, will result in the establishment here of a municipal bakery, the first of its kind in Canada. Announcement to this effect was made by Mayor Walters today. Bread will be sold at not higher than six and, probably five cents.

MONTREAL MAN BRINGS DOWN ZEPP.

Count Jacques De Lesseps, Well Known in Canadian Mercantile Metropolis

Canadian Press Special.

MONTREAL, April 5.—Count Jacques De Lesseps was in charge of anti-aircraft gun which recently brought down a Zeppelin in France. This information was received by friends of De Lesseps here to-day.

FRENCH DEFEAT HUNS IN THRILLING AIR FIGHT

Three Aeroplanes of the Enemy Brought to the Ground Riddled With Bullets—French Pilots Return to Headquarters Without Suffering Damage—Allied Bombardment Explode Two Mines

Canadian Press Special.

PARIS, April 5.—(Afternoon statement). In Argonne there has been a combat with hand grenades in the sector between Bolante and Fille Morte. We caused the explosion of two mines which damaged an enemy trench. To the west of the Meuse last night passed relatively calmly. To the east of the river we took part in several engagements, in the course of which we made progress in connecting trenches north of Caillette wood.

In the Woevre district there has been an intense bombardment in the sector betwlen Moutainville and Chatillon. The Germans threw into the river Meuse north of St. Mihiel twenty-two mines. These floated down and were exploded by us without causing any damage.

In Lorraine district the Germans, after a violent bombardment of our positions between Arracourt and St. Martin, delivered several small infantry attacks against various points in this sector. The enemy was everywhere thrown back by our machine guns and our artillery.

In the Vosges a reconnaissance in force on the part of the enemy who were endeavoring to reach our trenches to the southeast of Celles, was easily dispersed.

In the region of Verdun French aeroplanes on April 4th engaged in no fewer than fifteen aerial combats, during the course of which a double motored German machine was brought down near the Pond of Hauts Fourneaux. Another German machine fell down near the wood of Pilly and a third German machine fell vertically to the ground. All the French pilots got back without suffering damage.

Thurlow Residence Visited by Burglar

Some time during last night the residence of Mr. Arthur Vermilyea, situated in the 4th concession of Thurlow Township, was burglarized and valuables were taken. Mr. and Mrs. Vermilyea are at present in the west and the house was closed up. This morning a door was noticed open, and upon investigation by relatives the burglary was discovered. When the couple were married they were presented with a handsome and valuable cabinet of silver, and every article was taken out of the cabinet. At present it is not known what else was taken. Evidently the thief or thieves effected an entrance by forcing the door. The case has been placed in the hands of the county police.

DISORDERLY CONDUCT

A soldier named Joseph Foley, was this morning before Police Magistrate Masson, and found guilty of being drunk and disorderly. A fine of $10 and costs was imposed upon him, which was paid.

CALL FOR POLICE

At about 11 o'clock last night the police answered a call to Bleecker avenue, it being alleged that a soldier had followed a young woman, and she was compelled to take refuge in a house owing to his actions. There was no sign of the soldier when the police arrived upon the scene.

REMAINS SENT HOME

The remains of Private Campbell of the 80th Battalion, who died here on Monday evening, were last night taken to Renfrew, his former home, for interment. The mother of the deceased came here and accompanied the body to Renfrew. A number of the officers and members of the 80th Battalion escorted the remains to the station here.

HIS DEMISE SUDDEN

Last night the body of William Titterson arrived here from Field, Northern Ontario, where he was engaged in a lumber camp. On Saturday last his demise was sudden. Deceased was 33 years of age and unmarried. Relatives reside in this vicinity. The remains were taken to Tickell & Sons undertaking establishment here and this morning a burial service was conducted by Rev. J. N. Clarry, pastor of Holloway Street Methodist Church, after which interment took place at the Carrifton burying ground.

Keep April 7 Open For 80th Band Concert

The Band of the 80th Overseas Battalion, C.E.F., have had to cancel their engagements to play in Massey Hall, Toronto, and a three days engagement in Ottawa, also several engagements at other points, as they expect to proceed overseas at a very early date.

They will play their farewell concert in Belleville on Friday evening, April 7th. A crowded house is sure to greet this famous band of artists. By special request the band will repeat the popular overture "William Tell" by Rossini. A great musical treat is in store for those who attend. Misses Gertrude Stares and Victoria Stares will be the soloists. Miss Victoria Stares' numbers will be "A Pastoral," by Veracini, and "Spring", by Carey. Miss Gertrude Stares will sing "Love's Greeting," by H. Lane Wilson and "One Fine Day," from "Madame Butterfly," by Puccini.

Band Sergt. Harold Cumming will play as a cornet solo Saint Saens' famous song, "Softly Awakes my Heart," from "Samson and Delilah." The sale of seats opens tomorrow morning at Doyle's Drug Store at 9 o'clock.

LOCAL LEGAL

April 5th, 1916.

Way vs. Shaw—E. G. Porter, K.C., for plaintiff; W. C. Mikel, K.C., for defendant. Action by administrator of William E. Way (deceased) to set aside an alleged mortgage from deceased to defendant for $625.

Judgment. I find that the documents purporting to be signed by deceased were in fact signed by him, so there will be judgment for the defendant dismissing the action with costs but only up to and including the 9th day of December, 1915. There will be no costs payable by either party to the other on any proceedings in this action since the 9th of December, but the $50 paid into court by defendant as a condition of opening the case and putting in further evidence shall belong to and be paid out to the plaintiff. "Twenty days" stay.

This was one of the hardest fought and also most interesting cases in the County of Hastings in years. A mortgage for $620.00 dated June 21st, 1912, purporting to have been made by the late Wm. E. Way to John Shaw of Tweed, but was not registered till the 21st of May, 1915, three days after death of Way.

Way's will made no reference to the mortgage and it was contended by the representatives of the Way estate that Way did not get the mortgage money, and that it was not his signature to the mortgage, and an expert witness was called who swore that the signature to the mortgage was not Way's writing. The party named as the witness to the mortgage, swore that he had not been present when Way signed any mortgage, and that he had not signed the mortgage as witness. The Commissioner who is said to have sworn the affidavit of the witness, could not remember the transaction and would not swear whether the affidavit bore his signature or not. These points were contradicted. The case has been pending for some time before the courts but the above judgment is a complete vindication for Mr. Shaw.

Procured Liquor For A Soldier

Fine of $300 and Costs Imposed on Stephen Lynch For Offense—Goes to Jail

Before Police Magistrate Masson this morning Stephen Lynch, of this city was charged with selling liquor without a license to a soldier. When asked if he was guilty of the offence the accused admitted that he had procured a flask of liquor for a soldier after 6 o'clock in the evening, but said he did not get any reward nor was promised anything.

Private A. Lapine, being sworn stated that he gave the accused $1.00 with which to purchase a flask of liquor. Accused purchased a 50 cent flask. Witness asked where the change was, and Lynch said, "Here it is; but you know I should have something for procuring the liquor." Witness gave the accused back the 50 cents. The flask still contained liquor when taken away from Lapine by the police. The accused had bought whiskey before for witness.

Military Police Chant testified that he saw Private Lapine and the accused come out the back door of a hotel. Witness saw the accused go into a liquor store and when he came out witness followed him and saw him hand the flask of liquor to Lapine, and also saw the exchange of money. Witness then took the accused in charge and conducted him to the police station. Lynch said he did not think he was doing anything wrong in the transaction. When searched at the police station 50 cents was taken from the pocket of the accused.

The result of the investigation was that Lynch was found guilty and fined $300 and costs or in default three months in jail at hard labor. Being unable to pay the fine the accused went to jail.

MELVILLE.

April 5.

The maple sugar season has begun, and those who are fortunate enough to possess what the early settlers termed a "sap bush" are busy making this most delectable sweet.

Mr. Orville Locklin and Miss Lois recently visited friends at Wooler.

The practical joker was much in evidence in our village on All Fools' Day, our worthy blacksmith being one of the principal victims.

Owing to the breaking up of large pieces of ice in the mill stream and pond, a part of the dam gave way last week. Fortunately the break was not of such proportions as to impede the working of the mill in any way.

Messrs. H. Weir and D. Bovay made business trips to Belleville on Friday.

Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Carley spent a few days recently with friends in Picton.

Mr. Thos. White of Trenton spent a day last week in this locality.

Mr. and Mrs. James Locklin spent Saturday in Belleville.

Mr. and Mrs. Chas. McVeen left on Monday for Charlotte, N.Y., after spending several days in Melville.

Mrs. J. Kinnear and Mr. Arthur spent a few days last week at Huff's Island.

Mrs. W. H. Ancersea returned home on Wednesday after visiting a few days with friends in Trenton.

Mr. and Mrs. D. H. Young visited friends in Hillier on Thursday.

Mr. Charles Morton drove to Picton on Saturday.

Mr. Fred Morton and Mr. William Morton have been very ill with mumps.

Reginald Torvey, for some time in training at Kingston for service overseas, has returned home.

Mr. James Locklin spent Thursday in Trenton.

Mr. Albert Carley has purchased the residence of the late Mrs. J. Turner.

NILE'S CORNERS

Mr. and Mrs. Hiram Mcdonald of Gilead, visited Mr. and Mrs. Douglas McFall, on Tuesday.

Quite a few from here attended the funeral of Mr. and Mrs. Sturt's little one at Cold Creek, on Saturday at the home of Mr. Pridmore. Much sympathy is extended to the bereaved parents and friends.

Mr. and Mrs. George Alexander and family of Hillier, took tea with Mr. and Mrs. Fred Ellis, on Wednesday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Benj. Ellis spent Saturday and Sunday at Melville, guests of Mr. and Mrs. Ross Cruickshanks.

FINE CONCERT BY 155TH BATT. BAND

By kind permission of Lieut.-Col. Adams, the commanding Officer of the 155th Battalion, a band concert was given last evening by the Band in the Salvation Army Citadel. There was a good attendance and the programme of instrumental selections given by the band under the able guidance of Bandmaster Hinchey were thoroughly enjoyed. During the evening Bandsman Fred Burke rendered vocal selections in his usual capable and entertaining manner. Lieut.-Col. Adams presided over the gathering, and during the programme presented pocket Testaments to five members of the band who were formerly members of the Salvation Army band, also one to Sergt. Adams, who was also a member of the local corps. The Testaments were presented on behalf of the Belleville Salvation Army corps. At the conclusion of the delightful programme the members of the band were entertained by the ladies of the Army.

HOW TO PROLONG LIFE

By adopting a simple diet men like Conaro have lived to be 100 years of age, but with our complex diets of today, the vitality of the aged is taxed to its utmost endurance. A simple diet, therefore, is conducive to a long life, and if the vitality becomes impaired and weakness seems apparent, our local druggist, J. S. McKeown, has in Vinol a reliable, non-secret remedy which contains just the elements needed to restore strength to weak, feeble old people, and prolong a healthy, happy life.

Canadians Take Hand At St. Eloi

Artillery and Trench-Mortar Batteries Succeeded in Holding Back Enemy Supports

OTTAWA, April 4.—Canadian Headquarters in France, via London, April 3.—In the early morning of March 27 an assault was made on a section of the German defences by a British division immediately on the left of the Canadian corps. As a preliminary to the attack several large mines were successfully fired under a salient in the German lines, severely damaging the enemy's trenches and causing him numerous casualites.

Under cover of a very heavy artillery fire, the attacking troops advanced and succeeded in capturing the two lines of German trenches constituting the salient. The length of front trench seized was approximately 600 yards, and the British troops established themselves on a new front line at one point as much as 400 yards in front of their original positions.

In the course of the fighting, which continued for several hours, heavy casualties were inflicted on the enemy and five officers and 195 other ranks were taken prisoners. Many of the prisoners were passed back through the Canadian lines.

Throughout the attack the Canadian artillery and trench mortar batteries cooperated in the covering bombardment. A continuous barrage by shrapnel and high explosive shells was placed on all the roads and tracks in the rear of the German lines, effectively holding back the enemy supports. In several places German support trenches were taken in enfilade and German parapets were breached or destroyed by our shells. A fortified building was completely demolished and numerous other enemy strong points were repeatedly shelled by our heavy howitzers.

THIS IS THE 611TH DAY THE BRITISH EMPIRE HAS BEEN AT WAR WITH GERMANY.

LIBERALISM AND THE NAVY.

In the Canadian House of Commons recently, Sir Robert Borden made two important statements on the naval question that combined the following:

(1) That the admiralty memorandum made public in 1912 was accompanied by a secret memorandum on the European situation which Sir Robert showed to Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his chief lieutenants.

(2) That after the defeat of the Government's emergency naval measures recourse was again made to the Admiralty for assistance in deciding upon a permanent naval policy for Sir John Jellicoe to visit Canada in August, 1914, to advise and assist in drafting the permanent naval policy.

The outbreak of the war disarranged these plans and Sir John Jellicoe went to the North Sea in command of the Grand Fleet; Canada, deprived of dreadnoughts for naval defence by Sir Wilfrid and his followers, then devoted all her energy to military assistance.

Sir Robert Borden repeatedly stated that the Naval Aid Bill of 1912, based on the Admiralty memorandum and British Government secret documents, was only a temporary measure to meet an emergency; and that before there was a permanent policy adopted it would be submitted to the people. It was in redemption of this pledge that Sir John Jellicoe was coming to Canada in August, 1914. The Liberals disregarded the advice of the Admiralty, the warning of the British Government, and no doubt the opinion of Sir John Jellicoe would, if war had not broken out, have been treated with the same contempt and indifference.

Referring to the secret document which he courteously showed to Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Sir Robert said:

"I have not the slightest doubt that the message which came to us from the British Government, through the Admiralty, was to some extent influenced by the very fact that the British Government knew more than they thought it discreet or prudent to reveal to the public of Great Britain, but which they did reveal to us, not only in the document laid on the table of the House, but in a certain other document which was made public to some other hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House and which said far more than the document which had been made public in this country. And it was with that knowledge that certain hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House made their observations upon this question with a view of preventing the people of Canada, the Parliament of Canada, and the majority of the Commons of Canada, from carrying out a proposal which I believed then, and believe now, was undoubtedly in the best interests of the Empire, and which constituted a duty which the people of Canada at that time owed to the whole Empire for the purpose of its common defence."

Referring to the arrangements which had been made to bring Sir John Jellicoe to Canada to advise respecting a permanent naval policy Sir Robert Borden gave the following significant information to the House:

"I brought that proposal to the House not as a permanent measure, but as a temporary measure. I told the House at that time that before the Government of Canada brought down a permanent measure for the co-operation of Canada in the naval defence of the Empire, we could submit a proposal to Parliament and to the people of Canada in order that they might know what the proposal was, and in order that they might exercise the right which they undoubtedly had of passing upon that proposal. That was a very clear, definite and plain proposal; one which we endeavored to carry out so far as we were enabled to do so in the face of the opposition of hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House. Further than that, in 1914, immediately before the war broke out, we had made arrangements, so far as a permanent policy was concerned, with Admiral Sir John Jellicoe, now commander in chief of the British fleet, to come to Canada for the purpose of consulting with us with respect to a permanent policy. Everything was arranged as to his visit here except the exact date, but the breaking out of the war in August, 1914, prevented him from coming to Canada, as he had immediately to assume the responsible duties of Commander in Chief of the British Fleet, which otherwise he would not have assumed until the following November or December."

And in the face of such knowledge Sir Wilfrid, with others of his party, have deliberately, and without a blush of shame, laid present naval conditions at the door of the Borden Government. Consistency, thou art a jewel!

"THE RIFF-RAFF OF HUMANITY."

The following, which we copy from the Vossiche Zeitung (Berlin), is typical of the spirit in general displayed toward the Allied forces:

"The indescribable joy which the fall of the fortress of Erzerum was welcomed in the English Press has no doubt evaporated sufficiently for the Britons to see clearly that their cause in the Near East is in a very shaky condition. Because, of what elements do the forces they have available in Mesopotamia and in the adjacent regions consist? Of Australians and Canadians mainly, the very riff-raff of humanity, descendants of murderers and thieves, drunken hordes who despise the very thought of discipline and decency. This applies particularly to the Australians, the worthy posterity of men who for their crimes were once deported from their own country to found a colony at the extreme ends of the earth. These are the white allies of the black culture bearers who have set notoriously civilized England against us; these constitute the unspeakable human refuse against whom our heroic sons and brothers are doomed to fight. And yet there are sentimentalists who would urge us to be dainty in the choice of our weapons when facing such bestial creatures as these!"

With the above feeling at heart, what can the captives of such a nation expect but ill-treatment, even to butchery? Nor would the active allied enemy alone suffer, should Germany dominate the world following a peace treaty at her dictation. Already is Austria ruled by the iron hand; Turkey, inveigled into becoming a so-called partner, has been swept of her foodstuffs, and is herself in a starving condition; while Bulgaria would gladly withdraw from a forced alliance because of the brutal treatment of her troops at the hands of German generals. Germany to rule the world? Such a fate will come upon us only when Britain, France, Russia, Italy and loyal little Belgium will have sacrificed their last man in an endeavor to crush Prussian militarism. May God speed the day when that semi-savage, known to us as Kaiser Wilhelm, will be brought to his knees!

Montreal Gazette: Mr. Asquith's visit to the Pope on Saturday was an event that in other times might have stirred up much excitement, in Italy as well as in Great Britain. When England ceased to recognize Rome's supremacy in religious matters diplomatic relations between the two powers were broken off. In 1848 Parliament passed an act authorizing the restoration of a British representative in Rome, but the measure was repealed in 1875, after the Italian army had occupied the States of the Church and made the famous city the capital of united Italy. Even when English popular feeling was most hostile towards Rome's religious pretensions, however, there were communications between the authorities at London and those of the church at Rome.

Toronto News: As a result of the recent general election in South Africa, Parliament is divided as follows: South African Party 54, Unionists 40, Nationalists 26, Labor 4, Independents 6. In a House of 130 members General Botha's Government is backed by the South African party, made up partly of English-speaking people and partly of the more progressive Boers. So long as the war lasts the Premier can also count upon the 40 Unionists, or ultra-Imperialists, upon the four Laborites and upon five of the six Independents. This gives him 103 members, as against 27 irreconcilable Nationalists. The people voted overwhelmingly in favor of the war, and the Ministry is in no danger until Germany is beaten to the ground.

A periscope used by a man in the audience caused a mild sensation at the Odeon Theatre in Paris the other evening, according to a press despatch. The fact should not surprise Belleville theatre-goers, or at least the large number who attend the moving picture shows. For, if the practice of removing hats should be abandoned by the ladies, and a chap not in the front row wishes to see anything he will need to dodge from side to side every few seconds so as to get a glimpse past the bobbing creations in the seats ahead. In such a case the periscope for the theatre would be just the thing needed.

Sir Robert Borden told the House on Monday that a newspaper despatch from New York stating that an official of the British Embassy in New York had been sent to acquaint the Governor-General of Canada with regard to certain irregularities in the placing of Canadian contracts in the United States was untrue. He had brought the matter to the Duke of Connaught's attention and His Royal Highness had authorized him to state that the report was untrue.

The Poets' Corner

THE CALL

It came to the boy on the farmland,
When the sunset was tinting the west,
Was it brooklet or zephyr or night-bird
That whispered the mighty behest?
What matter? He turned from the hillside
And followed where stern duty led;
The boy of the plow is a soldier now,
Whom Freedom has reared and bred

It came in the gay, crowded ballroom,
Through the beat and the crash of the band,
Was it sob of harp or viola
That murmured the great command?
What matter? One heard, and departed,
And travelled a toilsome way;
The youth of the dance is the man of the lance,
A soldier born in a day.

It was not for the hate of the foeman;
It was not for the sake of the gain,
That our lovers have answered the bugle,
That our sons lie asleep with the slain,
God's call came clear as the dawning,
The call to the strong to avenge Freedom's wrong,
They heard, and they understood.

CHAPTER I.

A Hundred Thousand Years.

His handsome head, with its shock of black hair, roughly cropped between sharpened stones, was high held, the delicate nostrils questioning each vagrant breeze for word of Oo, hunter of men.

Now his trained senses catch the familiar odor of Ta, the great woolly rhinoceros, directly in his path, but Nu, the son of Nu, does not hunt Ta this day. Does not the hide of Ta's brother already hang before the entrance to Nu's cave?

No; today Nu hunts the gigantic cat, the fierce, saber toothed tiger, Oo, for Nat-ul, wondrous daughter of old Tha, will mate with none but the mightiest of hunters.

Only so recently as the last darkness, as, beneath the great, equatorial moon, the two had walked hand in hand beside the restless sea, she had made it quite plain to Nu, the son of Nu, that not even he, son of the chief of chiefs, could claim her unless there hung at the thong of his loin cloth the fangs of Oo.

"Nat-ul," she had said to him, "wishes her man to be greater than other men. She loves Nu now better than her life, but if love is to walk at her side during life, pride and respect must walk with it."

"I am proud of Nu," she continued. "Among the young men of the tribe there is no greater hunter or no mightier fighter than Nu, the son of Nu. Should you, single handed, slay Oo before a grown man's beard has darkened your cheek none will be greater in all the world than Nat-ul's mate, Nu, the son of Nu."

The young man was still sensible to the sound of her soft voice and the caress of her gentle touch upon his brow. Even as these things had sent him speeding forth into the jungle in search of Oo while the day was still so young that the night prowling beasts were yet abroad, so they urged him forward deeper and deeper into the dark and trackless mazes of the tangled forest.

As he forged on the scent of Ta became stronger, until at last the huge, ungainly beast loomed large before Nu's eyes.

He was standing in a little clearing, in deep, rank jungle grasses, and had he not been head on toward Nu he would not have seen him, since even his hearing was far too dull to apprehend the noiseless tread of the cave man moving lightly up wind.

As the tiny, bloodshot eyes of the primordial beast discovered the man, the great head went down and Ta, ill-natured and bellicose progenitor of the equally ill natured and bellicose rhinoceros of the twentieth century, charged the little giant who had disturbed his antediluvian meditation.

The creature's great bulk and awkward, uncouth lines belied his speed, for he tore cyclonically down upon Nu and had not the brain and muscle of the troglodyte been fitted by heritage and training to the successful meeting of such emergencies there would be no tale to tell today of Nu, the son of Nu.

But the young man was prepared, and, turning, he ran with the swiftness of a hare toward the nearest tree, a huge, arboreal fern, towering upon the verge of the little clearing.

Like a cat, the man ran up the perpendicular bole, his hands and feet seeming barely to touch the projecting knobs marking the remains of former fronds which converted the towering stem into an easy stairway for such as he.

About Nu's neck his stone tipped spear hung by its rawhide thong down his back, while stone hatchet and stone knife dangled from his gee string, giving him free use of his hands for climbing. You or I, having once gained the seeming safety of the lowest fronds of the great tree, fifty feet above the ground, might have heaved a great sigh of relief that we had thus easily escaped the hideous monster beneath. But not so Nu, who was wise to the ways of the creatures of his remote age.

Not one whit did he abate his speed as he neared the lowest branch, nor did he even waste a precious second in a downward glance at his enemy. What need indeed? Did he not know precisely what Ta would do?

Instead, he swung, monkey-like, to a broad leaf, and, though the chances he took would have paled the face of a brave man today, they did not cause Nu even to hesitate as he ran lightly and swiftly along the bending, swaying frond, leaping just at the right instant toward the bole of a nearby jungle giant.

Nor was he an instant too soon. The frond from which he had sprung had scarcely whipped up from beneath his weight when Ta, with all the force and momentum of a runaway locomotive, struck the base of the tree head on.

The jar of that terrific collision shook the earth. There was the sound of the splintering of wood, and the mighty tree toppled to the ground with a deafening crash.

Nu from an adjoining tree looked down and grinned. He was not hunting Ta that day, and so he sprang from tree to tree until he had passed around the clearing and then, coming to the surface once more, continued his way toward the distant lava cliffs, where Oo, the man hunter, made his grim lair.

From among the tangled creepers through which the man wormed his sinuous way ugly little eyes peered down upon him from beneath shaggy, beetling brows and great fighting tusks were bared as the hairy ones growled and threatened from above. But Nu paid not the slightest attention to the huge, ferocious creatures that menaced him upon every hand.

From earliest childhood he had been accustomed to the jabberings and scoldings of the ape people, and so he knew that if he went his way in peace, harming them not, they would offer him no harm. One of lesser experience might have attempted to drive them away with menacing spear or well aimed hatchet and thus have drawn upon him a half dozen or more ferocious bulls, against which no single warrior, however doughty, might have lived long enough to count his antagonists.

Threatening and unfriendly as the apes seemed, the cave man really looked upon them as friends and allies, since between them and his own people there existed a species of friendly alliance, due, no doubt, to the similarity of their form and structure.

In that long gone age when the world was young and its broad bosom teemed with countless thousands of carnivorous beasts and reptiles and other myriads blackened the bosoms of its inland seas and filled its warm, moist air with the flutter of their mighty batlike wings man's battle for survival stretched from sun to sun—there was no respite.

His semiarboreal habits took him often into the domains of the great and lesser apes, and from this contact had risen what might best be termed an armed truce, for they alone of all the other inhabitants of the earth had spoken languages, both meager, it is true, yet sufficient to their primitive wants, and as both languages had been born of the same needs to deal with identical conditions there were many words and phrases identical to both.

Thus the troglodyte and the primordial ape could converse when necessity demanded, and as Nu traversed their country he understood their grumbling and chattering merely as warnings to him against the performance of any overt act. Had danger lurked in his path the hairy ones would have warned him of that, too, for of such was their service to man, who, in return, hunted the more remorseless of their enemies, driving them from the land of the anthropoids.

On and on went Nu, occasionally questioning the hairy ones he encountered for word of Oo, and always the replies confirmed him in his belief that he should come upon the man eater before the sun crawled into its dark cave for the night.

And so he did.

He had passed out of the heavier vegetation and was ascending a gentle rise that terminated in low volcanic cliffs when there came down upon the breeze to his alert nostrils the strong scent of Oo. There was little or no cover now, other than the rank jungle grass that overgrew the slope and an occasional lofty fern, rearing its tufted pinnacle a hundred feet above the ground, but Nu was in no way desirous of cover. Cover that would protect him from the view of Oo would hide Oo from him.

He was not afraid that the saber toothed tiger would run away from him—that was not Oo's way, but he did not wish to come unexpectedly upon the animal in the thick grass.

He had approached to within a hundred yards of the cliffs now, and the scent of Oo had become as a stench in the sensitive nostrils of the cave man. Just ahead he could see the openings to several caves in the face of the rocky barrier, and in one of these he knew must lie the lair of his quarry.

Fifty yards from the cliff the grasses ceased except for scattered tufts that had found foothold among the broken rocks that strewed the ground, and as Nu emerged into this clear space he breathed a sigh of relief, for during the past fifty yards a considerable portion of the way had been through a matted jungle that rose above his head. To have met Oo there would have meant almost certain death.

Now, as he bent his eyes toward the nearby cave mouths he discovered one before which was strewn such an array of gigantic bones that he needed no other evidence as to the identity of its occupant. Here indeed laired no lesser creature than the awesome Oo, the gigantic, saber toothed tiger of antiquity.

Even as Nu looked there came a low and ominous growl from the dark mouth of the foul cavern, and then in the blackness beyond the entrance Nu saw two flaming blotches of yellow glaring out upon him.

A moment later the mighty beast itself sauntered majestically into the sunlight. There it stood, lashing its long tail from side to side, glaring with unblinking eyes straight at the rash man thing who dared venture thus near its abode of death.

The huge body, fully as large as that of a full grown bull, was beautifully marked with black stripes upon a vivid yellow ground, while the belly and breast were of the purest white.

As Nu advanced the great tiger li[illegible] curled back, revealing in all their terrible ferocity the eighteen inch curved fangs that armed either side of the upper jaw, and from the cavernous throat came a fearsome scream of rage that brought frightened silence upon the jungle for miles round.

The hunter loosened the stone knife at his waist and transferred it to his mouth, where he held it firmly, ready for instant use, between his strong, white teeth. In his left hand he carried his stone tipped spear and in his right the heavy stone hatchet that was so effective both at a distance and at close range.

Oo was creeping upon him now. The grinning jaws dripped saliva. The yellow-green eyes gleamed bloodthirstily. Could it be possible that this fragile pygmy dreamed of meeting in hand to hand combat the terror of a world, the scourge of the jungle, the hunter of men and of mammoths?

"For Nat-ul," murmured Nu, for Oo was about to spring.

As the mighty hurtling mass of bone and muscle, claws and fangs shot through the air the man swung his tiny stone hatchet with all the power behind his giant muscles, timing its release so nicely that it caught Oo in midleap squarely between the eyes with the terrific force of a powder sped projectile.

Then Nu, catlike as Oo himself, leaped agilely to one side as the huge bulk of the beast dashed, sprawling, to the ground at the spot where the man had stood.

Scarce had the beast struck the earth than the cave man, knowing that his puny weapon could at best but momentarily stun the monster, drove his heavy spear deep into the glossy side just behind the giant shoulder.

Already Oo regained his feet, roaring and screaming in pain and rage. The air vibrated and the earth trembled to his hideous shrieks.

For miles around the savage denizens of this savage jungle bristled in terror, slinking further into the depths of their dank and gloomy haunts, casting affrighted glances rearward in the direction of that awesome sound.

With gaping jaws and widespread talons the tiger lunged toward its rash tormentor, who stood gripping the haft of his primitive weapon. As the beast turned the spear turned also, and Nu was whipped about as a leaf at the extremity of a gale tossed branch.

Striking and cavorting futilely, the colossal feline leaped hither and thither in prodigious bounds as he strove to reach the taunting figure that remained just beyond the zone of those destroying talons. But presently Oo went more slowly, and then he stopped and crouched flat upon his belly. Slowly and cautiously he reached outward and backward with one huge paw until the torturing spear was within his grasp.

Meanwhile the man screamed taunts and insults into the face of his enemy, at the same time forcing the spear farther and farther into the vitals of the tiger, for he knew that once that paw encircled the spear's haft his chances for survival would be of the slenderest.

He had seen that Oo was weakening from loss of blood, but there were many fighting minutes left in the big carcass unless a happy twist of the spear sent its point through the wall of the great heart.

But at length the beast succeeded.

The paw closed upon the spear. The tough wood bent beneath the weight of those steel thews, then snapped short a foot from the tiger's body. At the same instant Oo reared and threw himself upon the youth, who had snatched his stone hunting knife from between his teeth and crouched, ready for the impact.

Down they went, the man entirely buried beneath the great body of his antagonist. Again and again the crude knife was buried in the snowy breast of the tiger even while Nu fell beneath the screaming, tearing incarnation of bestial rage.

At the instant it struck the man as strange that not once had the snapping jaws or frightful talons touched him, and then he was crushed to earth beneath the dead weight of Oo.

The beast gave one last, titanic struggle and was still.

With difficulty Nu wriggled from beneath the carcass of his kill. At the last moment the tiger itself had forced the spear's point into its own heart as it bent and broke the haft.

Then as the blood flowed he danced about the dead body of his vanquished foe, brandishing his knife and recovered hatchet and emitting now shrill shrieks in mimicry of Oo and now deep toned roars—the call of the victorious cave man.

From the surrounding cliffs and jungle came answering challenges from a hundred savage throats—the rumbling thunder of the cave bear's growl, the roar of Zor, the lion; the wail of the hyena, the trumpeting of the mammoth, the deep toned bellowing of the bull bos, and from distant swamp and sea came the hissing and whistling of saurian and amphibian.

His victory dance completed, Nu busied himself in the removal of the broken spear from the carcass of his kill. At the same time he removed several strong tendons from Oo's forearm, with which he roughly spliced the broken haft, for there was never an instant in the danger fraught existence of his kind when it was well to be without the service of a stone tipped spear.

This precaution taken, he busied himself with the task of cutting off Oo's head, that he might bear it in triumph to the cave of his love. With stone hatchet and knife he hacked and hewed for the better part of a half hour until at last he raised the dripping trophy above his head, as, leaping high in air, he screamed once more the gloating challenge of the victor, that all the world might know that there was no greater hunter than Nu, the son of Nu.

Even as the last note of his fierce cry rolled through the heavy, humid, superheated air of the Neocene there came a sudden hush upon the face of the world.

A strange darkness obscured the swollen sun. The ground trembled and shook. Deep rumblings muttered upward from the bowels of the young earth, and answering grumblings thundered down from the firmament above.

The startled troglodyte looked quickly in every direction, searching for the great beast who could thus cause the whole land to tremble and cry out in fear and the heavens above to moan and the sun to hide himself in terror.

In every direction he saw frightened beasts and birds and flying reptiles scurrying in panic stricken terror in search of hiding places, and, moved by the same primitive instinct, the young giant grabbed up his weapon and his trophy and ran like an antelope for the sheltering darkness of the cave of Oo.

Scarcely had he reached the fancied safety of the interior when the earth's crust crumpled and rocked. There was a sickening sensation of sudden sinking, and amid the awful roar and thunder of rending rock the cave mouth closed, and in the impenetrable darkness of his living tomb Nu, the son of Nu—Nu of the Neocene—lost consciousness.

That was a hundred thousand years ago.

CHAPTER II.

Today.

TO have looked at her merely you would never have thought Victoria Custer of Beatrice, Neb., at all the sort of girl she really was. Her large, dreamy eyes and the graceful lines of her slender figure gave one an impression of that timidity which we have grown to take for granted as an inherent characteristic of the truly womanly woman.

Yet I dare say there were only two things on God's green earth that Victoria Custer feared, or beneath it or above it, for that matter—mice and earthquakes.

She readily admitted the deadly terror which the former aroused within her, but of earthquakes she seldom if ever would speak. To her brother Barney, her chum and confidant, she had on one or two occasions unburdened her soul.

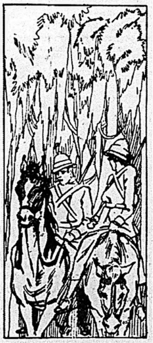
The two were guests now of Lord and Lady Greystoke upon the Englishman's vast estate in equatorial Africa, in the country of the Waziri, to which Barney Custer had come to hunt big game—and forget.

But all that has nothing to do with this story, nor has John Clayton, Lord Greystoke, who was once upon a time "Tarzan of the Apes," except that my having chanced to be a guest of his at the same time as the Custers makes it possible for me to give you a story that otherwise might never have been told.

South of Uziri, the country of the Waziri, lies a chain of rugged mountains, at the foot of which stretches a broad plain where antelope, zebra, giraffe, rhino and elephant abound, and here are lion and leopard and hyena preying, each after his own fashion, upon the sleek, fat herds of antelope, zebra and giraffe. Here, too, are buffalo—irritable, savage beasts, more formidable than the lion himself, Clayton says.

It is indeed a hunter's paradise, and scarce a day passed that did not find a party absent from the low, rambling bungalow of the Greystokes in search of game and adventure, nor seldom was it that Victoria Custer failed to be of the party.

Already she had bagged two leopards, in addition to numerous antelope and zebra, and on foot had faced a bull buffalo's charge, bringing him down with a perfect shot within ten paces of where she stood.



"Barney, there is something about these hills that fills me with terror."

At first she had kept her brother in a state bordering on nervous collapse, for the risks she took were such as few men would care to undertake.

Of all overworked women probably the housewife is the hardest worked. She has so much to attend to, with very little help. Her work can be lightened if she knows the value of system and she should try and take a short rest in the daytime. A physician who became famous almost around the world, Doctor Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y., the specialist in woman's diseases, for many years practiced medicine in a farming district. He there observed the lack of system in the planning of the work.

If it is a headache, a backache, a sensation of irritability or twitching and uncontrollable nervousness, something must be wrong with the head or back, a woman naturally says, but all the time the real trouble very often centers in the organs. In nine cases out of ten the seat of the difficulty is here, and a woman should take rational treatment for its cure. The disorder should be treated steadily and systematically with Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription.

For diseases from which women suffer "Favorite Prescription" is a powerful restorative. During the last fifty years it has banished from the lives of tens of thousands of women the pain, worry, misery and distress caused by these diseases.

If you are a sufferer, get Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription in liquid or tablet form to-day. Then address Dr. Pierce, Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y., and get confidential medical advice entirely free.

LOOKING FOR WORK

Everywhere men complain about work; even boys and girls in school or business find work tedious and irksome, but it isn't the work half so much as their own lack of physical strength that makes it hard.

Rich blood, strong lungs and healthful digestion make work pleasurable in business, in school or even house work, and if those who are easily tired—who are not sick, but weak and nervous—would just take Scott's Emulsion for one month and let its pure concentrated food create richer blood to pulsate through every artery and vein—let it build a structure of healthy tissue and give you vigorous strength—you would find work easy and would look for more. Insist on Scott's.

Parisian Sage the World's Greatest Hair Grower and Beautifier

The Manufacturers of Parisian Sage are making a very liberal proposition to the readers of this paper.

They know, they are absolutely certain, that they have the only real hair grower, beautifier and dandruff germ destroyer on the market to day, and knowing this they have requested this paper to state to its readers that they guarantee Parisian Sage to remove every trace of dandruff, to stop falling hair and itching scalp, or money back.

Every one who reads this important announcement should know that Parisian Sage makes hair grow, not only abundantly, but gives it that lustrous appearance that all desire.

Women will find Parisian Sage a most refreshing and ideal hair dressing, free from stickiness or grease. Large bottle 50 cents at druggists. The girl with the Auburn hair is on every package of Parisian Sage and this trade mark safeguards you against substitutes. Remember there is no other Hair Tonic nearly as good.

For aches, pains, rheumatism, etc., try Parisian Mustard Cerate. Its effect is wonderful. Use in place of mustard plasters, poultices, or hot applications. Will not blister. 25c. a tube.

WORLD GETTING BETTER

Negro Waiters' Debate at Hot Springs is Enjoyed by Society

HOT SPRINGS, Va., April 4.—An audience made up of well-known society men and women gathered last night in Odd Fellows' Hall to listen to a debate between two of the negro waiters at the Homestead—the Rev. Charles Wright and Franklin Johnson— on the question "Whether the World Am Getting Better or Worse." The proceeds from the sale of tickets of more than $100 went to the Hot Springs Library Fund.

The speakers were introduced by J. T. McAllister, while the Rev. J. Avey Norris, J. W. Hamilton, and Howard McClintic acted as judges. The audience burst into applause every few moments, and at the end of the debate were of the opinion that if the two negroes entered vaudeville careers would lie before them.

Both men were thoroughly in earnest, appreciating the weight of their subject, and exhausted their mental and verbal resources. Franklin, Johnson, who fought valiantly to win for the negative side, was a wiry negro of lightning-like speech and movement. He was of the opinion that the world was going to "dispradation," and had plenty of arguments to prove that it was growing worser every day."

"Can you tell me the world is growing better," said Johnson, "when the President of the United States ain't had a good night's sleep in two years" "Tain't so. Men leaven the earth and go in through the ether and under the water to shoot people." Just to hear of this great fighten is enough for me It gives moro a swimmin in the haid Fighten and don't know what its fighten for. There is more fighten today than there has been since Christ came from the Garden of Eden.

"Ten years ago you could have hung your watch on the Hot Springs gate and found it in the morning.' You can't do it now. Men is got so triflin' that women have stepped up and said. 'We is going to run the world.' Gentlemen of the jury, you caan't trust nobody. You caan't trust your own wife. I said a plenty to show you that the world is growen worse every day of your life from the cradle to the grave Tell me the world is grown' better; tain't so."

The Rev. Charles Wright, speaker for the affirmative, was of the opinion that the world was getting better every instant, and if it were not so the audience had better pack their trunks and fix for leaving. His zeal lost him his teeth toward the end of his argument, and he fell through a screen in his efforts to restore them, but wound up bravely. He was finally decided winner of the debate.

PROFESSOR LAVELL HAS BEEN IDENTIFIED

Judge Lavell Goes to Chicago to Meet His Brother

A Colorado Springs, Co., despatch says Prof. C. F. Lavell has now regained his memory, and has been joined by his wife. On Saturday night word came to Kingston that Prof. Lavell's identity had been established by Prof. Donald McFayden of Boulder University, Colorado, a cousin of Mrs. Lavell. Prof. McFayden was to leave Colorado Springs Sunday for Chicago, where Prof. Lavell would be met by Judge Lavell, who would accompany him eastward. The professor will be carefully nursed back to complete health.—Kingston Whig.

How to Save Your Eyes

Try This Free Prescription

Do your eyes give you trouble? Do you already wear eyeglasses or spectacles? Thousands of people wear these "windows" who might easily dispense with them. You may be one of these, and it is your duty to save your eyes before it is too late. The eyes are neglected more than any other organ of the entire body. After you finish your day's work you sit down and rest your muscles, but how about your eyes? Do you rest them? You know you do not. You read or do something else that keeps your eyes busy; you work your eyes until you go to bed. That is why so many have strained eyes and finally other eye troubles that threaten partial or total blindness. Eyeglasses are merely crutches; they never cure. This free prescription, which has benefited the eyes of so many, may work equal wonders for you. Use it a short time. Would you like your eye troubles to disappear as if by magic? Try this prescription. Go to the nearest wideawake drug store and get a bottle of Bon-Opto tablets. Drop one tablet in ¼ glass of water and allow it to thoroughly dissolve. With this liquid bathe the eyes two to four times daily. Just note how quickly your eyes clear up and how soon the inflammation will disappear. Don't be afraid to use it; it is absolutely harmless. Many who are now blind might have saved their eyes had they started to care for them in time. This is a simple treatment, but marvelously effective in multitudes of cases. Now that you have been warned don't delay a day, but do what you can to save your eyes and you are likely to thank us as long as you live for publishing this prescription. The Valmas Drug Co., of Toronto, will fill the above prescription by mail, if your druggist cannot.

A prominent City Physician to whom the above article was submitted, said: "Bon-Opto is a very remarkable remedy. Its constituent ingredients are well known to eminent eye specialists and widely prescribed by them. It can be obtained from any good druggist and is one of the very few preparations I feel should be kept on hand for regular use in almost every family."

J. S. McKeown fills many Bon-Opto prescriptions, and will gladly fill yours.

BORDEN REQUESTED TO ADOPT CONSCRIPTION

WINNIPEG, April 4.—Conscription was approved to-day at a meeting of the Citizens' Recruiting League and Chief Justice Mathers, the President, consented to go to Ottawa and present to the government the resolution adopted. The resolution reads:

"That in the opinion of the Citizens' Recruiting League of Winnipeg, the time has now arrived when the Dominion Government should adopt some form of compulsory service for imperial purposes."

ETON'S HEAD MASTER IS FORCED TO RESIGN

LONDON, April 4.—Special—The Rev. Edward Lyttelton, Head Master of Eton College, has resigned. His resignation will take effect next Christmas.

Dr. Lyttelton in speeches during the war has made the declaration that it was the duty of Great Britain to extend the principles of Christian charity to Germany, and as a result he has been assailed by the newspapers as unpatriotic and a visionary. Several of the newspapers have accused him of being pro-German. Dr. Lyttelton denied these assertions.

THE BIBLE WAS NOT INTENDED FOR SCIENCE SAYS EVANGELIST SUNDAY

"Any More Than a CrowBar was Intended For a Toothpick," Adds the Quaint Soul-Winner

BALTIMORE, April 4.—The old-time religion was preached in Billy Sunday's turtlebacked gospel headquarters here last week. Bill, as a matter of fact, swatted as hard as he knew how every known sin, and his ancient foe, the devil, received some heavy blows.

"People won't think today; that's the reason they're going to the devil in swarms." Billy declared in one address, and the responding chorus of "amens" bore witness to the general approval given his remark.

"Everything vile, dirty, rotten and iniquitous has been brought to bear against the Bible," he continued, but it is the word of God and millions of people know it. I'll bet my life there are hundreds of you out there who haven't read the pages of the Bible in 10 years. The Bible was not intended for science any more than a crowbar was intended for a toothpick.

"It is true that man is by nature a sinner. You are going to live forever—somewhere; it's up to you."

Want More of Sunday.

Baltimoreans are considering asking Billy to stay here until two weeks after Easter Sunday. They fear, however, that he will not be able to grant their request, as he is due to open what he hopes will be the greatest campaign of his career in Kansas City on April 30. Billy has been working hard all winter, with only short rest periods, and as the season is nearing an end he is pretty well used up, as he says.

If Billy quits in Baltimore on April 23, that will give him only a week's rest before starting in Kansas City, and by that time the warm weather will place an additional strain upon him and his co-operating workers. It may also have a bearing on the attendance at the meetings.

Baltimore is well satisfied with the work that has been done thus far, and that is the reason for the practically universal desire to have Billy extend the campaign, but in this case it is more than likely that he will have to refuse, as there is little likelihood that the opening date for the Kansas City meeting will be postponed.

Copper Sales Are Soaring

The copper market is in the throes of one of the greatest buying movements the country has ever seen, according to reports in the trade. Definite information was obtained yesterday that French Government agents had placed orders for the metal which were estimated to total fully 100,000,000 pounds, at 27 cents a pound, deliverable in the third quarter of the year. This means the expenditure of $27,000,000, about the same as Great Britain paid for the 120,000,000 pounds bought in the last previous big purchasing campaign, which occurred last December.

Persons in a position to study trade occurrences said yesterday that fully 200,000,000 pounds of copper had been bought so far this week. Of this only a part was accounted for by the French purchases, inasmuch as accumulation for France began last week. The prices quoted have been 27½ cents for June delivery, 27½ cents for July, and 27 cents for the remaining months of the year. The refiners are fairly overwhelmed with inquiries for copper to be delivered within the next few weeks, but the answer returned to would-be buyers of large calibre is uniformly the same. It is that capacity has been engaged for from five weeks to three months ahead, which necessitates the consideration of orders for delivery late in the second half of the year.

Foreign buyers have by no means a monopoly on the current business. Brass foundries are working night and day in the Connecticut Valley, and the munitions factories of the East are calling for more and more copper. The mines are speeding up and some which have not paid in many years because of high cost of production are being opened up to reap a harvest from extraordinary prices and an abnormal demand.

Autos Kill 115 Children

Commissioner Wood's Report is For Last Year—1742 Injured

Police Commissioner Woods yesterday made public a report on street accidents to children of school age, which showed that in New York City last year 184 children between 6 and 16 years of age were killed and 5,085 injured. Seventy-two children were killed by automobiles and 13 by motor trucks—a total of 115 killed by motor-driven vehicles. The report showed that automobiles injured 1,712 children of school age, the horse-drawn truck 398, and the street car 368.

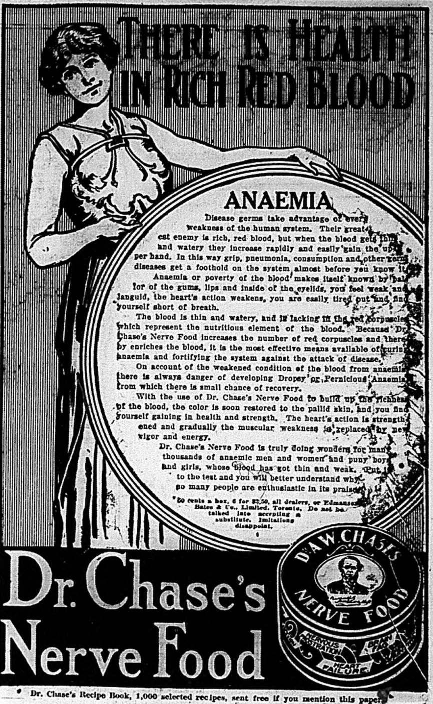
Records from Aug. 1 to Dec. 31, inclusive, showed the following proportion of these accidents and injuries as divided among automobiles driven by owners, members of their families, private chauffeurs, etc.:

	Accidents	Children Hurt
Owner	454	455
Owner's family ..	19	19
Lessee	1	1
Employee	351	355
Unknown	64	64
Total	889	894

Nearing The Limit

Her father—Can you give my daughter all the little luxuries to which she is accustomed?"

Her lover—Not much longer. I've been doing it for over a year now, you know!



THERE IS HEALTH IN RICH RED BLOOD

ANAEMIA

Disease germs take advantage of every weakness of the human system. Their greatest enemy is rich, red blood, but when the blood gets thin and watery they increase rapidly and easily gain the upper hand. In this way grip, pneumonia, consumption and other germ diseases get a foothold on the system almost before you know it.

Anaemia or poverty of the blood makes itself known by pallor of the gums, lips and inside of the eyelids, you feel weak and languid, the heart's action weakens, you are easily tired out and find yourself short of breath.

The blood is thin and watery, and is lacking in the red corpuscles which represent the nutritious element of the blood. Because Dr. Chase's Nerve Food increases the number of red corpuscles and thereby enriches the blood, it is the most effective means available of curing anaemia and fortifying the system against the attack of disease.

On account of the weakened condition of the blood from anaemia there is always danger of developing Dropsy or Pernicious Anaemia from which there is small chance of recovery.

With the use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food to build up the richness of the blood, the color is soon restored to the pallid skin, and you find yourself gaining in health and strength. The heart's action is strengthened and gradually the muscular weakness is replaced by new vigor and energy.

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is truly doing wonders for many thousands of anaemic men and women and puny boys and girls, whose blood has got thin and weak. Put it to the test and you will better understand why so many people are enthusiastic in its praise.

50 cents a box, 6 for $2.50, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto. Do not be talked into accepting a substitute. Imitations disappoint.

KINGSTON

Lieut.-Col. W. J. Brown, G. S. O., left on Monday for Ottawa on inspectional business.

Capt. R. D. Ponton, Instructional Cadre is in Lindsay examining the Provincial School of Infantry of the 109th Battalion.

Pat had returned on seven days' leave from the front, and was relating his experiences around the fire one night.

"The enemy was creeping up in their thousands, and Oi was simply itching to get at them.'

"Oh, sure, and Oi just scratched meself."

The probationers attending the Infantry School of Instruction were agreeably surprised on Monday afternoon when Lieut.-Col. D. Barragar, Commandant of the School, presented Sergt. Instructor Sharpe with a long service and good conduct medal for twenty years' service. Cheers broke out on the presentation of the medal to the popular and very efficient instructor.

"The men who have gone, fine, clean fellows as they were, will be followed by hundreds of others. Capt. Sutherland's desire may easily be surpassed. Yet this is not the best thing about the rally of the hockey men and of other athletes to the flag. It is the example they set and the spirit they show, the true sporting spirit which never hangs back where the cause of honor is at stake. This is the British spirit, and its reproduction in Ontario is one of the things which the war may be thanked for having made manifest. No man who has the true sense of manhood in him will fail to follow the example that the sporting men have set."

Commenting on the appeal of Capt. J. T. Sutherland, for recruits among the athletes, the Toronto World says: "There is something very inspiring about the appeal made by Cpat. Sutherland, president of the Ontario Hockey Association to the hockeyists of the province on the close of the season. In January he had suggested that when the season was over all of them should exchange the puck and stick for rifle and bayonet. Last year the boys rushed from the ice to the recruiting office, and this year, no doubt, the result will be the same. Already 750 men, players and club members, had clothed themselves with khaki. Capt. Sutherland hopes that the number will be swelled to 1,100, so that the O.H.A. could announce that it had contributed a whole battalion to the cause.

Lt.-Col. Brown, G.S.O., returned from an inspectional tour to Napanee, Belleville, and Picton, where he inspected the work of the 80th Battalion. Col. Brown reports that he found everything connected with the 80th in the best of condition.

M. Dine, of the 80th Battalion bugle Band, spent the week end with his family in the city.

Faced Revolvers Of 40 Detectives

NEW YORK, April 4.—Ignatius T. T. Lincoln, formerly British M.P., and self-confessed German spy now held in Brooklyn for forgery and awaiting extradition to England, carefully arranged a second attempt to escape Saturday night, but one of his confederates "squeeled" and Lincoln got only as far as the prison door where he was confronted with the revolvers of forty detectives. He is now in solitary confinement.

Simple Way To End Dandruff

There is one sure way that has never failed to remove dandruff at once and that is to dissolve it, then you destroy it entirely. To do this, just get about four ounces of plain, common liquid arvon from any drug store (this is all you will need), apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

By morning, most if not all, of your dandruff will be gone, and three or four more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every single sign and trace of it, no matter how much dandruff you have.

You will find all itching and digging of the scalp will stop instantly and your hair will be fluffy, lustrous, glossy, silky and soft, and look and feel a hundred times better.

The "Quinte" 155th Overseas Battalion

The "feel" of the snug-fitting khaki—the grip on the bayonetted rifle—the clean, invigorating, fresh-air life—the shoulder-to-shoulder comradeship of real men—these rapidly transform ordinary civilians into those Canadian troops whose deeds have astonished military Europe.

With their efficiency goes a passion for trim cleanliness. They are devotees of the razor, and strong partisans of the "Made-in-Canada" Gillette. They enjoy its clean, velvety shave when they have time and toilet conveniences, and appreciate it even more when both are lacking, and no other razor could give them any sort of a decent shave.

Don't these gallant lads deserve every comfort we can give them? Make the campaign easier for one of them at least by giving him a 119

SYNOPSIS OF COAL
MINING REGULATIONS.

Coal mining rights of the Dominion, in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Yukon Territories, the North-West Territories and in a portion of the Province of British Columbia, may be leased for a term of twenty-one years at an annual rental of $1 an acre. Not more than 2,560 acres will be leased to one applicant.

Applications for a lease must be made by the applicant in person to the Agent or Sub-Agent of the district in which the rights applied for are situated.

In surveyed territory the land must be described by sections or legal sub-divisions of sections and in unsurveyed territory the tract applied for shall be staked by the applicant himself.

Each application must be accompanied by a fee of $5 which will be refunded if the rights applied for are not available, but not otherwise. A royalty shall be paid on the merchantable output of the mine at the rate of five cents per ton.

The person operating the mine shall furnish the Agent with sworn returns accounting for the full quantity of merchantable coal mined and pay the royalty thereon. If the coal mining rights are not being operated, such returns should be furnished at least once a year.

The lease will include the coal mining rights only, but the lessee may be permitted to purchase whatever available surface rights may be considered necessary for the working of the mine at the rate of $10.00 an acre.

For full information application should be made to the Secretary of the Department of the Interior, Ottawa, or to any Agent or Sub-Agent of Dominion Lands.

W. W. CORY,
Deputy Minister of the Interior.

IN and ABOUT THE CITY

ARRESTS MADE

Last night two arrests were made by the police, one being a soldier and the other a civilian. The latter was arrested on a charge of procuring liquor for soldiers.

INVALIDED HOME

Pte. Oscar McAllister, of Port Hope, who left here with the 39th Battalion, has been invalided home and arrived Monday afternoon. He served several months in the trenches and his hearing is badly affected owing to the continual cannonading.

ACCOMPANIED INVALIDS HOME

Sergt. Meath, who left here with the 39th Battalion for the front last year, was in the city for a few hours last night. He was one of the two Sergeants who accompanied a number of invalids home on the steamer Corsican. The Sergeant left today for his home in the West.

Shannonville Red Cross Gives Entertainment

Pleasing Programme Rendered—Presentation of Wrist Watches To Tyendinaga Soldiers

The "At Home" given by the Shannonville Branch of the Red Cross Society, held in the A.O.U.W. Hall recently, was very successful, both from a social and financial standpoint. The program given by the orchestra of the 155th Battalion, Belleville, was very much appreciated, as was evidenced by the hearty applause. They readily responded to many encores, and the ladies of the society hope to be successful in obtaining their services again at an early date.

During the evening refreshments were served, a booth was also in operation. An important feature of the evening was the presentation of fifteen watches to young men of the township of Tyendinaga who have recently donned the khaki. A very appropriate address was given by the Rev. Mr. Conrad, of Melrose. The presentations were made by the Rev. Mr. Robeson, accompanied by a few witty remarks. The net proceeds amounted to approximately $55, including the sale of a handsome quilt, which was kindly donated to the society.

The following collectors were appointed by the society to canvass for a "presentation fund": Mr. A. Marks, Mr. Clarence Long, Mr. R. Tripp, Mrs. Dies, Mrs. Barcham, Mrs. Kerr, Mrs. Moore and Mr. C. Liddle. Below is the list of names and amounts contributed.

Collected by Mrs. Moore and Mrs. J. S. Kerr (village):—J. S. Kerr $1; J. Moore $1; F. B. Palmer 50c.; S. E. Lennox $1; Mrs. W. W. Reid 50c.; W. W. MUSIC AND DRAMA

THE 155TH BATT. MINSTRELS TO BE EVENT OF SEASON

On Monday evening April 10th, the Citizens of Belleville will have an opportunity to see the very best Minstrel entertainment ever given in the city, either professional or amateur, so that we may expect to see Griffin's Opera House jammed to capacity. In producing the Quinte Battalion Minstrels, the 155th have enlisted the very best talent to be found in the Bay of Quinte district. All the old timers will be there. Geo. Dulmage, Ab. Wheeler, Sam Turner, Davy Carr, etc., etc., and with them will be seen new blood that will make the old timers extend themselves to hold their places. The 155th Batt. is our own Regiment, and should be supported by the citizens of Belleville, as over 300 Belleville boys are enlisted in its ranks. But aside from the sentimental reason, the citizens of Belleville who journey up to Griffin's next Monday will enjoy an evening's entertainment that will live long in their memories. In the first part, the ten end men will dispense the laughter, the eight ballad singers will supply the sentiment, and with the 50 choristers, and 40 musicians, who comprise the orchestra, will discourse sweet music. In the olio, which is usually the weak spot in Amateur Minstrels, a real surprise is in store for the audience. After a programme of high class vaudeville the show closes with an after piece, "The Capture of the U. B. Dam" an up to date travesty on H. M. S. Pinafore, written and produced by our talented fellow-citizen, Mr J. Nevin Doyle. This act alone is worth more than the price of admission The scenery is painted especially, and the costumes are being supplied entirely by Jos. Ponton, the Montreal Costumer. The plan opens at Doyle's Drug Store, tomorrow, Thursday morning.

GRAFT IS DOOMED

The first episode of the great 182-part episode, serial series, "Graft," featuring Hobart Henley and Jane Novak is announced for exhibition at the Palace Theatre, tonight and Thursday, matinee and night, the title of this episode is, "Tenement house owners and politicians. In addition to the above offering, another of those highly amusing 3 part L. Ko. comedy screams entitled, "Silk hose and high pressure," and featuring the scream of the screen, "Billie Ritchie" will also be presented in addition to a program of other varied photoplays.

"WITHIN THE LAW"
Tomorrow Night.

"Within the Law," Bayard Veiller's melodrama of modern conditions in New York life which will be seen at Griffin's Opera House, tomorrow night for one night only, treats interestingly of the minimum wage in that it tells the story of a shopgirl who is unjustly accused of theft and sent to states prison for three years. In the first act, she has a terrific scene with her employer, the owner of a department store, known as the "Emporium." In which she tells him in plain language of the temptations which he places in the paths of his girl employees through starvation wages and the consequent privations they are forced to undergo. The rest of the play is devoted to the absorbing story of "Mary Turner's" revenge. In association with a gang of "crooks" Mary preys upon society, but manages to keep within the pale of the law always. Dr. C. H. Parkhurst, the eminent clergyman, said of Mr. Veiller's play, "every employer in the country should see "Within the Law." Seats now on sale at Doyle's Drug store.

"POTASH AND PERLMUTTER"
Tuesday.

The famous cloak house of Potash and Perlmutter had as its foundation a dill pickle. It came about in this way: The pickle was partly in the mouth of Abe Potash, and under pressure spurted its acid juice into the honest eye of Morris Perlmutter sitting opposite. Out of this partnership grew the famous stories of Montague Glass in the Saturday Evening Post, and out of these stories grew the three-act comedy "Potash and Perlmutter" which A. H. Woods will present at Griffin's Opera House next Tuesday night with a distinguished company of artists. "Potash and Perlmutter" comes to us direct from its second year's run at the George M. Cohan Theatre, New York City where it scored the most sensational success Miss Jane Fearnley, the famous moving picture star, is leading lady with the Potash and Perlmutter Company.

Movement to Stop Boxing in New York State

Hearst's N. Y. American, That Supports Baby Killing, Would Abolish Padded Contests

William Randolph Hearst will stop at nothing to forward the interest of his publications. Probably looking for the support of the murder element, his "American" alone of the big New York dailies espouses the cause of the Huns. Hearst's latest in the sensational line is a frantic effort to stop boxing in New York State. The openly abetting those who wantonly kill women and children in Europe, Hearst would stop scientific men from meeting under regulation rules in a 16-foot ring. He seized on the recent heavyweight contest to start his tirade. He discovered a few days later that the same was not a boxing exhibition but a brutal prize fight. As an argument against Willard, The American reproduces the story of the champion's bout with John (Bull) Young when the latter met his death. Instead of being a reason why there should be no boxing the report is merely a profound argument against making a bet match, of which they presented many a few years ago in California.

The following is the story, written by H. M. Walker of The Los Angeles Examiner, who covered the fatal fight between Willard and Young at Los Angeles:

On the night of Aug. 23, 1913, Jess Willard and John (Bull) Young met in a scheduled 20-round boxing contest in the historic Vernon fight pavilion.

Before the ring battle had been in progress three minutes it was patent to the veteran followers of the game that instead of scientific boxing we were to see a bloody and brutal exhibition between two wholly unskilled men: giants of brackish brain and braided biceps, whose one idea was to pound and pound until one or the other was hammered into insensibility.

In the eleventh round Young backed toward his corner under heavy punishment. His knees were sagging, both hands were thrown up to protect his face, and in this attitude his chin reached about on a level with Willard's chest. Willard flailed with a right uppercut. In the parlance of the ring, this blow was a "general results wallop." Big Jess, devoid of all science, and fighting with savage instinct alone, was trying this punch as he had had tried dozens before, with the jungle man's hope of seeing his opponent topple before him.

The results were all and more than Willard had hoped for. The blow landed on Young's chin, and while the referee was counting the "fatal ten" John (Bull) Young's soul was returning to his Maker. The pummeled man never recovered consciousness. His great body, still clad in the faded blue trunks, "hickory" socks, soft shoes of the ring, was carried to an ambulance and removed to the Clara Barton Hospital.

On his hairy breast was blood, and in his mouth, nose and ears was more blood; the red badge of his profession. The physicians ruled that an operation was necessary. The skull was trephined, but Young's eyelids never opened. His body, a mountain of quivering flesh, lay all night on the white bed, and was still with the coming of the morning sun. John (Bull) Young was dead.

Regulations of Hotels by The Government

George Wright Proposes Restriction of the Name "Hotel" To Standard Types

Mr. George Wright, president of the Toronto Hotel Keepers' Association, and part proprietor of the Walker House and Carls-Rite Hotels, waited on the premier yesterday to express his own views as to the policy which the government should follow in construction after the destructive work they had done in prohibiting the sale of liquor for the period of the war.

He proposed the restriction of the name of "hotel" to buildings which conformed to a certain standard, and the publication of tariffs of charges permitted in various types of hotels.

Mr. Wright's point was that a clean sweep had been made, and that since some accommodation for transients was necessary, the citizens of the province, press, clergy and legislators, should help in making the hotels in the province a commercial success, a credit to the community, and an example to other provinces.

The regulation of hotels should come under the jurisdiction of the license commission, he said. They should have power to pass on the rates as submitted. Many hotels which had been entirely dependent or almost entirely so upon their bar business, would find that they could not do business under the new conditions. That would increase business of the legitimate houses. Regulation of rates would stop extortionate monopoly. It was highly desirable that competition between hotels in Ontario should not have the same effect as it had had in the United States where the present craze for building hotels had rendered it necessary for hotelkeepers to descend to questionable practices to meet the competition.

Mr. Wright suggested that action should be taken by which municipalities might exempt hotels from taxation. He pointed out that the government had paid large sums to lumber companies whose licenses had been cut off at the end of the year. And these companies were not forced to invest nearly as much capital in plant as was the hotel man in a large building on expensive property.

Scotland Yard Takes Spy's Correspondence

WASHINGTON, April 5.—A quantity of correspondence belonging to Horst von der Goltz, the alleged German spy, who has said he was the directing head of the plan to blow up the Welland Canal, has been seized by Scotland Yard detectives, and will be made public shortly by the British Foreign Office, according to an announcement today by Department of Justice officials.

It is understood that the correspondence contains details of the plans to blow up the Welland Canal and of invasion of Canada from the United States. The letters now in the possession of the British authorities are said to contain the names of persons in this country hitherto unmentioned.

It was this correspondence, it was said, that enabled the British authorities to obtain a full statement from von der Goltz as to his activities in the United States. While von der Goltz's declarations in New York recently to Department of Justice agents have covered main features of his work in this country, it is the opinion of officials that other details will be disclosed with the publication of the correspondence.

Officials here also have been informed that the correspondence shows the names of those who aided von der Goltz in obtaining an American passport in Baltimore under the alias of Bridgman Taylor, and that names of other persons who might be called upon, if necessary, to assist in obtaining other passports probably will be disclosed in the correspondence.

WINE 'AD' FOR MINISTER

NEW YORK, April 1.—E. G. Wilson of the temperance organization of the Methodist Episcopal Church addressed the second day's session of the Newark Methodist Episcopal Conference in Newark yesterday. He praised the newspapers of the country which had taken the stand that no advertisements of alcoholic liquors should appear in their columns, and expressed the hope that the list of such papers would be increased greatly within another year.

One of the advertisements in the official Conference Program is of a local hotel which solicits the patronage of the members of the Conference, and says, "Best Dinner in the City, 50 Cents; with Wine, $1." Another page of the program advises the visitors to patronize the advertisers.

RITCHIE'S

EASTER MILLINERY

Featuring New York Models Exclusively. Some In The Extreme Of Style, Others Modified To Suit The More Conservative Taste, But All Expressing Some New Spring Idea

With Easter, the coming-out day of Spring's New Fashions, only 17 days away, it means that just now Hats are the first concern from the feminine point of view. Every woman who desires to be stylishly dressed on Easter Morn wants a hat that will exactly become her, and at the same time one that reflects the latest style tendencies. Ours is truly a New York showing, embracing as it does many pattern models direct from "Gotham," as well as the untrimmed shapes, of which there are scores, and the new trimmings are also from that fashion centre. Thus every hat selected in Ritchie's Millinery Parlors, be it one of the ready trimmed models or one trimmed in our own workrooms, will emphasize one or more exclusive New York ideas. As for the prices—we know there are many pleasant surprises awaiting you in our Millinery Department.

GLOVES FOR EASTER

Certainly, there must be a new pair of Gloves to go with the new Suit on Easter Morn—and furthermore, it is desirable that they be chosen from Ritchie's Spring showing, where all the new qualities and shades are displayed in profusion and at surprisingly ylow prices. For instance:

"KAYSER'S" TWO BUTTON SILK GLOVES in all the leading glove shades, such as black, grey and pongee, also black with white points and white with black points. Sizes 5½ to 8½.

"KAYSER'S" 12 AND 16 BUTTON SILK GLOVES in black and white, guaranteed finger tips, 85c., $1.00, $1.25 and $1.50 pair.

BLACK SUEDE GLOVES—a very dressy glove for Easter; all sizes, prices $1.50 and $1.75 pair.

TAN CAPE STREET GLOVES, one dome, special, $1.25 pair.

Easter Store News Well Worth Your Reading.

The large selection of New Hand Bags now showing for Easter came direct from New York, thus reflecting the newest ideas in leathers, colors, shapes and fittings. See them in the windows. Prices, 75c. to $5.00.

Just yesterday we received a large selection of pretty new neckwear shapes in the sheerest of materials, such as Georgette Crepes and Crepe de Chenes. The very latest styles are represented, priced at 50c., $1.00 and $1.50.

The latest New York styles in Sport Coats are shown in our Mantle Room, featuring wide and narrow stripes and large and small checks; most of them loud, of course, but that is what Fashion demands. Prices, $5 to $11.

Something new and very becoming are the Shantung Silk Middies now displayed in the Mantle Room. They have large sailor collar, small pocket and colored silk lace. Prices, $2.00 and $2.50.

See our display of Men's $15 Suits in Men's Window tonight. They are extra values.

Dozens Of Fresh New BLOUSES Are Here For Your Easter Choosing

A charming group of blouses to enhance the approaching Easter season has just arrived from New York. Naturally the styles are of Fashion's latest dictation, some being in the cascade effects, while others are with the beaded fronts. They are of sheer materials such as Crepe de Chenes and Georgette Crepes, in the very newest shades of peach, maize, flesh and white. They are marked to sell as high as $7.50.

TIRED, ACHING FEET AND LIMBS

are promptly relieved by applying Absorbine, Jr., the antiseptic liniment. It is soothing, healing, and invigorating—puts vim and energy into jaded muscles. One of the many enthusiastic users writes: "I received the trial bottle of Absorbine, Jr., all right and at that time was unable to walk without a cane, just around the house. I used it freely and inside of two days could walk without limping, something I had not done in two months. I went to the drug store and procured a $1.00 bottle and today can walk as good as ever. I'll never be without it. I am recommending it to everyone I can, for I am a living witness."

At druggists, $1.00 and $2.00 a bottle or sent postpaid. Liberal trial bottle for 10c. in stamps.

BRITISH ANTI-AIRCRAFT WIN VICTORY

Searchlights Locate Raiders Aeroplanes Do the Rest

Canadian Press Special

LONDON, April 6.—The increasing effectiveness of England's anti-aircraft defenses was demonstrated last night when a single Zeppelin which undertook a fifth raid in six days was prevented from penetrating the northeast coast and forced to flee after the briefest visit of the kind yet made. The night was moonlight and calm. Searchlights discovered the raider coming over sea and never once lost him during his stay. As he reached the coast, he was flying low and the smallest guns found him such an easy target he was forced to rise to a great height. Larger guns then found the range and surrounded the Zepplein with a terrific hail of shrapnels and high explosives. After manoeuvring near the coast for about ten minutes and dropping a few bombs, the raider was seen to turn about and sail homeward.

VILLAGE OF HAUCOURT OCCUPIED BY GERMANS

Fierce Bombardment During the Night and a Bloody Rush by The Enemy Result in Securing a Footing—Allied Troops Now Hold Village Under Artillery Fire—Morning Surprise Attack by Allies Inflicts Visible Loss To the Enemy

Canadian Press Special

PARIS, April 6—An afternoon statement: In the Argonne district a surprise attack delivered by us this morning on one of the enemy's trenches near the highway of St. Hubert resulted in our inflicting perceptible losses on our adversaries and in bringing back to our lines some twenty prisoners.

During this attack our artillery, in the next sector violently bombarded that portion of Avocourt woods occupied by the Germans. In the region of Verdun the enemy, after relative calm of yesterday afternoon, gave evidence of a very great activity during the evening hours. As night progressed there took place to the west of the Meuse a bombardment of extreme violence in the region between Avocourt and Bethincourt. This was followed by a series of attacks in which large numbers of men took part against the two principal salients of this front. All efforts of the enemy against the village of Bethincourt were checked by fire.

During this at the same time the enemy delivered a furious attack on the centre against the village of Haucourt. In spite of repeated checks and of bloody sacrifices they were successful in getting a footing during the night in this village. We now hold the village under fire of our dominating positions.

On our side after a short preparatory fire, we delivered a spirited attack, our men coming out from a redoubt of Avocourt, their purpose being to connect this redoubt with one of our works situated on the boundary line of the wood to the north of Avocourt.

During this operation, which was in all respects successful, we occupied a large portion of territory known as "Le Bois Carre" and took fifty prisoners.

To the east of the River Meuse two attacks on the part of the enemy directed against our position to the north of Caillette wood resulted only in serious losses to the Germans.

STRONG TURKISH FORT TAKEN BY THE BRITISH

Last Big Obstacle to March on Kut-el-Amara Removed--Important News From Gen. Lake—Operations Along the Tigris River Are Proceeding Satisfactorily

LONDON, April 6.—(Special.)—A victory for the British over the Turks on the Tigris River below Kut-el-Amara, has been reported by General Lake, in command of the British forces there. The Turkish entrenched position at Umm-el-Henna was attacked and carried at 5 o'clock this morning by the Tigris Corps. Gen. Lake telegraphed, and the operations are proceeding satisfactorily.

The capture of Umm-el-Henna, which is on the Tigris about twenty miles downstream from Kut-el-Amara, is the most important news from this theatre in some time, and is regarded here as giving promise of the early relief of Gen. Townshend's force, which has been besieged in Kut-el-Amara since the first week in December.

Umm-el-Henna is a strong position at an important bend of the river, and is said to be the last serious barrier to the relief of Gen. Townshend, although two or three less strong positions are still to be overcome before Kut-el-Amara is reached.

Next to the Dardanelles expedition the operations in Mesopotamia have been a subject on which the Government has been more criticized than any other, not only owing to the breakdown in the hospital arrangements, but on the question of responsibility for the advance, with insufficient forces, toward Bagdad.

More Deeds Less Words

Russia's New War Minister Out to Beat Germany

PETROGRAD, via London, April 5.—The new war minister, General Chouvaieff, announces in an interview in the Russian press that he intends to concentrate his efforts on providing the army with sufficient equipment to gain a victory over Germany. In order to do this, the minister said, the National Defence Committees and the All-Russian Zemstvo Union must be improved, reorganized and freed from bureaucratic influence.

"In our military administration," said General Chouvaieff, "there must be more deeds and fewer words, and we must make quicker decisions. It must be seen to, not only that our organizations for carrying on the war fulfil the work assigned to them, but that they fulfil it in the appointed time. The organization of our factories must be improved and they must be set to work to their fullest capacity."

The minister predicted a long war, but declared that Russia had sufficient men and means to last to the end.

According to information received from Dvinsk, serious food riots are taking place in Russian towns, now occupied from Vilkomir that a hungry mob, having plundered the shops in vain for bread, marched to German military headquarters and besieged the commandant, clamoring for food. On being informed that nothing could be done to help them, the population became furious and hurled cobble stones at the commandant and his staff. A street battle ensued between the mob and German patrols, in which a considerable number were killed or wounded.

Serbia Soon to Prove Existence

Bulgarian Premier's Bombastic Assertions Replied to by Minister to France

PARIS, April 5.—Dr. M. R. Vesnitch, Serbian minister to France, made to the Associated Press today the following statement concerning the quoted declaration by M. Radoslavoff, the Bulgarian premier, to the American minister at Sofia that Serbia has ceased to exist as a sovereign nation:

"Premier Radoslavoff's assertion should not be taken seriously, as it is contrary to the facts and contrary to the elementary principles of International Law relative to the means whereby the sovereignty of a nation can be extinguished.

"Within the last century Prussia was invaded, Berlin occupied the Prussian territory divided, but no one asserted that Prussia's national sovereignty was extinguished. Any such claim as to Serbia is infantile, for, while her territory is invaded, it is a military occupation, and one of the first principles of International Law is that military occupation does not constitute political sovereignty.

"Serbia as a nation retains complete sovereignty and continues to carry out all governmental functions. The temporary military occupation is only one passing phase of the vast conflict.

"We believe that the Serbian army, reconstituted, will soon have a part in expelling the invader, but if a single foot of Serbian soil remains under the military authority of the invader it will remain for a future congress of nations to determine whether its political sovereignty as a part of Serbia is terminated.

"Even Germany, which invented the theory that treaties were scraps of paper, never had the effrontery to assert that Belgium or Serbia no longer had a sovereign existence. I am quite sure that M. Radoslavoff will not have to wait very long to see how unfounded is his theory that Serbia does not exist."

AIRMAN FROM TORONTO OVER GERMAN TRENCHES

Racy Description of How Lieutenant C. I. Van Nostrand Dived To Safety With Observer Killed and Machine Riddled With Gunfire

TORONTO, April 6.—Special—A flight marked with daring and adventure, during which his observer was killed, is described by Flight Lieut. C. I. Van Nostrand, son of Mr. George J. Van Nostrand, 61 Delaware avenue, in a letter to his mother.

The letter, dated March 16, is as follows:

"Have been having a rather exciting time since writing you—in fact, much more so than I like. As you know, I was temporarily attached to No. 13 Squadron last Monday, as they were short of pilots through sickness and one thing and another. Tuesday morning this squadron was ordered to do a reconnaissance some ten or twelve miles over the lines.

"Six machines took part, and we started out about 10.15 at 8,500 feet. On going over the lines we met with a heavy shell-fire from German anti-aircraft guns. They got our height perfectly, but none of the machines were damaged, so on we went. On arriving at our objective we were again greeted with 'Archie,' which got my machine. The shell burst beside my engine, blowing a hole clean through the crank case, and also knocking away half of our cylinder. The engine kept on running, however, at a much reduced rate of speed. Of course, I couldn't keep up with the others, and to make things worse, was attacked by a Fokker (a fast German scout). He cut me off completely from the rest and started a rapid machine-gun fire at us. We gave fight and fought him off two or three times.

"My observer was Parks, a mechanic, and a mighty good shot, cool and brainy. He fought on till his machine gun jammed. He then got the other one, but found it was shot through and useless. The next instant he was shot through the back, and must have been killed instantly. This left me absolutely defenceless, with a dead engine. The Fokker still hung around me, firing bursts every few seconds. I jockeyed the machine continually, so gave him hard work at aiming. The machine was by this time about 6,000 feet up, so I jammed her nose down and dived at 110 miles an hour. After waiting what seemed like hours, to my joy I saw the trenches ahead, and determined to get over them if possible. The engine by this time was on her last legs, as all the oil had run out of the punctured pump. Well, I crossed the lines at 1,000 feet, and was literally riddled with rifle and machine-gun fire, but I didn't care what happened then. I landed about a mile and a half back of our lines, near a heavy gun battery.

"Fortunately, the R.A.M.C. was quite near, and were there to give me assistance immediately. My observer was quite dead, so he couldn't have suffered much, poor fellow. We got him out, and I saw that he had a decent burial. There isn't anything more to tell. My escape was the luckiest possible, and I can hardly realize it now."

THROUGH TRAINS FROM HALIFAX TO THE PACIFIC

OTTAWA, April 6.—Special—Hon. Dr. Reid, Acting Minister of Railways, told Parliament during the consideration of railway estimates that the question of through service over the National Transcontinental and Grand Trunk Pacific was now being considered. The Minister predicted that before long through trains, both passenger and freight, would be running between Halifax, St. John and the Pacific coast.

General and detailed criticism was launched by Hon. George P. Graham and Hon. Dr. Pugsley against the management and operation of the N. T. R., changes in terminal plans and in road standardization, from all of which, it was pointed out, the railway had suffered.

Discussion also centered for a time around the history and control of the water powers along the Trent Valley Canal. Hon. Mr. Graham defended the action of the Dominion Government from the time when the Ontario Government handed them over to the Federal authorities in 1905. Hon. Dr. Reid maintained that the ownership of the Trent Valley Canal water powers was vested in the Dominion Government.

Thirteen items, approximating $300,000, were passed before the House adjourned.

THE SENATE'S OBSTINACY PREVENTED NAVAL AID

OTTAWA, April 6.—(Special.)— A statetnme re garding the government's statement regarding the Government's mons yesterday by the Prime Minister. "In the autumn of 1913," he said, "the Government had under consideration the reintroduction of the naval bill of 1912, but thought such reintroduction undesirable, unless there was some reasonable prospect that it would not be defeated in the senate. Confidential enquiries were made for the purpose of ascertaining whether such a bill, either in its original form or in some modified form, might be expected to pass the senate; thus enabling Canada to assume her proper share in maintaining the common defence of the empire.

"It was reported to the Prime Minister as the result of these enquiries that no assurance could be given of the acceptance by the senate either of the naval bill in its original form or of a modified proposal which the government were prepared to consider. For this reason no action was taken, and it was thought undesirable to renew the controversy without any reasonable hope that the government's proposal would be carried in the senate."

CAUCASUS POSITIONS CAPTURED BY RUSSIAN ADVANCE TROOPS

PETROGRAD, April 6.—Special—The following official statement was issued to-day:—

"Caucasus front—In the littoral the Turks, supported by their cruiser Breslau, attacked our right flank. We repulsed the attack, inflicting heavy losses on the eenmy. Our troops simultaneously attacked the enemy's centre in the same region and captured a portion of his positions. In the basin of the upper Tchoruk we dislodged the enemy from a series of his strongly fortified mountain positions."

Presentation to Lieut. E. Elliott

Informal Military Smoker Results In a Pleasing Remembrance

Under the auspices of the non-commissioned officers of the 155th Battalion who have been attending the Provincial School of Instruction here, presided over by Lieut. E. Elliott, an enjoyable event took place last evening in the lecture room of the Armouries. It partook of the nature of a smoker, and proved to be one of the most pleasing functions held here for some time. A large number were present, including Lt.-Col. Adams, the popular commanding officer of the 155th Battalion, and a number of officers. All present appeared to be thoroughly at home.

During the evening a presentation was made to Lieut. E. Elliott on behalf of the members of the class under his tuition. This was made by Col. Adams for the donors. The present was a handsome silver cigarette case, and an amber cigarette mouth-piece. The latter was in a silver case, lined with gold. In making the presentation, Col. Adams referred to the excellent work done by Lieut. Elliott. Upon the cigarette case was engraved the following inscription: "Presented to Lieut. E. Elliott, by N.C.O.'s of class 8, 155th Battalion, April 5th, 1916." In response to the presentation the recipient made a most suitable address. The affair was then of an informal nature, and several present gave brief addresses, which were interspersed with songs. The proceeding closed by the singing of the National Anthem.

At the conclusion of the programme refreshments were served.

CALLED BY DEATH

WM. JARVIS

Mr. Wm. Jarvis died yesterday afternoon in Thurlow Township. Deceased, who was 80 years of age, was born at Holton, England, but had resided in Hastings County many years, being by occupation a farmer. An aged widow survives. The remains will be taken to Eldorado, Madoc Township, for interment.

MRS. LUCY C. HOWELL.

In the death of Mrs. Lucy Coleman Howell, relict of Rev. Jacob E. Howell, which occurred this morning at her residence, 236 George Street, Belleville loses one of its best known and most respected residents. Mrs. Howell was the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. James Jamieson, and was born in Belleville in 1841.

During their married life Mr. and Mrs. Howell were located at the Methodist churches in Canifton, Bloomfield, Trenton, Newcastle, Aurora, Owen Sound, Seaforth, Berlin, Goderich, Acton, Waterloo, Beamsville, and other parishes, where successful work attended their labors.

Following her husband's death in 1903, Mrs. Howell returned to Belleville, where she has since resided on the site of the old home of her parents, and where she was born at 236 George street.

She leaves to mourn her loss two sons and two daughters: Dr. A. J. Howell, Bayport, Mich.; W. B. L. Howell, B.A., Principal of Port Arthur Collegiate Institute; Mrs. E. A. Edkins, Chicago; Mrs. F. S. Deacon, Belleville, and one brother, Mr. Jas. C. Jamieson, St. Paul, Minn., formerly connected with The Intelligencer.

At the Khaki Club Last Night

Now that the days the men of the 80th have to spend in Belleville are numbered, they are taking every advantage of every opportunity to attend the Khaki Club, where they have spent so many pleasant evenings. Though more than half the right half battalion is away on pass, there was a very large number at the Wednesday evening programme at the club last night. All those assisting were from among the number that the men have become most acquainted with because of their continued kindness. Some of the many numbers were "The Only Way", sung by Miss Gene Caldwell; "The Rose in the Bud," by Miss Sybil Grant; "An Irish Lullaby", by Miss Gladys Vermilyea. Miss Doris Vermilyea and Miss Dorothy Grant played for the solos and for the choruses that the men enjoy so much. Several soldiers contributed to the programme, which finished about ten o'clock, after which the usual refreshments were served. By way of variety quite a number of the men spent sometime in the canteen enjoying selections on the gramaphone, presented last week. Everyone was highly delighted with it and can imagine how it will brighten the hours on the troop train, the transport and in the camps overseas.

The tea cosey presented to the Khaki Club and to be disposed of by them was drawn for at the Trench Tea on March 31st, when Mrs. Wheatley was fortunate in securing the valuable card.

POULTRY ASSOCIATION ELECT NEW OFFICERS

The annual meeting of the Belleville Poultry Association was held last evening and was well attended. The Association has a considerable membership and is increasing yearly. The reports presented were of an encouraging nature. After routine business had been completed the election of officers for the ensuing year took place, resulting as follows: President, Thos. Moore; Vice-President, J. V. Truiasch; Secretary, Wm. J. Thomson; Treasurer, T. Sullivan; Directors—Messrs. J. Freeman, P. McKnight; A. S. Large, E. T. Thompson, J. Archibald, P. Denike, W. Moore, D. J. Corrigan, J. McNulty.

Soldier Injured By an Auto

Private Parker, a member of the 80th Battalion of Belleville, was last evening the victim of an automobile accident. It appears that Parker was crossing Front street, near the junction of Victoria Avenue, when he was knocked down by an auto driven by Mr. Frank Johnson of this city, and two wheels of the machine passed over the prostrated soldier. He sustained a severe cut upon the forehead and his nose was injured. The victim was placed in the car and taken to the hospital, where his injuries were attended to. No serious results are anticipated. No blame, it is alleged, is attached to Mr. Johnson, as he gave a warning and Parker went ahead, then backed up a step or two, going forward again just as the car was upon him. The victim of the unfortunate affair is comparatively a young man and his home is in the country.

J. Wesley Allison Will Come Back

Wires an Official at Ottawa That He May be Expected Next Week

OTTAWA, April 5.—Col. John Wesley Allison, the central figure in the Kyte charges, is coming back to Canada to give his evidence. A telegram was received today by an official of the Davidson Commission from Col. Allison in which he announced that he might be expected in Ottawa next week. The message, of course, shows the present whereabouts of the colonel.

The arrival of this message is the first answer to the Liberal complaint that the royal commission appointed by the Government to investigate the Kyte charges would not be able to conduct a fruitful inquiry because the witnesses were in the United States. The chief witness will be in Ottawa next week, when Gen. Sir Sam Hughes will also, it is expected, have reached the Capital.

Col. Allison testified before the Davidson Commission in December with reference to the purchase of revolvers from the Colts Arms Company, and, according to statements made since, his evidence on that occasion did not disclose the facts. The commission has endeavored since to have him recalled, but without success. Col. Allison having been reported to be too ill to appear. Following his next attendance before the Davidson Commission, it is likely that the Public Accounts Committee of the House will seek to have him as a witness.

SEATS SELLING AT DOYLE'S

In a State Of Congestion

MONTREAL, April 6.—The Canadian Pacific Railway has placed a temporary embargo on loaded cars for delivery to the Intercolonial portion of the Canadian Government road to take loads which the C.P.R. is holding and has held in some cases for six weeks, resulting in a congestion which is seriously hampering the movement of traffic through C.P.R. terminals. It is understood that hundreds such cars are lying idle waiting acceptance by the Canadian Government railways.

2 boxes were also forwarded from "The Forget Me Not Circle" to Dublin Castle Hospital, which were financed by friends of the Circle during the illness of Mrs. S. S. Lazier.

Letters have also been received from Lady Jellicoe acknowledging with many thanks the donations sent to her fund from Belleville and vicinity and saying that as her fund was closed shortly after Christmas the donation was given to the Women's National Service League, of which Lady Jellicoe and Lady French are the Presidents.

A receipt was also received from Miss J. V. Faithful, Secretary of this society, whose headquarters are at Westminster Palace Hotel, S. W.

This society has been founded as a memorial for the brave men who have given their lives for the Empire, and is for work among the widows and children of these heroes.

Thanks were also expressed for the beautiful white socks which were sent to Sir John Jellicoe by the "Forget Me Not Circle", and presented by Miss D. I. Sutherland. Miss Sutherland has sent a second pair, which will be sent to Admiral Charles Madden.

A donation of $1.00 was received from Mrs. R. J. Bell, and 10 hospital handkerchiefs from Mrs. C. Clarke.

F. M. Lazier, Convenor.

MUSIC AND DRAMA

"GRAFT" AT THE PALACE LAST NIGHT

We have read of and even witnessed scenes of graft in many of its hideous phases in the larger cities of this continent, and noted the results, sometimes with sympathy, sometimes with satisfaction—in any sense enigma to the fair-minded populace. Individual grafting is morally low; municipal grafting is lower; but when a trust, a combination of avaricious minds is formed for the purpose of making the poor more destitute, the wage-earner practically homless, and the work of extreme of meanness has been reached. Such were the conditions, when the first instalment of the serial of this title was thrown upon the screen at the Palace Theatre last night featuring the film stars, Hobart Henley, the newly elected district attorney, and Jane Novak, the settlement worker, in heroic deeds for the right. The inner workings of the graft trust were vividly revealed; the conditions of the tenement districts portrayed, and throughout the play the gripping hand of the tyrant was visible, while the determination to stand for right forged to the front on the part of the leading characters. The play opened strongly, indicating a most attractive story—one that should draw largely, as the subject is true to life.

Minor screen plays, including "Silk Hose and High Pressure," in which "Billie Ritchie" figured prominently, were of a humorous nature. "Graft", in its first instalment will be repeated to-night.

"WITHIN THE LAW"

The attraction at Griffin's Opera House tonight is Bayard Veiller's "Within the Law," which ran for an entire year at the Eltinge Theatre, New York City. This is the melodrama treating of modern conditions in New York life, which has caused a sensation not only in the metropolis, but throughout the country; for it has provoked editorial comment and praise from such eminent Americans as Rev. Chas. H. Parkhurst who wrote of the play "All employers of labor, who underpay their women employees, should go to see this play for the lesson it will teach them;" and the Bishop of Wyoming, who said, "I shall never forget the lesson it portrayed." "Within the Law" is in four acts, and as many scenes. It will be given here by well-known players who have scored individual hits in their respective roles.

POTASH AND PERLMUTTER, TUESDAY

It is interesting to know that Montague Glass, the author of the famous Potash and Perlmutter stories in the Saturday Evening Post, studied his characters at first hand, while a young lawyer in New York City. In fact the author now admits that he was often more interested in his clients than in their troubles and that it was the literary possibilities rather than the legal probabilities that attracted him during his service at the Bar.

Young Mr. Glass—yes, Montague Glass is his real name,—had what is known as a "commercial" practice and among his patrons were many "Abes" and "Mawrusses," but Mr. Glass insists that his Potash and Perlmutter, Lawyer Feldman and the others are all composite characters.

Mr. Glass' world-renouned characters will soon be seen here in the flesh and blood for "Potash and Perlmutter" the famous comedy comes to Griffin's Opera House next Tuesday night direct from its second year in the Cohan Theatre, New York Jane Fearnley the famous Moving Picture star is the leading lady of the company which consists of 27 people.

GOING to the front?—Then don't forget you will need some Zam-Buk! The soldiers at the front are asking for more of it. Pte. J. R. Smith, of the "Princess Pats," writing home, says: "Tell my friends there is one thing I should be glad to get—that's Zam-Buk." Also Corp. Fremlin, of the 10th Field Ambulance, writing from France, says: "We are finding Zam-Buk splendid for injuries and ailments, but—we haven't enough of it."

Zam-Buk cannot be equalled for the injuries and ailments incidental to trench life. There is nothing that ends pain and heals so quickly. For cuts, scratches, bruises, stiff joints, and all skin ailments it is equally good. For sore and blistered feet, caused by long standing and marching, there is nothing brings such relief as Zam-Buk, and for sores of all kinds Zam-Buk is invaluable. Having some Zam-Buk on hand to apply immediately an injury is sustained will save a man much unnecessary pain.

If you are not going to the front, there is another way in which you can "do your bit"—help relieve the sufferings of the men in the trenches by sending them Zam-Buk. All druggists 50c. box, 3 for $1.25, or post free for price, from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto.

Nervous and Almost Crazy With Pains in the Head

No ailment is more discouraging than Nervous Prostration. You may feel better for a day or two, only to find the next day that you have lost ground and are worse than ever. The headaches are worse, languid feelings are terribly depressing. As you lose strength you lose hope and courage and look to the future with fear and trembling.

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is the greatest blessing that has ever come to the sufferer from nervous exhaustion. It is not narcotic in its influence. It does not deaden the trembling, irritated nerves, but through the medium of the blood nourishes them back to health as nothing else can.

Mrs. Alonzo B. Eisner, Billtown, King's county, N.S., writes:—"I was very low with nervous prostration and was about discouraged, as I could not sleep nights and was almost crazy with the pain in my head. I had tried many doctors, but seemed to get little benefit from their treatments.

Almanac, so that I might read about the Nerve Food. A single box of this treatment convinced me of its value, for I was better. I cannot tell how many boxes I used, but the results were so highly satisfactory that I cannot praise it too much. My health and strength have been restored so that I can do all my own work and I recommend the Nerve Food to all who suffer from nervous prostration.".

"This is to certify that I am acquainted with Mrs. A. B. Eisner and believe her statement in regard to Dr. Chase's Nerve Food to be true and correct."—Rev. Arthur A. Whitman.

Some patience is required in the treatment of nervous prostration, but you will not be using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food long before you begin to find your strength and good cheer returning. You will then be encouraged to continue the use of the food cure until cured. 50 cents a box, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Company,

CANADIANS IN AFRICA

MANY ARE FIGHTING FOR EMPIRE ON DARK CONTINENT.

N. J. Spedding, Who Has Been Through the East African Campaign Tells of the Work Which is Being Carried on Against the German Colonies—Good Proportion of Canadians There.

N. J. SPEDDING, Corporal, B. Company, 25th Royal Fusiliers, British Expeditionary Force, British East Africa, contributes to The Family Herald and Weekly Star an interesting article on Canadians on service in the Dark Continent.

Everyone in Canada knows of the heroism of the various Canadian troops in Europe, and of the generous donation in the shape of grain, etc., but little mention is made of the thousands of loyal Canadians who have traveled to England at their own expense, and have there enlisted in every branch of the service. Even here in the campaign in British East Africa, they are well represented. The 25th Battalion, Royal Fusiliers, one of the few white regiments in this part of the world—comprises many colonials, and most of them are either Canadians, or are of Canadian experience.

Here the fighting is entirely different from the wholesale slaughter in Europe. British East Africa is essentially a wild country, and seeing that British and German territory adjoin for some hundreds of miles, the work of defending this country from an enemy prepared for aggressive warfare is no light task. Of course the British here were not prepared—ca va sans dire—there was a mere handful of colored troops here at the commencement of hostilities.

The enemy's chief objective throughout the campaign has been the Uganda Railway, which runs parallel to the German frontier, as far as the Victoria Nyanza. But the untiring activity of our troops has foiled them from the beginning. Our patrols have been constantly in touch with the enemy; this in itself is no light task, for the nature of the country is such that most of the patrols are performed by infantry, and infantry work, as close to the equator as this, with equipment, ammunition, etc., is worse than the fighting itself.

With so much happening in Europe, but little notice is taken of a patrol skirmish in East Africa, but here it is terribly real. A small party of men go out to patrol the railway, a sudden burst of firing is heard, and then silence, and the reinforcements find nothing but mutilated corpses, for victory is to the patrol that sees its enemy first, a case of ambushing or being ambushed.

One battle we had, the battle of Bukoba, in June of this year, and it was a complete success. Bukoba, a port on the German side of the Victoria Nyanza lake, was being used by the enemy as a headquarters for their raiders. After two days' fighting, we completely routed the enemy, and destroyed the wireless station, and an accumulation of stores and ammunition. It was in this raid that a gallant Canadian—Sergeant-Major Bottomley, of Toronto—was killed.

British East Africa is a country well worth seeing, if one is traveling for pleasure. Kilimanjaro, the highest mountain in Africa, is a remarkable sight. This mountain is some 19,000 feet high, and while the base is usually entirely screened by cloud banks, the huge snow peaks can be seen from hundreds of miles, a sight not to be forgotten, for in the sweltering heat, where the very sand seems to burn the skin, it seems impossible that one is looking on deep frozen snow.

Then there is the game, and it is the truth, that East Africa is named the hunters' paradise, for in the forest region of the coast, are occasional herds of elephants, and shrieking tribes of baboons and monkeys, while the leopard and cheetah lurk in the undergrowth. Further west on the Masai plains, the veldt is literally black with thousands upon thousands of spring-bak, congoni, hartebeeste, and buffalo. Zebra, ostrich, and giraffe are also numerous, and the jackals, hyenas, and vultures—the scavengers of the country—are everywhere. At night on outpost duty, the deep toned roar of the lion is sometimes heard, proving that the king of beasts is by no means extinct. Duty has taken men to practically every part of East Africa, within trekking distance of the railway, and one of the wonders of the world is the soda-lakes. Big lakes, appearing from the distance, like any other lakes, but instead of water, limitless tons of soda, which seems to radiate heat and the fumes of which give one an intolerable thirst.

Needless to say I am looking forward to the cessation of hostilities; which will enable me to rejoin my wife and friends in the land of the Maple Leaf.

"It is grim work out here," writes Regimental Sergt.-Major Roy Edwards, of the 26th (New Brunswick) Battalion. "In the five months that I have been at the front I have seen awful things. I have seen sights bad enough to make strong men weep, but over here men soon become philosophers, fatalists if you will. We quickly harden to our work. These awful things that we see become, as it were, a part of our day's routine, and as we go about our duties never knowing who among us will next be called by the messengers of death that are forever searching our trenches for victims, each one of us is happy in the knowledge that the bullet bearing his number has not yet come this way.

"My regiment has been pretty hard hit. Our total losses have been heavy, and to-day many of our boys who came here full of life and ambition five months ago are sleeping in the graveyard just outside of our lines."

THIS IS THE 612TH DAY THE BRITISH EMPIRE HAS BEEN AT WAR WITH GERMANY.

AN EXAMPLE IN ECONOMICS.

A common view taken by statisticians as to the results of the unparalleled European conflict is that its conclusion will find every country connected with it in a state of absolute bankruptcy. Indications, however, point to erroneous calculations in this regard, as revealed by Sir George Paish, the eminent statistician, who makes the assertion that Great Britain, notwithstanding the tremendous drain on her resources occasioned by the withdrawal approximately of four million persons from her industrial army, has nearly succeeded in maintaining her productive powers.

He further states that the annual income of Great Britain has increased by three billion dollars since the outbreak of the war and is now fifteen billion dollars a year.

Sir George has the reputation for truthfulness and strict adherence to facts, hence we must assume that he speaks with proper knowledge and authority. How has this economic miracle been effected? It may be accounted for by two things—the speeding up of industries and the utilization of non-producers.

Workers, instead of being obsessed by earning bigger wages, went in for bigger output. They wanted to "do their bit." It was their way of showing loyalty. When the call to arms depleted the ranks of the workers they were recruited from the women. Hundreds of thousands of women who had never before seen the inside of a factory turned to with a will and made munitions. The balance was speedily and suddenly adjusted. The women became producers. They worked and earned instead of idling and spending. Economy became the watchery and the trimming to a woman's bonnet was a savings bee.

Sir George Paish also tells us that British shipping rates have added not less than five hundred million dollars a year to Britain's foreign commerce profits. The British still carry the bulk of ocean-borne trade and both the Allies and neutral nations alike have added to Britain's fabulous riches. If Sir George's data is sound, it would appear that Britain will emerge from this war—the greatest in history—with her financial strength little impaired.

THE SPRING FIRE-PEAK.

If the forest fire danger were represented by a line rising and falling as the danger increased or decreased there would be a sharp rise or "peak" in the few weeks after the winter snow leaves the woods. This is so much the case that the term "spring fires" is well known to every forester. The ground is dry, the dead leaves and herbage are sapless and tindery, and the least spark may start a fire that will sweep whole miles of forest. All who go to the woods are cautioned to see that they are especially careful to put out completely their camp fires and to see that no fires start from matches, pipes, cigar stubs or firearms. Canada has many fire guardians on duty at this season, but if these rules are observed much more timber will be saved than can be saved through the most strenuous time to stop a forest fire is before it starts. Canada is in a war that is taxing her resources, and every patriotic citizen will do all he can to prevent the enemy being helped by the destruction of Canadian resources.

NOTHING TO CONCEAL.

The order of the Privy Council of Canada creating a royal commission to enquire into the contracts which were the subjects of Mr. Kyte's charges in the House of Commons provides for every phase of the transactions being laid open. Besides enquiry into the contracts, the commissioners are given instruction to take note of "the acts "and proceedings of the Shell Committee, whether by themselves or "by other persons directly or indirectly, and of the Minister of "Militia and Defence, whether by "himself or by any other person or "persons directly or indirectly in "relation therewith, and into the "negotiations therefor, the profits "or prospective profits arising "thereunder, the disposition, division, or allotment of such profits "or prospective profits, or of any "commission or reward for procuring the said contracts or any of "them, and as to the persons interested in any such profits, prospective profits, reward or commissions "and, generally speaking, into all "other acts, transactions and matters of every kind relating to the "contracts." The results they are to report with the evidence. And if in carrying out these instructions it is found that there is need of new powers, it is declared that they will be duly given. The commissioners, Chief Justice Meredith, of Ontario, and Mr. Justice Duff, of the Supreme Court of Canada, are men who may be trusted to fulfil the duties thus outlined and to bring out the truth, says The Montreal Gazette. The Government is doing its duty to itself as well as to the country in the matter. The public can await the result with fair confidence that it will disclose all important facts bearing upon the issues raised.

In the House of Commons on Tuesday, Sir Thomas White pointed out that during the South African War Sir Wilfrid Laurier had refused investigation of Canadian Government purchases of war supplies for the Imperial authorities, and that during the Crimea such an investigation, attempted by the British Parliament, had been rendered abortive because, for reasons of State necessary evidence could not be produced. But the case was different where the honor of a member of the Government was concerned. The Government would be responsible if it allowed charges against the Minister of Militia to be put forward without enabling them to be proved or disproved. But it was not responsible for the Shell Committee since it had exercised no authority over it.

Pittsburg Despatch: No one will deny that Canada has done her share, and more than her share, in support of the Empire in the Empire's crisis. Her promptness in supplying men and munitions and money has surprised every one. Equalling the national readiness to answer the call has been the bravery of her soldiers in the field. While Ypres is remembered, Canadian courage will not be forgotten. Which all goes to show that folks are constituted much the same wherever they may be found, and that disputes about domestic matters need not signify disunion. An occasional squabble in the home doesn't mean that those who constitute the home wouldn't join hands to save it.

The relations between Greece and Bulgaria are still painfully polite; but the Greeks know perfectly well that the Bulgars are their implacable and inevitable enemies, and that they must fight them for Salonika sooner or later. The elimination of Serbia has exposed the Greek flank, and left them more at the mercy of the Bulgars than their finally predominates in the Balkans, Greece may expect to be compelled to pay a ransom for her right to live!

A Hamilton contemporary thinks that the crew of the Zeppelin brought down in England ought to be hanged at once. The British Government is not likely to be so reckless as that. It knows that for every German prisoner hanged in England at least one British officer confined in Germany would be strung up. The Germans do not shrink from making reprisals. Remember how they compelled the British Government to treat prisoners captured from German submarines as well as ordinary military prisoners are treated.

Montreal Star: The crew of a shattered Zeppelin which had been busy all night dropping bombs on sleeping non-combatants was rescued from the sea and warmly clothed and fed by a British patrol boat. "There is something in the English" which must be a sore puzzle to a nation which triumphantly announces the sinking of another hospital ship, filled with wounded, and, in this instance, at anchor.

Current Comment

The submarine campaign against British shipping might be kept up for years, if the war should last that long, without Britain being starved. It is small wonder that Von Tirpitz gave up his job as head of the German navy in hopelessness.

There is no doubt about Alexander Graham Bell being the inventor of the telephone. And as Mr. Bell says he invented it and first demonstrated its use in Brantford, Ont., Brantford is surely entitled to be called the "Telephone City" if she wants to be, despite Boston's claim to that appellation.—Hamilton Herald.

And when we are all fussed up over what Sir Sam is going to do here we find him reviewing Canadian troops in England and presenting D.C.M.'s. Perhaps when he comes home he'll just stand pat politically and proceed to cultivate a new crop of hothouse honorary colonels. There's no saying. —Ottawa Free Press. Don't fuss any more; Sir Sam will be on hand at the opportune moment.

At Calgary, Alta., Mr. Justice Walsh has sentenced two men to terms of ten years in prison for horse-stealing. In pioneer days in the American West the crime of horse-stealing was considered worthy of punishment with death, and numerous individuals were lynched for the offence. The Calgary sentences indicate that it is today classed with manslaughter in seriousness.—Montreal Gazette.

While no strict line of demarcation can be drawn between parliamentary and judicial investigations, the general rule is that the judicial commission does not deprive Parliament of its right and power to say whether a Government does or does not command the confidence of the country.—Toronto Star.—That may be true, but it prevents hot air artists from butting in at the end of every sentence.

Sir Thomas White aptly ticketed "Hon." Bill Pugsley when he remarked that "the member for St. John appeared to have an opposition tutelary deity to which he had to appeal with regard to every bill introduced by the government." In and out of season, with or without reason, with parrot-like insistency he is "agin it."—Hamilton Spectator.

The view entertained in Paris that Grand Admiral von Tirpitz is dying of grief because many of his young friends in the submarine service never return from their raids might be accepted with an onion, but the further assertion that remorse for the Lusitania victims is killing him will have to be rejected. What he has been sighing for is more Lusitanias.—New York Herald.

Theodore Roosevelt does not need to say a word. Every time Woodrow Wilson writes a letter, makes a speech, or keeps silent to evade an issue, he sets every man in America thinking about Roosevelt—thinking about him somehow—either wishing him back in power or fearing that an exasperated nation will go out and bring him back.—Toronto Star. Roosevelt has been more than less in the limelight since he was Governor of New York. And one with an ear to the ground will hear him in the dim distance or at hand, as the case may be.

My worthy friend,
Avoid "la grippe"

FARM AND GARDEN

SELECTIONS FOR HATCHING

Eggs for hatching should not weigh less than two nor more than two and one-half ounces. They should not be washed, as this lowers their vitality.

The eggs should be gathered two or three times daily and placed in a dry place where the temperature is below 70 degrees F.

Keep the eggs on their sides and turn twice daily before putting them into the incubator or under the hen.

Avoid eggs that have transparent shells or a roughed appearance; long, pointed or short, rounded eggs should not be used.

Use eggs uniform in size, as they absorb the heat to a better advantage. Hold no eggs for hatching purposes longer than two weeks before putting them into the incubator or under the hen.

PREFERS BORDEAUX TO LIME-SULPHUR.

Professor Lewis of Kansas Agricultural College agrees with those eastern Ontario fruit growers who hold that Bordeaux is a more efficient fungicide than lime-sulphur. In dry seasons, Prof. Lewis says, lime-sulphur has given fairly good results in Kansas, but in moist seasons the superiority of Bordeaux was manifest. With lime-sulphur sixty per cent. of clean fruit was obtained, while with Bordeaux the percentage ran up to ninety-five per cent.

COST OF RAISING A HEIFER

Massachusetts experiment station estimates the cost of raising a heifer from the time it is dropped until two years of age at from $46.84 to $78.79. This estimate is based on experiments with a number of animals. In arriving at the figures given skim milk was valued at 20c per 100 lbs., flax seed at $3.25 per cwt., hay at $10 per ton, silage at $4.50, and grain mixtures at $42. Pasture was figured at 25c. a week in the first year and 30c in the second. Labor cost was put in at current rates. No allowance was made for the value of the manure produced. The lowest cost was for a pure-bred Jersey, and the highest for a grade Jersey.

JOTTINGS FROM CONCESSION LINES

Farmers are making preparations to treat their seed oats for smut.

Hogs are abnormally high in price. Farm help is very scarce.—A. J. Reynolds, West Durham.

Where clover went into the winter fairly well protected I think it will come out completely uninjured.—W. C. Good, Brant county.

There seems to be in some fields a partial destruction of some of the clover plants by mice.—S. A. Beck, Haldimand county.

Outside of some abnormal development, the prospects for clover and fall wheat are decidedly good.—J. R. Lindsay, Halton county.

I think on account of help being so scarce and so expensive that there will be a decease in all crop acreages this year.—S. R. J., Kent county.

One week sleighs were running and snowbanks were six feet high. Next week there was no snow to be seen and there was no stagnant water on the land.—H. E. Webster, Ontario county.

Labor is about the most important question here—scarce and high. Some are giving as high as $50 per month with board, and wages run all the way from that down to $35.—E. C. Drury, Simcoe county.

Old clover fields are badly heaved, even on the highest ground. The new crop is also heaved to some extent. If weather conditions are favorable there will be a fair crop, probably as much as the few men left here can handle.—H. H. Blachford, Oxford county.

I notice a very decided awakening of interest among farmers in the matter of treating grain for smut. At our last Farmers' Club meeting every member present placed an order for formalin with the Secretary, and this without any particular agitation at the time.—Herbert Grob, Waterloo county.

The greatest problem at present with the farmers is the labor question. So many men who worked on the farms last year have enlisted that there is a great scarcity of help, and there has not been any sensible plan arranged yet to supply the necessary labor.—A. H. Van Loon, Norfolk county.

DEATH TO THE MOSQUITO

Unique Use of Electricity to be Tested

An inventor has come forward who believes he can free the mosquito-

see, of Philadelphia, one of the foremost electricians and chemists in the United States, asserts he has perfected through the use of electricity, a process which will exterminate mosquitoes for one year from any section where applied. The new insecticide is generated in the form of gas dissolved with the aid of an electric current which produces chlorine.

Dr. Kitsee's method will be given a thorough trial on the Grasselli spur in the Bayway meadows of Union County, N.J., by the Union County Mosquito Extermination Commission, in the near future. No date has been set for the experiment, but practically everything is in readiness to try out the new scheme. The marshes will be surcharged with electric wires attached to carbonized plates, and the electricity, which is generated by motors, is expected to cause the chlorine gas to rise from the earth and completely eradicate the mosquitoes within the charged section.

The new process is said to have solved the problem which has been puzzling scientists for years. Many attempts have been made to destroy the eggs and larvae of the insects, but without success, because of the impossibility of placing a germicide in a large enough area at a proper depth.

Dr. Kitsee's treatment of the soil is to place a quantity of chloride of sodium in a pool in which eggs and larvae abound. The electric current is then applied for the electrolizing of the chloride of sodium.

The Eternal Lover

by Edgar Rice Burroughs

Copyright, 1914, by W. G. Chapman

After he had discovered, however, that she possessed perfect coolness in the face of danger and that the accuracy of her aim was so almost uncanny as to wring unstinted praise from the oldest hunters among them he commenced to lean a trifle too far in the other direction, so that Victoria was often in positions where she found herself entirely separated from the other members of the party—a compliment to her prowess which she greatly prized, since women and beginners were usually surrounded by precautions and guards, through which it was difficult to get within firing distance of any sort of game.

As they were riding homeward one evening after a hunt in the foothills Barney noticed that his sister was unusually quiet and apparently depressed.

"What's the matter, Vic?" he asked. "Dead tired, eh?"

The girl looked up with a bright smile, which was immediately followed by an expression of puzzled bewilderment.

"Barney," she said, after a moment of silence, "there is something about those hills back there that fills me with the strangest sensation of terror imaginable. Today I passed an outcropping of volcanic rock that gave evidence of a frightful convulsion of nature in some bygone age. At sight of it I commenced to tremble from head to foot, a cold perspiration breaking out all over me.

"But that part is not so strange—you know I have always been subject to these same silly attacks of unreasoning terror at sight of any evidence of the mighty forces that have wrought changes in the earth's crust or of the slightest tremor of an earthquake. But today the feeling of unutterable personal loss which overwhelmed me was almost unbearable. It was as though one whom I loved above all others had been taken from me.

"And yet," she continued, "through all my inexplicable sorrow there shone a ray of brilliant hope as remarkable and unfathomable as the deeper and depressing emotion which still stirred me."

For some time neither spoke, but rode silently stirrup to stirrup as their ponies picked their ways through the knee high grass. The girl was thinking, trying to puzzle out an explanation of the rather weird sensations which had so recently claimed her.

Barney Custer was one of those unusual and delightful people who do not scoff at whatever they cannot understand—the reason, doubtless, that his sister as well as others chose him as the recipient of their confidences. Not understanding her emotion, he had nothing to offer, and so remained silent.

He was, however, not a little puzzled, as he had always been, at each new manifestation of Victoria's uncanny reaction of every indication of the great upheaval which marked the physical changes in the conformation of the earth's crust.

He recalled former occasions upon which his sister had confided in him something of similar terrors.

Once in the Garden of the Gods and again during a trip through the Grand Canyon in Arizona, and very vivid indeed was the recollection of Victoria's nervous collapse following the reading of the press dispatches describing the San Francisco earthquake. In all other respects his sister was an exceptionally normal, well balanced young American woman—which fact, doubtless, rendered her one weakness the more apparent.

But Victoria Custer's terror of earthquakes was not her only peculiarity. The other was her strange contempt for the men who had sued for her hand—and of these there had been many. Her brother had thought several of them the salt of the earth and Victoria herself had liked them too. But as for loving them—perish the thought!

Oddly enough, recollection of this other phase of her character obtruded itself upon Barney's memory as the two rode on toward the Clayton bungalow, and with it he recalled a persistent dream which Victoria had said recurred after each reminder of a great convulsion of nature. At the thought he broke the silence.

"Has your—ah!—avatar made his customary appearance?" he asked, smiling.

The girl extended her hand toward her brother and laid it on his, where it rested upon his thigh as he rode, looking up at him with half frightened, half longing eyes.

"Oh, Barney," she cried, "you are such a dear never to have laughed at my silly dreams! I'm sure I should go quite mad did I not have you in whom to confide, but lately I have hesitated to speak of it even to you—he has been coming so often!

"Every night since we first hunted in the vicinity of the hills I have walked hand in hand with him beneath a great equatorial moon beside a restless sea, and more clearly than ever in the past have I seen his form and features.

"He is very handsome, Barney, and very tall and strong and clean limbed. I wish that I might meet such a man in real life. I know it is a ridiculous thing to say, but I can never love any not after having walked hand in hand with such as he and read the love in his clear eyes.

"And yet, Barney, I am afraid of him. Is it not odd?"

At this juncture they were joined by other members of the party, so that no further reference to the subject was made by either.

At the Claytons' they found that an addition had been made to the number of guests by the unheralded advent of two khaki clad young men, one of whom rose and came forward to meet the returning hunters while they were yet a hundred yards away.

He was a tall, athletic appearing man. As Victoria Custer recognized his features she did not know whether to be pleased or angry. Here was the one man she had ever met who came nearest to the realization of her dream man, and this one of all the others had never spoken a word of love to her. His companion, who had now risen from the cool shade of the low veranda, was also coming forward, but more slowly, the set of his shoulders and the swing of his stride betokening his military vocation.

"Mr. Curtiss!" exclaimed Victoria and looking past him, "And Lieutenant Butzow! Where in the world did you come from?"

"The world left us," replied the officer, smiling, "and we have followed her to the wilds of equatorial Africa."

"We found Nebraska a very tame place after you and Barney left," explained Mr. Curtiss, "and when I discovered that Butzow would accompany me we lost no time in following you, and here we are throwing ourselves upon the mercy and hospitality of Lady Greystoke."

"I have been trying to convince them," said that lady, who had now joined the party at the foot of the veranda steps, "that the obligation is all upon our side. It taxes our ingenuity and the generosity of our friends to keep the house even half full of congenial companions."

It was not until after dinner that night that Mr. William Curtiss had an opportunity to draw Miss Victoria Custer away from the others upon some more or less hazy pretext that he might explain for her ears alone just why he had suddenly found Beatrice, Neb., such a desolate place and had realized that it was imperative to the salvation of his life and happiness that he travel halfway round the world in search of a certain slender bit of femininity.

This usually self possessed young man stammered and hesitated like a bashful schoolboy speaking his Friday afternoon piece, but finally he managed to expel from his system more or less coherently the fact that he was very much in love with Victoria Custer and that he should never again eat or sleep until she had promised to be his wife.

There was a strong appeal to the girl in the masterful thing the man had done in searching her out in the wilds of Africa to tell her of his love, for it seemed that he and Butzow had forced their way with but a handful of carriers through a very savage section of the jungle because it was the shortest route from the coast to the Greystoke ranch.

Then there was that about him which appealed to the same attribute of her nature to which the young giant of her dreams appealed—a primitive strength and masterfulness that left her both frightened and happily helpless in the presence of both these strong loves, for the love of her dream man was to Victoria Custer a real and living love.

Curtiss saw assent in the silence which followed his outbreak, and, taking advantage of this tacit encouragement, he seized her hands in his and drew her toward him.

"Oh, Victoria," he whispered, "tell me that thing I wish to hear from your dear lips! Tell me that even a tenth part of my love is returned and I shall be happy!"

She looked up into his eyes, shining down upon her in the moonlight, and on her lips trembled an avowal of the love she honestly believed she could at last bestow upon the man of her choice.

In the past few moments she had thrashed out the question of that other unreal and intangible love that had held her chained to a dream for years, and in the cold light of twentieth century American rationality she had found it possible to put her hallucinations from her and find happiness in the love of this very real and very earnest young man.

"Billy," she said, "I"—

But she got no further.

Even as the words that would have bound her to him were forming upon her tongue there came a low, sullen rumbling from the bowels of the earth—the ground rose and fell beneath them as the swell of the sea rises and falls.

Then there came a violent trembling and shaking and a final deafening crash in the distance that might have accompanied the birth of mountain ranges.

With a little moan of terror the girl drew away from Curtiss, and then, before he could restrain her, she had turned and fled toward the bungalow

KIDNEY DISEASE WAS KILLING HIM

HAGERSVILLE, ONT., Aug. 26th, 1913.

"About two years ago, I found my health in a very bad state. My Kidneys were not doing their work and I was all run down in condition. Having seen 'Fruit-a-tives' advertised, I decided to try them. Their action was mild, and the result all that could be expected.

My Kidneys resumed their normal action after I had taken upwards of a dozen boxes and I regained my old-time vitality. Today, I am as well as ever."

by the other members of the house party and by the Greystokes and numerous servants, who had rushed out at the first premonition of the coming shock.

Barney Custer saw his sister running toward the house and, knowing her terror of such phenomena, ran to meet her.

Close behind her came Curtiss, just in time to see the girl swoon in her brother's arms.

CHAPTER III.

The Young Hunter.

THE shock that had been felt so plainly in the valley had been much more severe in the mountains to the south. In one place an overhanging cliff had split and fallen away from the face of the mountain, tumbling with a mighty roar into the valley below.

As it hurtled down the mountain side the moonlight, shining upon the fresh scar that it had left behind it upon the hill's face, revealed the mouth of a gloomy cave, from which there tumbled the inert figure of an animal, which rolled down the steep declivity in the wake of the mass of rock that had preceded it, the tearing away of which had opened up the cavern in which it had lain.

For a hundred feet perhaps the body rolled, coming to a stop upon a broad ledge. For some time it lay perfectly motionless, but at last a feeble movement of the limbs was discernible. Then for another long period it was quiet.

Minutes dragged into hours, and still the lonely thing lay upon the lonely mountain side, while upon the plain below it hungry lions moaned and roared, and all the teeming life of the savage wilds took up their search for food, their sleeping and their love making where they had dropped them in the fright of the earthquake.

At last the stars paled, and the eastern horizon glowed to a new day, and then the thing upon the ledge sat up.

It was a man. Still partly dazed, he drew his hand across his eyes and looked about him in bewilderment; then, staggering a little, he rose to his feet, and as he came erect, the new sun shining on his bronzed limbs and his shock of black hair, roughly cropped between sharpened stones, his youth and beauty became startlingly apparent.

He looked about him upon the ground, and not finding that which he sought, turned his eyes upward toward the mountain until they fell upon the cave mouth he had just quitted so precipitately. Quickly he clambered back to the cavern, his stone hatchet and knife beating against his bare hips as he climbed.

For a moment he was lost to view within the cave, but presently he emerged, in one hand a stone tipped spear, which seemed recently to have been broken and roughly spliced with raw tendons, and in the other the severed head of an enormous beast, which more nearly resembled the royal tiger of Asia than it did any other beast, though that resemblance was little closer than is the resemblance of the royal Bengal to a house kitten.

The young man was Nu, the son of Nu.

For a hundred thousand years he had lain hermetically sealed in his rocky tomb, as toads remain in suspended animation for similar periods of time. The earthquake had unsealed his sepulcher, and the rough tumble down the mountain side had induced respiration.

His heart had responded to the pumping of his lungs, and simultaneously the other organs of his body had resumed their various functions.

As he stood upon the threshold of the cave of Oo, the man hunter, the look of bewilderment grew upon his features as his eyes roved over the panorama of the unfamiliar world which lay spread below him. There was scarce an object to remind him of the world that had been but a brief instant before, for Nu could not know that ages had rolled by since he took hasty refuge in the lair of the great beast he had slain.

He thought that he might be dreaming, and so he rubbed his eyes and looked again; but still he saw the unfamiliar trees and bushes about him and, farther down in the valley, the odd appearing vegetation of the jungle. Nu could not fathom the mystery of it.

Anxiety Grows For Shackleton

Aurora Reports Unseasonable Summer Blizzards Which May Endanger Explorer

LONDON, April 5.—Messages from New Zealand received yesterday gave fuller news of the Aurora, which has reached Dunedin, and enabled a definite opinion to be formed on the situation in the Antarctic. Evidently the explorer encountered much worse weather than usually is experienced in the Antarctic in summer. A series of blizzards put the Aurora in constant peril and finally drove it away, at the same time hampering the work of the shore parties whose business it was to establish depots. Nevertheless, it is clear enough that food not only for the marooned men, but also for Shackleton's party, will be available from the stores landed. Fuel and clothing may prove to be short. Captain MacIntosh and the party which went inland had been missing for some time before the Aurora broke loose. Another party which went to get in touch with MacIntosh's party came back without success, blizzards making all travel extremely dangerous.

Shackleton hoped after crossing the Pole to be met at Beardmore Glacier. It is very doubtful whether Captain MacIntosh, even if he has surmounted his own dangers, has been able to meet him there. At the stage when Sir Ernest and his friends might be in the utmost need of the help arranged for they may have failed to find it.

Sectarian School Issue Stoutly Resented

HAVERHILL, Mass., April 5.—A trail of broken glass was the only visible evidence remaining today of the disturbance of last night, when a mob held the city in its power for several hours and smashed windows at will.

The fury of the crowd was finally spent in the early hours of the day, and before daylight the streets were deserted. The local militia company, which had been called out to aid the police, then returned to the armory. No arrests were made. Several persons were injured by flying missiles, but no one was seriously hurt.

The cause of the riot was the objection of many residents to the granting by the city government of a permit to Thomas A. Leyden, of Somerville, said to have been formerly a Roman Catholic priest, to deliver an address in the city hall on sectarian questions, particularly regarding State appropriations for sectarian schools.

The city hall was stormed and nearly every window broken. The homes of several prominent citizens who had assisted in arranging for Leyden's address were attacked by the mob.

RAIDS THAT FAILED TO REACH ENGLAND

LONDON, April 5.—More than one recent Zeppelin attack on England has been repulsed, without the public's knowledge of the airships' approach, the Under-Secretary of State for War, Mr. Tennant, declared in the House of Commons this afternoon.

Mr. Tennant made this statement while informing the House that the new arrangements for the air defence of London had proven satisfactory. He mentioned also the bringing down of the L-15 in the Friday night raid on England.

The statement confirmed recent reports that on at least three occasions in the past month Zeppelins attempted to reach the English coast but were driven off.

AS WE GROW OLDER

our minds are quite as active as in former years but our strength does not respond when we need it most; perhaps the kidneys are weak, the liver torpid, rheumatic pains or stiffened joints beset us, and we cannot easily throw off the colds that winter brings.

What we need is the rich cod liver oil in Scott's Emulsion to renew the blood and carry strength to every organ of the body, while its glycerine soothes the respiratory tract, and its hypophosphites strenghthen the excitable nerves.

Scott's Emulsion is a scientific oil-food, of unusual benefit to those past fifty years—particularly during the colder seasons, it imparts warmth and creates strength. One bottle will prove its worth. No harmful drugs.

Army Widows For Western Farmers

Salvation Army Arranging to Aid In Their Settlement

NEW YORK, April 5.—A despatch from Pittsburg to The Tribune says: Thousands of war widows of British soldiers will be assisted in getting good husbands in the United States and Canada by the Salvation Army, in conjunction with the Canadian Government, according to announcement to day by Col. William Evans, in command of the Salvation Army here.

Because a great many of the best men of England have been slain the widows are without an adequate matrimonial field, Col. Evans declares, and many must come to American shores for re-marriage and livelihood.

The Salvation Army, he says, will assist the Canadian Government in placing the widows in an environment that will enable them to get good husbands, and in the larger cities will introduce them to desirable bachelors.

Col. Evans thinks the agricultural Provinces of Canada and the Western States will get a majority of the widows.

General Bertram To Give Evidence

But No Sign of Col. Allison Returning to Dominion

OTTAWA, April 5.—It is understood in the Capital that General Sir Alexander Bertram, chairman of the old Shell Committee, which let the fuse contracts in the United States which have resulted in the Kyte charges, has returned to Canada and is ready to appear before the Royal Commission as soon as it meets and explain his connection with the contracts.

General Bertram is at his home in Dundas.

There are no signs of Col. J. Wesley Allison returning to the Dominion.

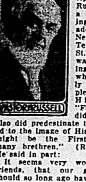
PREDESTINATION A BLESSING TO WORLD

God's Entire Plan Was Prearranged.

Church Foreknown From Before the Creation of the World — God Foreknew the End From the Beginning—Our Heavenly Lord the Second Adam—The Church to Mother the Entire Human Family —Predestination Greatly Misunderstood in the Past—Elect to Bless the Non-Elect—Character Conformation to God's Dear Son.



PASTOR RUSSELL

New York, April 2.—Pastor Russell delivered a very interesting and logical address at the New York City Temple, W. 63rd St., near Broadway, this evening, on a subject which has greatly confused people in the past. His text was, "For whom He did foreknow He also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of His Son, that He might be the First-born among many brethren." (Romans 8:29.) He said in part:

It seems very wonderful, dear friends, that our great Creator should so long ago have planned not only the blessing of the world, but also the High Calling of the Church. He foreknew us before the world was created, before we had come into existence. He knew the end from the beginning, as we on a small scale often do to-day. If a man would put up a great building, he would employ an architect to draw up plans and specifications, and in the plan everything would be arranged for beforehand. The size and the location of the various rooms, the character of the material to be used, etc., would all be foreknown and forestated, so that whoever would read the specifications, and see the architect's drawings, would know exactly what kind of building was to be erected. Just so our Creator is a great Architect and Builder; and His entire Plan for mankind was prearranged before the foundation of the world.

God has had a special purpose in everything He has made, has had a blessing in view of all His intelligent creatures. He has not been working in a haphazard manner, doubtful of the outcome of His plans and purposes, as once it seemed to us in our ignorance. It is very comforting to know that our Heavenly Father has infinite Wisdom and Power, as well as infinite Justice and Love; and that His glorious purposes cannot be thwarted or even delayed, but are grandly progressing to their completion. No opposition of man or demons can interfere with the glorious outworking of His great Plan of the Ages.—Isaiah 55:8-11; Ephesians 1:9-12.

At one time many of us thought that the Devil had come into competition with God, and so opposed the Divine plans that the Almighty did not know just how to get around the matter, but tried first one way and then another. We supposed that somehow God would finally get His few children out of Satan's clutches, but that everything and everybody else would be burned up with literal fire, the unsaintly being confined in a place which we called Hell, to be tortured eternally. Now we see that we had very crude, confused ideas, especially when we tried to connect this thought with the Scriptural declaration that God had foreknown all this from before the foundation of the world. We are very thankful that all this darkness is scattered; and that we can now see why God has permitted evil, and how He will overrule all things in the end for the good, not only of the Church, but of the world.

The Second Adam and Eve.

According to the Bible our great Creator predetermined first the creation of various ranks of angels and then the creation of man. All this was accomplished through the Logos, our Lord Jesus Christ in His prehuman state, as the Father's Agent. God knew that man would fall into sin. He knew that at the proper time He would send the Logos, His well-beloved Son, to redeem man. All this being known to God, He also foreknew that He would issue a special Call for a Church class to be associated with His Son as the Bride of Christ, for the judging, instructing, and restoring of the race which that Son died to redeem.

We perceive that our Lord Jesus, now supremely exalted because of His obedience unto death (Philippians 2:8-11), is to be the second Adam, the second Father of the human race. He is to make good where the first Adam failed, and to recover him and his posterity—as many of them as will—to all that was lost in Eden.

Thus the Bible presents before us a beautiful picture—a second Adam and a second Eve, the new Father and Mother of the race. The father is the one who generates the life; the mother nourishes the life that is generated by the father. So the work of the Church when completed and glorified with Christ will be to care for, to nourish, and to upbuild the human family, who will be recreated by Christ Jesus, their Redeemer. Step by step she will raise them up to perfection. What a marvelous Plan—a Plan by which the Heavenly Father's likeness shall be restored to the human race. Oh, how glorious it is to have a God like this; One who is working all things according to the counsel of His own will. We can rest securely by faith, assured that our God knows what He is doing; and that His plans are all good, wise, and benevolent.

At first we could take only the A, B, C lessons; but as we have grown in love and in intelligence concerning our God we know Him better, and are beginning to see lengths, breadths, heights, and depths of His Love and Wisdom which surpass all human understanding. "When He did foreknow," says the Apostle, "He also did predestinate." At one time that word "predestinate" had a terrible sound to us. We said, "Oh, yes; Calvin taught that God predestinated a few saints to be saved to Heavenly bliss, but that everybody else He predestinated to go to eternal torment."

But, dear friends, God has never predestinated anything of that kind. There is not even a hint in our text regarding a predestination of the world. Our text refers only to a predestination of the true Church, a company who after they were called would by faithfulness to the terms of their covenant make their calling and election sure. God has predestinated a certain class, to be composed of a definite number, for a special purpose. Whoever would be of this class must meet the required conditions.

The Bible Predestination.

This class is predestinated to be conformed to the image of God's dear Son. This is a grand predestination. It rests with us individually whether or not we shall thus conform ourselves. In this same Epistle the Apostle says to the Church, "Be not conformed to this world; but be ye transformed, by the renewing of your minds, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God." (Romans 12:2.) Nobody will be in that elect class who does not become conformed to the character-likeness of God's dear Son. This Church of Christ is almost completed. The predetermined number—144,000—is about filled up. Every one of them will surely be a copy of Christ in character.

Since God has foreordained that He will have such a company, it follows that all of our experiences from the time that we have come into the Church will work favorably to us if we continue loyal. But if any who have been numbered amongst this class should become tired of the narrow way and should walk out of it, their names will be dropped, and others chosen to fill their places. There is absolutely no Scriptural authority for the doctrine held by some that none of the Elect can fall; in other words, "Once in grace always in grace."

When we consecrated ourselves to the Lord through Christ Jesus, when we made our covenant with God (Psalm 50:5), we were accepted through the merit of our great Substitute. Our Lord Jesus became our High Priest. We were begotten of God's Holy Spirit, and then became New Creatures. (2 Corinthians 5:17.) To all such God guarantees that so long as they abide in Christ they shall be kept; and that all things shall work together for their good. If we remain faithful unto death, we shall have part in the First Resurrection, Christ's resurrection, as members of His glorious Body. (Revelation 20:6.) If we keep our Covenant of Sacrifice, if we keep our sacrifice upon the altar until it is fully consumed, we shall surely win the crown of life—glory, honor, and immortality. Keeping our covenant means to walk daily in the narrow way, to walk in the footsteps of Jesus.

The attainment of the character-likeness of Christ is a gradual work, an education. We cannot get it all at once. When first we are accepted into the family of God, we enter the School of Christ to receive daily lessons along this very line. By the Word of God and by the providences of life we are taught. Being imperfect, blemished by the fall, we cannot render perfect service to God, as did our Master; but we are to do our best to follow our great Pattern. Our loyalty is demonstrated in our wills, our hearts; and our wills are manifested in our works up to the point of our ability. Any shortcoming, any mistake or sin on our part could not be an act of the New Creature; for it cannot sin, being begotten from Above. The wrong-doing would be of the old nature, the fallen flesh.

Trials Essential to Development.

The new mind, working in us to will and to do of God's good pleasure, grows stronger day by day, hour by hour, and makes us more and more copies of His dear Son. But in order to have this new mind grow stronger, TRIALS are necessary. How could we know that we are developing, if we had no trials to demonstrate the matter? As we pray for patience, meekness, love, and various other fruits of the Holy Spirit, we are sure to have trials along these lines, to demonstrate our growth and to develop us further in each of these directions. Only by continued and earnest effort, only by struggling and prayer and the study of the Word of God, can we grow as New Creatures in Christ.

God answers our prayers for more of His Holy Spirit by giving us experiences whereby we may have a larger measure of the likeness of Christ. And we should rejoice in this: for by no other means can we be developed and proven. We need patience, meekness, gentleness, faith, long-suffering, brotherly kindness, love. It takes time to develop these qualities. We desire to be fitted for the Kingdom. But what kind of characters will be acceptable? The Church is to govern the affairs of the world for a thousand years; and how could anyone be qualified for such a work who had not learned the necessary lessons? Those, and those only, who have developed the necessary qualities will be fitted for so exalted a position. We must learn patience before we shall be able to teach patience to others. We must become loving, kind, and meek before we can teach these graces to the world.

Trials Summed Up Under Two Heads

We might sum up all of our trials under two general heads: faith and loyalty. Faith in our Lord Jesus is one of the great tests—not merely a belief that He was the Son of God, but a different kind of faith from that of intellectual assurance. We must develop faith in the precious promises of God and in His loving care. Our Lord Jesus assured us that if we are faithful in that which is least, we shall be faithful in much. In all our experiences with the brethren, in our business affairs, and in our dealings with the world we are to learn the required lessons.

We are ever to recognize God First, and to remember that we have given ourselves to Him. We are to recognize His hand in all the affairs of our life and to believe His promise that all things are working together for our good. Whoever has this faith will have a rest of heart and mind. When difficulties arise, his first thought will be, "What lesson has God for me in this experience?" The Lord's people are not to think, "This person has opposed my plans and has brought me this trouble;" but they should say to themselves, "My Father knows all about this difficulty, and has permitted it for my good. He will overrule it all."

If circumstances so shape themselves that we are obliged to change our residence, we are not to feel, "I do not wish to make this change. I prefer to continue just where I am." Rather we are to think, "If the Lord wishes me to make a change, it is all right; for I know that His way is best, and that this experience will work out for my good." Our Lord Jesus always recognized the Father's will and gladly bowed to it, whether He understood it or not. We are to be followers of Christ; we are to have His mind. There is no lesson that the Lord's people need more than this lesson of implicit trust in God.—2 Peter 1:12-14.

Let us never forget that nothing can come to us unless it is permitted by the Lord. Let us look beyond our environments and say, as our Master did, "The cup which My Father hath poured for me, shall I not drink it?" He did not say, "Why do the people treat Me so? Why do the rulers scheme against Me?" On the contrary, He accepted all His painful experiences in perfect faith and trust, as the cup which the Father had poured for Him to drink.

The Golden Measuring-Rod.

Now what about your loyalty? The loyalty of the New Creation is loyalty to God. This means loyalty to the principles of righteousness, for which He stands. The first of these is justice, the very foundation of His Throne. The Master gave us a beautiful picture of justice when He gave us the Golden Rule: "As ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise." (Luke 6:31.) This is indeed a Golden Rule. We could not properly represent God unless we practised the Law of our great King—the Ruler of the Universe. This is His first requirement—loyalty to the principle of justice.

In Revelation 11:1 St. John was given a reed, or rod, with which to measure the Temple of God. That Temple, which is the Church, is now being measured by the Golden Rule, here called a reed, a rod. If we are earnestly endeavoring to apply the Golden Rule in every affair of life—in the home, in the Church, in dealing with the world, then we are practising the principle of justice. Each of us is to do the measuring for himself. We are not to measure one another. Only in an extreme case is the Church to do the measuring. (Matthew 18:15-17.) We are to judge, or measure, our thoughts as well as our conduct by this rule; for "as a man thinketh in his heart, so is he."

Our battle is the good fight of faith against the weaknesses of our own flesh. We are to strive to bring ourselves into a condition where we can glorify God in every act, word, and thought. If we keep our heart and our thoughts right, we shall be able to control our words and doings to the glory of God. This is loyalty.

Special Blessings of Church To-day.

This predestinated class, the Church of God, has been in process of preparation for more than eighteen hundred years; and now we have come to the close of the Age. The Church of to-day has had wonderful favors from God. None others have been so favored. We have Bibles and Bible Helps such as were never possessed by the Church at any previous time. We have various translations of the Scriptures, good lights to read by, shorter hours of labor, so as to give us more time, etc. In this season of special blessings and advantages we have correspondingly more trials, however, as we should expect.

Moreover, we are favored with a fuller understanding of God's great Plan—with its times and seasons of fulfilment—than the Church has ever before had. This understanding is necessary for this time. We should be better able to use skilfully the Sword of the Spirit than were any of our brethren of an earlier day; and surely the Church of to-day, if ever, should have on securely "the whole armor of God." (Ephesians 6:12-18.) We need every piece, that we may be able to stand.

If you have not on that armor, put it on—the helmet of salvation, an appreciative understanding of the Divine Plan; the breastplate of righteousness, justification through faith in the precious blood of Christ. Have that confidence in God and His promises that "all things are working together for good to them that are the called according to His purpose," thus making a large shield of faith. Then take the Sword of the Spirit, the Word of God. A great fight is on now, at the end of this Age. We need Heavenly wisdom to use aright the Sword of the Spirit. There is much contention against "the faith once delivered to the saints." We must not only stand ourselves, but help others to stand also. Thus shall we be conformed to the image of God's dear Son, and fitted to bless the whole groaning creation.

THE MARKETS

CHICAGO, April 3.—Wheat ran up 5c a bushel in value today, chiefly because of predictions that the domestic winter crop this season would be 165,000,000 bushels less than the yield in 1915. The market closed strong, 4⅛c to 4⅞c net higher, with May at $1.20⅛ and July $1.19¾. Corn gained ⅝c to 1c and oats ½c to 1⅛c. In provisions the outcome varied from the same as Saturday's finish to 10c higher.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

WINNIPEG, April 3.—Wheat closed up 1¼c for May and July and 2⅛c up for October on the local grain exchange today. Oats were ⅝c higher for both months. Barley was up 1½c and flax 1c better for May and ¼c better for July.

There was very little fluctuation in the prices, the rise being fairly steady all day. In the local market there was a considerable amount of the wheat sold credited to the farmers and the sudden rise owed quite a lot to the renewal of outside speculative interest.

MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, April 3.—Cables on Manitoba spring wheat were strong at an advance of 1s per quarter, but owing to the rise in prices here no business resulted. The local market for oats was stronger and prices ruled ½c to 1c per bushel higher. Flour was stronger. Millfeed was active and firm.

CATTLE MARKETS

UNION STOCK YARDS.

TORONTO, April 3.—Receipts of live stock at the Union Yards were 2,251 cattle, 468 hogs, 13 sheep, and 94 calves.

THE SPIRIT OF LIBERTY

"Next to God a man should love his country."—Old English Proverb.

I.

Where is the English honor, and the vaunted English pride
For which our British forbears have fought, and bled, and died?
Where the far famed "sense of duty," and the "Britons never slaves,"
That your ancestors bequeathed you: have you laid them in their graves?
Would ye rob yourselves of freedom, cause your liberty to fall,
And be driven in like cattle to obey your country's call?
Britain's name has stood for freedom for centuries—ah, then,
If ye adopt 'conscription' can ye still be—British men?
Is the spirit of old England lost, or drunken, dead, asleep,
That conscription should be needed, with compulsion in its sweep?
The spirits of your fathers cry: "Keep ye what we have won!"
And the men of future ages, shall they not say: "It was done"?

II.

Wake, wake, oh, mighty lion, ere the foe invades your lair!
And show your strength and manhood, every Englishman his share.
To arms! ye men of England, save your liberty of choice,
Volunteer as free-born Britons, let it be the nation's voice.
Show the whole world British freemen will choose death before disgrace!
And unsullied keep the honor and traditions of your race.
Better far extermination—memory alone recall
The existence of your nation—ere your principles should fall!
Free men were made for heroes. Awake, preserve your fame,
And sweep away 'conscription' that will blast the English name!
This the spirit of sure victory, this be your battle cry—
We will fight and win as free men, or as as free men we will die!

Socialists Rebel at Emma Goldman

Overthrow Anarchist Chairman When She Tries to Stop "Free Speech"—Police Clear Hall

NEW YORK, April 5.—The anarchistic ideal that there should be no Government and that every man should do as he pleases was realized yesterday at a protest meeting of 2,500 members of eighty organizations, socialists, anarchists and other "ists" in the Star Casino, at Lexington Avenue and 107th Street when a shrieking section of socialists rose in revolt against the sway of power of Miss Goldman, the chairman, caused her to flee from the platform and instituted a noisy state of anarchy all their own.

When Emma Goldman called the meeting to order she rejoiced that eighty organizations, representing every radical party, had thrown aside their individual opinions and had united to protest against the action of the Los Angeles court in sentencing Matthew A. Schmidt of a life term in San Quentin Prison on the charge that he had been in the conspiracy to blow up The Los Angeles Times Building, and to encourage David Chaplan on the eve of his trial on the same charge.

After the crowd had been harangued for two hours in five different languages, protest after protest was passed with unanimity and applause. Then the outskirts of the gathering began to grow restless as Bernard Senekens, Secretary of the Chaplan-Schmidt Defense Conference, talked in Yiddish about the war and preparedness. After the courts and capitalism had been protested enough, Miss Goldman invited everybody to come to her trial in the Court of Special Sessions on Wednesday, when she is to answer the charge of violating Section 1142 of the Penal Code by talking on medical questions.

Some one suggested in English that a protest be sent to District Attorney Swann, and even before the motion could be translated into another language roars of approval swept over the crowd. Some one shouted that the arrest of Bouck White ought to be protested, and before the motion could be translated into a second language another roar came.

But the overthrow of the anarchist Chairman and the setting up of a reign of anarchy came swiftly despite the effort of the chair to put down the insurrection with a "steam roller." After all the protests had been approved and more than $100 had been collected to send to Chaplan, Miss Goldman announced that the striking newsboys of the Jewish Daily Forward had a protest to make to the meeting.

Brotherly love vanished instantly. The radicals, who had been basking in one another's friendship the minute before and calling one another "comrade," sprang to their feet and began to bark recrimination in the faces of belligerent neighbors. A socialist shouted that he "thought this was a protest meeting and was not intended to attack any organization or party." With that the fight was on. The space before the platform was jammed with a struggling mass of "protesters" and "antiprotesters" whose many arguments in many tongues would have made the Tower of Babel as quiet as the tabernacle when the tourists are waiting for the man near the pipe organ to drop the pin to demonstrate the acoustic properties.

Miss Goldman waved her arms frantically in the effort to get order, while the committee of newsboys decided not to press their cause before any such audience, and ran away. The Chairman flung a parting word at the throng climbing over the edge of the platform, pulled her lavender of the newsboys and their abandoned cause.

Then some one turned the lights out and gave visitors an opportunity to extricate themselves. When one or two were snapped back on those who wanted to hear the newsboys had silenced those who did not and had dragged the frightened boys back to the platform. From their perches on the table the boys looked over the crowd with distrust, but encouraged to speak out by men holding their hands and feet, the lads began their "protest" in tremulous tones.

The tumult from the floor broke out anew; the voices and ideas of the boys, together with their enthusiasm for their cause, fled when a husky voice demanded that the "heads of the brats be bumped together." Finally the crowd broke into contentious groups and was run out of the hall by special police. They continued their arguments on street corners, and every corner within five squares was a noisy forum. Then police ran them off.

Socialists said they did not want the boys to talk because it would demoralize them and bring them up to be rowdies and strikers. Anarchists said they believed that even boys ought to have the right of free speech, and that Socialists wanted to suppress them because they favored the newspaper.

Looks Like a Prolonged Fight

OTTAWA, April 5.—The Order-in-Council appointing Sir William Meredith and Mr. Justice L. D. Duff, as a Royal Commission to investigate the charges of Mr. George W. Kyte has been passed at the cabinet meeting. Counsel will not likely be appointed for a couple of days. It is not clear yet that Sir Wilfrid Laurier will appoint counsel. It is said he may wait until his own motion for a Parliamentary committee is disposed of.

The debate on this will continue on Tuesday. There is talk of the Liberals making a prolonged fight. They have already suggested that it be not closed until General Sir Sam Hughes returns. General Hughes will likely have to make his defence before the Royal Commission, not before Parliament.

A cable has been received from Sir George Perley that he has laid before the Colonial Secretary the suggestion that a Royal Commission was to be appointed. Apparently the Colonial Secretary has no objection.

Kaiser Blamed By the Huns

For Involving Country in War—A Badly Wounded Young Lieutenant Calls Him a Pig

PARIS, April 5.—A vivid impression of the state of mind now prevailing among German troops is given by a conversation with an aviation captain recently returned from Verdun.

"Many German prisoners," he said, "blame the Kaiser personally for the war. A most striking instance is that of a young lieutenant captured at Avocourt. His knee was smashed by a bullet and his men killed. He kept repeating in broken French, 'Kaiser Cochon' (Pig of a Kaiser'). While the officers generally are extremely loyal, other Germans are pronounced in denunciation of the Emperor. Men captured are now as bitter as deserters. We never credit the statements of deserters, for such men disgrace themselves and their country, but the sentiments by men taken in battle furnish a good indication of the spirit of revolt growing in Germany."

TOWNS WITH SILLY NAMES

Some Blackfeet Indians, with a taste and a respect for Nature that shames the paleface, have protested to the barbarous custom of tacking silly, meaningless vulgar names to noble natural objects which the Indians long ago had named with appropriateness (says the Saturday Evening Post.) A melodious word, with poetic significance and very likely commemorating some charming native legend, is calmly ignored in favor of Jones's Gulch, or Smith's Falls, or Dolly Lake.

It is even worse in the matter of towns. Nearly all the good names in North America are those bestowed by the Indians of the early French and Spanish explorers. After them came the Anglo-Saxon, spattering the landscape with his own patronymics and other tasteless and meaningless proper nouns.

We can understand why a person with the imagination of hitching post might prefer for a beautiful natural object his own name or that of a female relative, or some foolish Grand Falls, High Peak, Swift Rapids, Broad Canon; but we cannot understand why authority should permit him to vandalize that way. Unless there is some excellent reason to the contrary, authority ought to insist always upon the Indian names.

A RAEMAEKERS POSTER

Famous Dutch Artist's Remorseless Exposure of German Inhumanity in Belgium

Louis Raemaekers, the famous Dutch Cartoonist, has generously drawn for the National Committee for Relief in Belgium, one of the most remarkable and certainly the most heartrending of the "War Posters."

The misery of the millions now in Belgium whom the Germans refuse to feed, has inspired this notable artist to his finest effort. A Belgian woman, with a ragged red cloak over her shoulders, is holding tightly to her breast an infant in a shawl. Around the child is clasped the mother's hand—a hand which spells starvation. In the woman's face there is the infinite sorrow of motherhood, driven to despair by German inhumanity, and the pitiful, helpless yearning to relieve the child's sufferings.

But it is in the face of the child that Raemaekers has told the full horror of the tragedy of Belgium. The staring terror in the eyes that look up at the mother makes one shudder and turn away to think what might have been in England. With remorseless realism Raemaekers, in this infant of pain, has visualised to the world the infamy of Germany.

The poster, which is artistically reproduced, has this laconic heading: "In Belgium." Underneath, appears the one word "Help." Any reader of this newspaper can secure a copy of the poster free of cost by sending a postcard to the Hon. Secretary, National Committee for Relief in Belgium, Trafalgar Buildings, Trafalgar Square, London.

When she sits for an hour and does not say a word and you ask her what is the matter and she says, "Oh nothing at all," you can bet you've done something that is going to take all day to explain.

SYNOPSIS OF COAL MINING REGULATIONS.

Coal mining rights of the Dominion, in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Yukon Territories, the North-West Territories and in a portion of the Province of British Columbia, may be leased for a term of twenty-one years at an annual rental of $1 an acre. Not more than 2,560 acres will be leased to one applicant.

Applications for a lease must be made by the applicant in person to the Agent or Sub-Agent of the district in which the rights applied for are situated.

In surveyed territory the land must be described by sections or legal sub-divisions of sections and in unsurveyed territory the tract applied for shall be staked by the applicant himself.

Each application must be accompanied by a fee of $5 which will be refunded if the rights applied for are not available, but not otherwise. A royalty shall be paid on the merchantable output of the mine at the rate of five cents per ton.

The person operating the mine shall furnish the Agent with sworn returns accounting for the full quantity of merchantable coal mined and pay the royalty thereon. If the coal mining rights are not being operated, such returns should be furnished at least once a year.

The lease will include the coal mining rights only, but the lessee may be permitted to purchase whatever available surface rights may be considered necessary for the working of the mine at the rate of $10.00 an acre.

For full information application should be made to the Secretary of the Department of the Interior, Ottawa, or to any Agent or Sub-Agent of Dominion Lands.

SYNOPSIS OF CANADIAN NORTH-WEST LAND REGULATIONS.

The sole head of a family, or any male over 18 years old, may homestead a quarter section of available Dominion land in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta. Applicant must appear in person at the Dominion Lands Agency or Sub-Agency for the District. Entry by proxy may be made at any Dominion Lands Agency (but not Sub-Agency) on certain conditions.

Duties—Six months residence upon and cultivation of the land in each of three years. A homesteader may live within nine miles of his homestead on a farm of at least 80 acres, on certain conditions. A habitable house is required except where residence is performed in the vicinity.

In certain districts a homesteader in good standing may pre-empt a quarter-section alongside his homestead. Price, $3.00 per acre.

Duties—Six months residence in each of three years after earning homestead patent; also 50 acres extra cultivation. Preemption patent may be obtained as soon as homestead patent, on certain conditions.

A settler who has exhausted his homestead right may take a purchased homestead in certain districts. Price $3.00 per acre. Duties—Must reside six months in each of three years, cultivate 50 acres and erect a house worth $300.

The area of cultivation is subject to reduction in case of rough, scrubby or stony land. Live stock may be substituted for cultivation under certain conditions.

LETTERS FROM OVERSEAS

FROM GERALD SPAFFORD

Belgium, March 13, 1916.

Dear Mr. Bowell,—

Owing to moving out, a month's training and rest, and then moving back and resuming our former position, I have little or no time for writing; but nevertheless I have been on the alert for little items of interest for you and your readers.

We have been about thirty miles back of the firing line—that is, this portion of it. The green carpeted fields and meadows, hitherto unmolested by troops, were quite a refreshing sight, after viewing for months the fields contiguous to our lines—which are nothing less than lakes of slimy greasy, clinging mud. We were billeted in a quaint old French village, and we all feel much refreshed and benefitted by the change of scene, and the activity of practice revived our latent energies.

I was billeted with a family, the father of which is a sergeant in the French artillery, and like other men of the village, he has been at the front since the commencement of the war. I was informed that most all of these were at Verdun during the big battle there, and I will try to describe the scenes which I witnessed in the little village while the terrific struggle was in progress, the touching incidents on the street and in the homes of these kind people, who are bearing with Christian spirit the sacrifices and anxieties of these long, weary days of war.

The village is a typical one—for they are all similar to the one I describe: the cobble stone road which invariably leads you through the centre of the village, the church—a very substantial and imposing structure in the central square and market square of the village, the low, red-tiled roofs, the brick and white plaster buildings built in irregular rows on either side of the road.

On the right hand side of the square facing the church, the post and telegraph offices of the village are located. Here during the great battle at Verdun I witnessed the following touching scene, which I herewith attempt to describe: Each day a bulletin was posted, and the crowd of villagers gathered to road, and if possible, glean news of their loved ones who were participating in one of the greatest struggles in the present war. It was interesting to study the crowd which was gathered there—the church and a huge crucifix with its base composed of rough stones, on either side the kneeling figures of the Virgin Mary and some of the disciples formed a striking background to the scene.

Aged men and women were there, their wrinkled visages upturned to the bulletin, anxiety written in every expressive line; mothers, with their babes wrapped in large shawls, held them in their arms; dark-eyed and robust peasant girls were there, with their heads covered with shawls of various hues, which covered their shoulders and served as a muff for their hands, their feet shod with wooden clogs, awaiting tidings of brothers and sweethearts. Sweet, bright-eyed girls and boys of all ages and circumstances were there—some bare-headed little tots, scantily clad, reminding one of the little waifs seen in our larger cities, wearing cast-off soldiers' clothing, remodelled by some mother to fit her boy, (some not at all). No one realizes the suffering and sacrifices the peasants of France and Belgium are making to win this war. If you could witness as I this group, speaking in hushed voices and silently brushing away the tears they so bravely struggled to restrain; for days this scene was being enacted. With mingled hope and anxiety these simple folk were there, standing with Indian-like stoicism, regardless of weather or biting wintry winds.

While I watch this scene the chimes in the church ring out the Angelus. Instantly the scene is changed. Each one turns toward the crucifix, making the sign of the cross, their lips moving in silent prayer; the men uncover and bow their heads; the figure of Christ with arms outstretched seems to pronounce a benediction upon His people.

The scene on the street I have described, giving my own impressions. Let us enter one of the humble dwellings a little farther up the street. We can procure a cup of excellent coffee there. As we enter we are greeted by a very pleasant and good-looking young woman. As we make our way across the neat tiled floor, which is spotlessly clean, toward the brightly polished stove which stands in the fireplace, where Madame has placed two chairs, and put the ever-ready coffee pot on the front of the stove to warm, a blue-eyed boy of eighteen months toddles over to examine his khaki-clad visitors.

We are in the home of a prisoner of war. After passing the time of day, and sipping the delicious coffee which has been served, Madame resumes packing a parcel with which she had been occupied when we entered. Noticing our interest she tells us "it is for Monsieur." "I received a letter today," she said. "He has been a prisoner for sixteen months, and I am obliged to send him bread and things to eat. Ah, Monsieur! it is sad"—pausing to gather up her apron and wipe the tears from her eyes. "Mon Dieu! When will it finish? The beasts of Germans even cut part of his requests out"—producing the letter and showing us the work of the German censor. She tells us (like many others have told us) her sad story. We leave impressed with the fact that those who live far from the scene of war are fortunate indeed. We have the consolation of knowing that our loved ones are secure and cared for in a land far more capable and richer than this stricken country.

I conclude with the words: Fellow citizens of Canada, be charitable to these people, and so show your appreciation of the privileges of citizenship you enjoy beneath the protecting folds of the Union Jack, and thank God that Britain rules the waves, and your homes are secure from the invasion of a foreign foe.

SPAFFORD.

N.B.—I sent by post a colored print of Ypres. Sincerely trust that you received it O.K.

While passing through a town here I had the pleasure of meeting two old Belleville boys, namely, Herb. Weller and Arthur Johnson. Both were hale and hearty.

All the boys are well, and we are not downhearted, either.

Alkali in Soap Bad For the Hair

Soap should be used very carefully if you want to keep your hair looking its best. Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali. This dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle, and ruins it.

The best thing for steady use is just ordinary mulsified cocoanut oil (which is pure and greaseless), and is better than the most expensive soap or anything else you can use.

One or two teaspoonfuls will cleanse the hair and scalp thoroughly Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in. It makes an abundance of rich creamy lather, which rinses out easily removing every particle of dust, dirt, dandruff and excessive oil. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and it leaves the scalp soft, and the hair fine and silky, bright, lustrous, fluffy and easy to manage.

You can get mulsified cocoanut oil at any pharmacy, it's very cheap and a few ounces will supply every member of the family for months.

Major Templeton Wounded in Action

Is a Son of Mr. Robert Templeton Of Belleville—Injury Not Considered Serious

Word has been received of the wounding at the battlefront in France of Major J. F. Templeton, of Victoria, B.C. It is fortunate that he was not wounded seriously. Major Templeton is a son of Mr. Robert Templeton, of Belleville, and a nephew of Mrs. John MacLaren, of Brockville. He is a graduate of the Royal Military College, Kingston. He enlisted with the 18th Highlanders in British Columbia. Major Templeton is well known in Brockville as he frequently spent a good deal of time here when attending the R.M.C. One of his partners in Victoria, B.C., Major McGregor, was killed at Ypres last April, and the other partner, Captain Landry, is fighting in Flanders. He was known here as "Jack" Templeton and was very popular.—Brockville Recorder.

Money is Balm To Broken Heart

Woman of Sixty-One Gets $500—Damages For Breach of Promise

The sum of $500 is the balm that Justice Mercier awarded Mrs. L. Pitre for blighted affections and a broken heart that could not be healed through it is alleged, the non-fulfilment of the promise of Mr. Louis Trudeau to marry her.

The plaintiff, who confesses to the age of sixty-one, sued Mr. Trudeau for $5,000 for breach of promise of marriage.

The plaintiff in her damages asked for recompense for money she had expended on her trousseau, and for loss she had sustained through giving up her position as an agent of the California Perfume Company, as well as for her blighted affections.

The defendant, who is 68, it was alleged that even if there was a promise of marriage it was only conditional to the approval of defendant's grown-up children, and this he explained to Mrs. Pitre. As his children did not approve there could not be any marriage.

WHOLE FAMILY ENLISTS

If every family in Belleville was to contribute as many men to the Empire as the Yateman family of Mill St. has done, we would be able to raise a purely Belleville Battalion. Walter Yateman and his three sons are serving the colors; two have already received wounds on the field of battle. On Tuesday, Richard Yateman, the only remaining son home, went to the 155th recruiting office, passed the doctor and enlisted, so as to be able to avenge his brothers.

80th Band Concert To-Morrow Night

Everything points to the Farewell Concert of the 80th Overseas Band being a most memorable event, and citizens who have not yet secured seats should do so at once as the sale is very steady. A splendid program of surpassing interest has been arranged and it is safe to predict that the band will make every effort to excell any previous performance. The promise of a musical treat is greatly enhanced by the announcement that the band will have the able assistance of Miss Gertrude and Miss Victoria Stares. The latter captivated the Belleville public at the last band concert and needs no further introduction. This will be Miss Gertrude's first appearance before a Belleville audience, but from the reception she received at a recent concert in Ottawa it may be safely anticipated that the vocal part of the program will be easily up to the standard set by the 80th Band.

RITCHIE'S

EASTER MILLINERY

Featuring New York Models Exclusively. Some In The Extreme Of Style, Others Modified To Suit The More Conservative Taste, But All Expressing Some New Spring Idea

With Easter, the coming-out day of Spring's New Fashions, only 17 days away, it means that just now Hats are the first concern from the feminine point of view. Every woman who desires to be stylishly dressed on Easter Morn wants a hat that will exactly become her, and at the same time one that reflects the latest style tendencies. Ours is truly a New York showing, embracing as it does many pattern models direct from "Gotham," as well as the untrimmed shapes, of which there are scores, and the new trimmings are also from that fashion centre. Thus every hat selected in Ritchie's Millinery Parlors, be it one of the ready trimmed models or one trimmed in our own workrooms, will emphasize one or more exclusive New York ideas. As for the prices—we know there are many pleasant surprises awaiting you in our Millinery Department.

BELLEVILLE

Col. Adams, Major Wallbridge and Capt. Gilmore of the 155th Battalion, were in Stirling Village yesterday afternoon on business connected with the Battalion.

Col. Adams and Sergt.-Major Cooper of the 155th Battalion, motored to Picton to-day.

Fifteen recruits of the 155th Battalion were attested and passed yesterday by Dr. Harper, M.O. of the 155th, at the Bridge Street recruiting office.

Lieut. W. P. Allen and Lieut. E. S. Webb, of the 155th Battalion, leave on Saturday for Montreal, where they will take a course in bayonet fighting.

Within the last few days several bushmen have applied for enlistment with the 224th Forestry Battalion at the local recruiting office on Bridge street. The battalion is rapidly filling up and will soon be up to full strength.

The 155th Band has secured five additional bandsmen, in the persons of Messrs. Gunn, Dobney, Weaver, Osler and Patton.

No one has more friends round the barracks than "Paddy" the 80th Battalion dog. He is devoted to anyone in khaki and knows the calls just as well as the men do. He attends all parades, mounts guard, and is always on hand when first post sounds at night, taking his place in the most comfortable corner of the guard room or the orderly room. A week ago a large lump developed on his neck. While it did not seem serious Paddy was not as lively as usual. Everyone noticed it and it was decided that Paddy should see a doctor. Accordingly he was taken to Dr. Ackrill the veterinary by the Y.M.C.A. man. He decided in a jiffy just what was to be done and did it and Paddy chased away evidently much relieved and showing his appreciation in the best way he could. The men wish to acknowledge Dr. Ackrill's kindness. What he did seemed simple enough but without it we might have had no more Paddy. Dr. Ackrill said that as Paddy had "enlisted" there would be no charge.

Uniform of Discharged Troops.

It is published for the information of all concerned, that all soldiers of the Canadian Expeditionary Force who have returned from overseas, and who have received an honourable discharge ,on their return are to be permitted to retain their uniforms. In the case, however, of any soldier who has been discharged for misconduct, steps are to at once be taken to deprive him of his uniform; steps should, if necessary, be taken under the provisions of Section 124 of the Militia Act.

The course of signalling has been extended two weeks, which makes the course one or two months, and not six weeks as originally intended. This has been done so as to give the school an opportunity to give the necessary advanced instruction in the use of the buzzer and field telephone.

The horses of the 53rd battery have been transferred to tents which have been placed on city property below Rideau barracks, along the water front This makes the stables much more convenient for the men of the battery. The 53rd battery has been the first to place part of itself under canvas. The several tents erected reminds one of the near approach of summer and the summer camp.

The advance copy of the official gazette, contains the following:

Honorary Lieutenant-Colonel E. Carnegie, C.M., is granted the honorary rank of Colonel in the Canadian Militia. 21st February, 1916.

Honorary Major C. M. Wallbridge, C.M., is retired, 29th February, 1916.

Lieut.-Col. Brown, G.S.O., is in Ottawa, and will return to-morrow.

Lieut. S. A. Flavelle of the 21 Batt. has been gazetted aide-de-camp on the staff of the personal staff at the front.

You would adorn the King's uniform. It's a fine profession is the army, and promotion for all who ask for it. Look at the number of lieutenants. And there's Lord Kitchener, a Field-Marshal, and at head of the War Office. Why, Lord Kitchener was only your age once, and see what he is now!"

51 Days on a 21-Day Trip

Crew of the Battered Carly Had Eventful Voyage

HALIFAX, N.S., April 5.—Battered and storm-tossed for nearly three weeks, without fuel, drinking water or food, for several days, and drifting helplessly due to the machinery breaking down, the British steamer Carly, bound from Genoa to Delaware Breakwater, in ballast for orders, was towed into Halifax to-day by the Newfoundland steamer Fogota. The crew relate a hard-luck story. The ship sailed from Genoa on February 12, passing Gibraltar on the 16th. The passage was without incident for twenty-one days, but the voyage lasted fifty, and there was plenty of trouble. Repairs to the machinery took so long that the coal supply gave out and every scrap of wood aboard, even the planks in the hold used for side supports for grain and lumber, were used to supply the furnace. The main steampipe burst, putting one boiler out of commission. The crew believe that timely discovery of the defective steam pipe saved loss of life. The machinery of the Carly is in bad shape, the bed having loosened. The Carly was formerly the Florence.

CHEQUE IS DRAWN FOR SEVENTY-FIVE MILLIONS

SIGNS OF GERMAN WEAKENING CONSTANTLY INCREASING

ALLIED TRANSPORT IS SUNK OFF THE COAST OF GREECE

GERMANS REPULSED BY FRENCH

Enemy's Occupation of Advance Trenches Was But Brief

Canadian Press Special

PARIS, April 7.—Afternoon statement: To west of the River Meuse, in the course of the night an attack was delivered after a violent preparatory bombardment against our positions between Bethincourt and Hill No. 265. The German forces made their way into French trenches of the first line on the highway between the Bethincour and Chattancourt.

We at once made a counter attack which drove the Germans back from the greater part of the positions they had been able to seize. At the present time the enemy holds only certain advanced sections along the front of about three hundred yards.

East of the Meuse there has been intermittent bombardment, and we have continued to make progress in communicating trenches of the enemy located southwest of the fort of Douaumount.

There have been some artillery exchanges in Woevre district, but the night along the remainder of the front passed quietly.

Turned on Gas To End Life

Man Recently Discharged From Canadian Army Found Unconscious

TORONTO, April 7.—Wolf Mabrifsky, 35 years old, 92 Elm street, was found unconscious in a room at the Power House, 421 King street west, early to-day, as a result of having inhaled illuminating gas. He registered last night at the hotel and from discharge papers from the 105th Battalion of Hamilton found in his pocket his identity was established. The smell of gas attracted inmates of the hotel to the man's room, entrance to which, however, was barred by a bed placed against the door. On forcing the barricade, the man was found unconscious while the room was filled with gas which was escaping from an open jet.

The police ambulance removed the man to the General Hospital where it was stated that although he was expected to recover from the effects of the gas, he appeared to be deranged.

MARCONI'S NEW INVENTION

Sensational Change in Operation of Aircraft Forecasted

PARIS, April 6.—Guglielmo Marconi has invented a special apparatus based on a new principle, which is destined to make a sensational change in the operation of aeroplanes and dirigibles. This announcement has just been made according to a Rome despatch to the Journal des Debats.

Marconi has at the same time carried on important wireless telegraphy researches with great success. His inventions will be immediately employed by the Italian army, after which they will be placed at the disposition of Italy's allies.

SENATE PASSES TARIFF BILL

OTTAWA, April 7.—(Special.)—The tariff bill was reported from committee in the Senate, to-day without amendment. Although Senator Cloran said that the tax on fruit was a crime, he did not offer an amendment.

ANOTHER VICTORY IN THE TIGRIS CAMPAIGN

One Division Operates on Each Bank of River, and During Day Five Lines of Trenches are Taken—General Gorringe, Learning That Foe is Strongly Entrenching

LONDON, April 7.—Special—The following official statement was issued to-day:—

"General Lake reports that the Tigris corps under the command of Lieut.-General Sir George F. Corringe, who succeeded General Aylmer, attacked the enemy's entrenched position at Umm-el-Henna on April 5. Our trenches had been pushed forward by means of saps to within 100 yards of the enemy's position, and the leading battalions of the 13th Division then rushed the enemy's first and second lines in quick succession.

"The third line was captured by 6 o'clock in the morning under the support of artillery and machine gun fire. The 13th Division continued their victorious advance, and by 7 a. m. had driven the enemy out of his fourth and fifth lines.

Foe Strongly Reinforces

Aeroplane reconnaissances then reported that the enemy was strongly reinforcing his entrenchments at Felahie and Sannayyat, positions 6,000 and 12,000 yards, respectively, from the front trenches at Umm-el-Henna. As those positions could only be approached over very open ground, General Gorringe ordered a further attack deferred until evening.

"In the meantime, on the right bank, the 3rd Division, under General Keary, captured the enemy's trenches opposite the Felahie position. During the afternoon the enemy on this bank made a strong counter-attack with infantry and cavalry, supported by guns. This counter-attack was successfully repulsed, and the position won was consolidated.

SIGNS OF WEAKENING ON PART OF GERMANY

Canadian Press Special.

LONDON, April 7.—Von Bethmann Hollweg's speech in the Richstag, Wednesday, is considered good evidence that Germany is anxious for early peace.

The statement that the Allies will be to blame if the massacre goes on, is interpreted here as a very strong sign that the German Government is weakening and fears to face the people. With the big Allied offensive near at hand the chancellor is evidently preparing the people for a big loss which his country is finding it harder and harder to bear.

His reference to the blockade as "inhuman warfare aiming at reducing us by hunger" is satisfactory to those who wish to stop imports into Germany. Instead of lessening this pressure every effort is being made to tighten it, and in this connection Britain is perfectly satisfied to have her record compared with Germany's.

Finds Skeleton of Small Child

Owen Sound Makes Horrifying Discovery in Unused Portion of Dwelling

OWEN SOUND, Ont., April 6.—While investigating the upper storey of his house yesterday afternoon Mr. J. Sloans, 1064 Third avenue east, was horrified to find the skeleton of a two-year-old child.

It was quite an accident that Mr. Sloane was in this part of his home in which he has resided for the past year, as he had never had occasion to go up there before.

Prior to Mr. Sloane's occupation of the house it had been unoccupied for about a year..

The gruesome discovery was immediately reported to the police department who have taken the matter up and will make a thorough investigation.

An inquest will be held when Coroner Dr. Down, who is at present out of town, returns.

The case may develop to some sensational features.

CAPTAIN OF THE C.P.R. LINER ENDS HIS OWN LIFE

LONDON, April 7.—(Special.)—Captain McDill of the Canadian Pacific liner Lake Manitoba shot himself at Plymouth to-day.

Family Away Home is Burned

Two Adjoining Houses on Bee St. Were in Grave Danger

TORONTO, April 6.—The home of Mr. Percy Reeves, 3 Bee street, Todmorden, was totally destroyed by fire, with its contents at 10 o'clock this morning. The house caught fire, when no one was in. Mrs. Reeves having been called away, having just received news of the death of her father. The frame structure burned rapidly, and nothing could be saved by neighbors.

The adjoining houses of Dr. Fleming, No. 5, and Mr. Jenkins, No. 7, were in grave danger, and the furniture was removed.

Mr. Reeves stated to The Daily News that he had built his home, which was destroyed, and fortunately the loss on it and the contents was mostly covered by insurance.

Youth Killed Blasting Ice

Cake Fell on Box of Caps, Detonation Setting off Sticks He Held

CORNWALL, April 7.—Special—Ernest Boak, aged nineteen years, son of William Boak of Massena, formerly of Osnabruck, Ont., was instantly killed to-day by an explosion of dynamite, and his body was hurled into the power canal, where it was found an hour after the accident. William Dimmick and two foreigners, who with Boak were engaged in blasting ice in the bay below the railway bridge, were slightly injured.

The fatality was caused by a huge cake of ice alighting on a box of dynamite caps on a scow, exploding the caps, the detonation therefrom setting off two sticks of dynamite which Boak was holding in his hand.

LARGE ALLIED TRANSPORT SUNK OFF WEST COAST OF GREECE

LONDON, April 7.—Special—An Athens despatch to The Daily Mail says that a telegram has been received from Preveza to the effect that a large transport belonging to the Entente Allies has been sunk off the west coast of Greece. The telegram added that it was believed that many were lost.

ONTARIO DRY UNTIL JUNE. 1919

Prohibition to be Effective September 16, 1916

TORONTO, April 7.—(Special.)—Prohibition in Ontario on September 16 next.

The referendum on prohibition will be taken on the first Monday in June 1919. This means the Province will be "dry" until that date.

The liquor license act now in force in the Province will be repealed when the Ontario temperance act (prohibition) goes into effect.

If when the referendum is taken the people vote against prohibition, present licenseholders will probably get their licenses back, but districts where local option is now in force will remain "dry." In other words, the situation will be just as it is at present.

The Government is considering the case of licenseholders who have long leases on their hands.

NEW GAME REGULATIONS

Provisions Made For The Protection of Black and Grey Squirrels

TORONTO, April 6.—The Fish and Game Committee of the Ontario Legislature organized for business yesterday morning with the Hon. Finlay G. Macdiarmid, Minister of Public Works, in the chair. It was decided to allow the present rule of a bag of wild ducks of 200 to stand. The committee declined to make a day bag limit of 15 ducks. Another suggestion thrown out was that each shooter in a duck-boat be limited to one gun.

It was decided to change the season of the shooting of wild ducks from September 1 to December 15 in the northern district, and from September 15 to December 15 in the southern district, to a general season commencing September 1 to December 31.

In future duck hunters may only set out one flock of decoys of 35 ducks. No two hunters may set decoys nearer than 150 yards apart. The committee also passed a law that prohibits the chasing or putting to flight of wild fowl so that they would fly within the range of the hunter's gun. Wild geese and swan may be shot from September 15 to April 30, instead of from September 15 to April 15.

A close season of three years was put on quail and Hungarian partridge and a close season for two years was put on partridge, excepting in counties provided for by order-in-council. Hares may not be shot excepting between October 15 and November 15, and from December 24 to January 2.

Closed season of three years for black and grey squirrels may be provided by order-in-council.

Looks Like a German Intrigue

Returned American Soldiers Are Approached by German Agents

LONDON, Ont., April 6—Back from New York City, Dr. Y. J. Stevenson says that German agents are employing returned American soldiers who fought with the Canadians to denounce the British generally at meetings in the American metropolis.

Dr. Stevenson declared that it is an everyday occurrence to hear returned American soldiers, in the pay of German agents, charging ill-treatment at the hands of English and Canadian officers at open-air meetings in New York.

One man with a face wound declared that he had been struck by a British officer's sword.

FOE ATTACKS BRITISH POSITION AT ST. ELOI

Big Battle Rages for Possession of Ground Recently Captured From Germans—Hostile Raiding Party Summarily Ejected From Lines Near Hooge

LONDON, April 7—Special—Bringing up reinforcements after a long delay, the Germans attacked the new trenches which the British had established in the craters and ruins of the salient which they captured at St. Eloi on Monday, March 27, and the struggle lasted all day and was not finished when Sir Douglas Haig sent in his report tonight. The Germans prepared for their assaults by opening a heavy bombardment of the opposing position, but they found the British troops waiting for them when they got through with the gun-firing. It is believed that this battle may develop into a general engagement.

As the Canadians hold trenches adjacent to the British, it is presumed that their artillery will contribute materially to the defence.

The only other item of importance in the shape of action was the driving out of a German raiding party from trenches which it had penetrated at Hooge. The Germans paid heavily in casualties for their temerity.

The artillery on both sides was most active today about Lievin, Lena and Boesinghe.

TO FORCE ISSUE WITH CARRANZA

Denial of Withdrawal of Troops From Mexico So Interpreted

EL PASO, Tex., April 7.—Special—Secretary Lansing's denial that the government was considering the withdrawal of the troops from Mexico was received here with a feeling of relief. Two classes, especially army officers and American refugees, were emphatic in their pleasure over the official quietus which has been put on the persistent reports that the Pershing expedition was to be abandoned.

There is only one interpretation put on Secretary Lansing's announcement here, that it means a prompt forcing to an issue with General Carranza of the railroad problem.

As far as can be gleaned from the meagre despatches from the front and from unofficial Mexican sources, the pursuit of Villa, as far as the Americans are concerned, has reached a stage of marking time until the question of supplies' transportation is solved.

Washington and not Guerrero is the focus for all eyes on the border at present. The belief is general that everything now depends on the outcome of the negotiations between Secretary Lansing and General Carranza, and that it is imperative that they be brought to a conclusion in the near future.

12 BLIND PIG KEEPERS ARE FINED

Wife of One Accused Slaps Informer Soundly Outside Court

WELLAND, April 7.—Special—Up to to-night thirteen of the twenty-three blind pig cases have been disposed of, and in all but one conviction was registered against the accused. In each conviction a fine of $300 was imposed, with costs, or three months in jail. The other ten cases are to be heard to-morrow. The accused are Austrians, Russians and a few other nationalities.

There is a very bitter feeling among the foreigners against the spotters who have for the past month been in the section securing the necessary evidence. These special agents, as they are termed by the authorities, are young foreigners sent here from the department at Toronto. Mrs. Wm. Peters, wife of one of the accused, soundly slapped one of the informers in the hallway outside the court room.

T. F. Correy and Inspector Sarvis are assisting in the prosecutions, along with G. H. Pettit and County Inspector George House. H. W. MaComb and L. B. Spencer are defending the accused. This is the largest of a number of big raids made here in the past couple of years.

NO GAIN IN TAXING INCOMES

Yield Would Be at Most Three Millon Dollars a Year

OTTAWA, April 7.—Special—The House of Commons spent the entire day in discussing Sir Thomas White's bill to levy a war tax upon business profits. The resolutions upon which the bill was founded were debated for many days after the budget speech, and nothing new came out in today's discussion.

A. K. Maclean, of Halifax, the financial critic for the Opposition, urged the imposition of an income tax and remonstrated against what he termed the reckless extravagance of the government. The expenditures of the postoffice department, he said, would run up to $17,000,000 for the year ending March 31, 1917.

E. M. Macdonald of Pictou followed in a similar strain and suggested that no more free rural mail delivery routes be established until after the war.

Sir Thomas White in reply said he would not hesitate to impose an income tax if he thought it necessary, but such a tax would yield at most $3,000,000 a year, and to impose it would be to encroach upon a field already occupied by provinces and municipalities. The bill is still in committee.

THE MAN IN ERMINE

(From the Greenville, S.C., News.)

In the crystal globe of the future the Republican party is beholding more clearly, not the Man on Horseback, but the Man in Ermine.

Every indication points to Justice Charles Evans Hughes of the Supreme Court of the United States as the standard bearer of the Republican party in 1916. Though he be silent as the Sphinx, the demand for him from his party is completely overshadowing the half-formed desire for the return of Roosevelt.

MUSIC AND DRAMA

CHARMING PRESENTATION OF "WITHIN THE LAW"

"Four years ago you took away my name and gave me a number. I served my time to a day—to an hour. I have dropped my number and taken your name. I vowed to be even with you, and have succeeded." These words were flashed into the face of Edward Gilder by the peerless Mary Turner before a full house at Griffin's last night in the attractive four-act drama, "Within the Law." Too much praise cannot be bestowed upon Miss Helen Mae Stewart for her vivid impersonation of this character. Arrested for a theft perpetrated by a fellow employe in the large establishment of Edward Gilder, the relentless spirit of her employer, refusing to extend sympathy when appealed to for mercy, the words of the poor working girl, as she was led away, handcuffed to an officer: "I will get even with you, Edward Gilder: you will pay for the three years I am to serve: and you will pay for the five years I have been your half-paid slave," rang through the house with a thrill that caused every heart to beat in sympathy.

But it was in the following acts that the pleasing personality and lady-like demeanor of Miss Stewart was shown to advantage. Courteous at all times, even liberal to a fault, her determination to keep within the law, though engaged in deep-running ventures, was a lesson in finances. Lawyers attacked her: detectives shadowed her: yet "Mary Turner" was ever within the limit. Her deepest game, however, was the determination to wed Dick Gilder, her former employer's only son, to bring disgrace upon the father, a feat she accomplished, and when an attempt to break the bonds was made by the enraged father, Mary threw the opening words of this article in his face. She had taken his name and purposed to keep it, while refusing the companionship of her husband.

In Grace Spaeth, the character of Agnes Lynch, the innocent-faced little crook, found a perfect representative, the vivacious tactics, even carried to police headquarters, were marvels in the art of coquetry—until she was discovered, and then she cut loose with a phrase that set the audience in convulsions. As a protege of Miss Turner, Agnes was scarcely a success, as her ambition for monetary success predominated, causing Mary many a heart worry. Mr. Bernard Craney as "Edward Gilder," the head of the big mercantile house, was unquestionably a success, while his son "Dick," the idol of his father, was well characterized by Mr. Robert Ranier.

The concluding act, a scene in the police headquarters, brought out many further qualifications, in which William Lambert, as Joe Carson, the professional crook, who together with Agnes was "pinched," and sent up, while the pleading of Dick Gilder with his wife was so strong that she finally yielded to his love. The evidence of Mary Turner's innocence, and the union in spirit of the young couple brought the play to a pleasing climax.

The company as a whole was admirably balanced, and great credit is due to all the characters.

"POTASH AND PERLMUTTER"—TUESDAY

Pinochle and Politics, Love and Law, Strikes and Styles, go to make up the story of "Potash and Perlmutter", the three-act comedy that A. H. Woods will present at Griffin's Opera House next Tuesday night, direct from its second year in New York City. "Potash and Perlmutter" a dramatization of the characters and incidents in Montague Glass' stories in the Saturday Evening Post, scored the greatest triumph in the history of comedy—for it is a comedy in spite of the tremendous heart-interest that gives it its chief hold on the theatre-going public. Abe Potash and Morris Perlmutter are to-day the two most popular characters of modern fiction—if indeed they may be called fiction characters now that they have been among us in the flesh and blood for so long. Their almost incessant quarrels are uproariously mirthful, while their tenderness, their spirit of self-sacrifice, their patience under grief are heart-touching. They are the most thoroughly human heroes of the stage that is why they were welcomed as readily in London as in New York.

The cast and production of "Potash and Perlmutter", which will be seen here, is exactly the same in every detail as that which has played Detroit Buffalo and Toronto, and an exact duplicate of the big London production which broke all records.

On account of the 80th Battalion Band concert at Griffin's Opera House tonight, the 7th episode of the popular Red Circle series will be shown at the Palace Theatre tonight only, and as usual at Griffin's Opera House Saturday, matinee and night. "A Fight to a finish," a thrilling 2-part railroad drama and 3 other varied photoplays will also be exhibited.

CALLED BY DEATH

MRS. SUSANNA SILLS

A pioneer resident of Sidney township passed away this morning in the person of Mrs. Susanna Sills, widow of the late Mr. Samuel Sills. In the year 1829 deceased was born in Sidney, and had lived in the township all her life. She was a daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Stephen B. Gilbert. For many years Mrs. Sills had been a devoted member of the Methodist Church, and was a lady who was much respected by all who knew her. Deceased had been ill for some weeks. Surviving are two sons George W., and Samuel G., both of whom live in Sidney.

155th Battalion Minstrel Event of the Season

On Monday evening April 10th, the citizens of Belleville will have an opportunity to see the very best minstrel entertainment ever given in the city, either professional or amateur, so that we may expect to see Griffin's Opera House jammed to capacity. In producing the Quinte Battalion Minstrels the 155th have enlisted the very best talent to be found in the Bay of Quinte district. All the old timers will be there—Geo. Dulmage, Ab. Wheeler, Sam Turner, Davy Carr, etc., etc., and with them will be seen new blood that will make the old timers extend themselves to hold their places. The 155th Battalion is our own battalion, and should be supported by the citizens of Belleville, as over 200 Belleville boys are enlisted in its ranks. But aside from the sentimental reason, the citizens of Belleville who journey up to Griffin's next Monday will enjoy an evening's entertainment that will live long in their memories. In the first part, the ten end men will dispense the laughter, the eight ballad singers will supply the sentiment, and with the fifty choristers and forty musicians, who comprise the orchestra, will discourse sweet music. In the olio, which is usually the weak spot in amateur minstrels, a real surprise is in store for the audience. After a programme of high-class vaudeville the show closes with an after-piece, "The Capture of the U. B. Dam," an up-to-date travesty on "H. M. S. Pinafore," written and produced by our talented fellow-citizen Mr. J. Nevin Doyle. This act alone is worth more than the price of admission. The scenery is painted especially, and the costumes are being supplied entirely by Jos. Ponton, the Montreal costumer. Seats are on sale at Doyle's Drug Store.

FAREWELL BANQUET TENDERED MAJOR B. R. HEPBURN, M. P.

(Picton Gazette)

The complimentary farewell banquet tendered to Major B. R. Hepburn, M.P. at the Royal Hotel, Picton, on Monday evening last, was largely attended by his many friends in town and county, who felt that some expression of their personal appreciation of his many qualities was fitting at this time.

The banquet was served at the Royal Hotel about 10.00 p.m., after the close of the recruiting meeting in the Armory. Tables were prepared specially in the spacious dining-room of the Royal to accommodate over one hundred guests, and every chair was taken. Eleven young men in khaki from the 155th Battalion, acted as waiters. The menu provided by the host, Mr. George Wellman, Manager, was most excellent and served in the most approved style.

Mr. G. M. Farrington, President of the County Conservative Association was chairman for the evening. Seated to his right was the guest of the evening, Major B. R. Hepburn, M.P., and on his left were Hon. T. M. Crothers and Sir Mackenzie Bowell.

The toast to "The King" was responded to by all present rising and singing God Save the King.

Sir Mackenzie Bowell and Hon. T. W. Crothers responded with short addresses to the toast of "The Empire." Mr. Crothers said he was very glad to be present on this occasion when his constituents were doing honor to his friend, Major Hepburn. A special pleasing feature of the event was the fact that so many men were in khaki.

Mr. Crothers said that "Barney" Hepburn was the most popular man in the House, and that if things got warm and political feeling ran high "Barney" would slip around and smooth things over. He referred to his early life in this county by telling some humorous circumstances of the days of his boyhood.

Senator Corby replied to the toast of "The Army and Navy" in his usual vigorous and characteristic manner and his address was most heartily received.

When the toast to "Our Guest" was proposed it was coupled with the name of Mr. E. M. Young, who read the following address to Major Hepburn and presented him with a beautiful wrist watch:—

To Major B. R. Hepburn, M. P.

We, your personal friends and admirers of the County of Prince Edward, on the eve of your departure for overseas as Major of the Foresters' Battalion, want to give expression in some slight way of our appreciation of your loyalty to Canada in thus donning the khaki and doing your "bit" for the Empire.

"You have been true to the trust imposed upon you by the electorate of Prince Edward. You have taken care of the interests of the County. You have shown yourself alive to the best interests of the County as no other member of Prince Edward has ever done, and while we are sorry to part with you in this solemn moment of the Empire's needs, and while we appreciate the great sacrifice you are making in leaving your wife, your family, your friends and your business, yet we are proud of your unselfishness and your devotion to your country, knowing that you will do your duty fearlessly with credit to your noble ancestry and to the best traditions of the loyal County of Prince Edward. We wish you God speed and a happy and welcome return to us, who in the meantime will stand by and safeguard your best interests.

As a slight reminder to you when you are on the Continent, of your many faithful and loyal friends here, we present to you this slight token of our regard and esteem, entwined with loving memories that no time can erase.

Signed on behalf of your loving friends in the County of Prince Edward.

G. M. Farrington,
E. M. Young.

Major Hepburn replied saying that he would always carry with him the pleasantest memories of his life in his home town of Picton and the keenest regard for all his old friends here. Major Hepburn made another appeal on behalf of Col. Adams and the 155th Battalion and hoped and believed that the people of the town and county would make up their full quota for this battalion. He regretted that Col. McDougall, Commanding Officer of the Foresters' Battalion, could not be present. Major Hepburn referred to his regret at leaving his friends in Canada, but hoped to be of some service to the Empire.

Very enjoyable features of the evening were the songs by Bandsman Burke of the 155th, and the music by the 155th orchestra.

The banquet closed about one o'clock a.m., everyone voting it the most enjoyable event they had attended for some time.

DETACHMENT OF 146th VISITED NAPANEE

Lieut.-Col. Low and Capt. Sutherland after Recruits—Death of Mrs. Carscallen

NAPANEE, April 6.—Napanee was invaded by a detachment from the 146th Battalion, with the band coming in on the G.T.R. train arriving here at 2.33 o'clock yesterday afternoon. They were in charge of Lieut.-Col. C. A. Low, O.C., and Captain J. T. Sutherland. The Napanee Platoon, under Lieut. J. J. Graham, and the Boy Scouts under Assistant Scoutmaster A. Day, were lined up on the platform to meet them. They paraded the streets, giving the citizens an opportunity to listen to and admire the splendid band which Lieut.-Col. Low has gathered together. The assault-at-arms and concert given in the Town Hall was well attended. Selections were given by Sergt. W. McFedridge, Q. M. S. Harte; vocal selections by Bert Weiss; boxing bouts by McKibbie and Stockbridge, and Blakey and Hartley, Parkes and Kennedy, and a wrestling bout between Ellerbeck and McKibbie.

Captain Sutherland appealed for thirty more men from Napanee to complete the 100 men asked for. Col. Low also gave a recruiting speech, appealing to the young men to do their duty and come forward.

Private Foote, a returned member of the Princess Patricia's Light Infantry, who mounted the platform at the request of Captain Sutherland, was given a rousing reception. Cheer after cheer greeted this battle-scarred hero as he told the story of how the Canadians saved the day at Ypres.

Mrs. Carscallen, wife of T. G. Carscallen, member of Parliament for Lennox, died yesterday afternoon. She had been ailing for about four years, but was fatally stricken a few days ago.

Joshua Pendell, an employee of Messrs. Boyle & Son, and a member of the Napanee Fire Brigade, is seriously ill, suffering from spinal-meningitis, and no hope is given for his recovery.

Recruiting Meeting at the Picton Armory

Patriotic Address by Sir Mackenzie Bowell, Hon. W. T. Crothers, Senator Corby and Others

(Picton Gazette)

On Monday evening last one of the most successful recruiting meetings yet held in Picton, took place at the Armory. The large building, which was specially seated for the purpose, was well filled when the meeting began about 8 o'clock.

Seated on the platform were: Mr. A. J. Cundick, President of the Prince Edward County Recruiting League, as Chairman of the meeting Sir Mackenzie Bowell, Hon. T. W. Crothers, Minister of Labor, Senator Harry Corby and J. W. Johnson, M.P.P., Ex-Mayor Wills, Postmaster Gillen of Belleville, Major B. R. Hepburn, M.P., Col. Adams, Col. Putman, Mayor Newman, G. M. Farrington, E. M. Young, R. A. Norman, Capt. Noble, Capt. Ainsworth, and Lieuts. Scott, Taylor, Wilson and Young, also the 155th Battalion orchestra, which furnished several selections during the meeting.

Col. Adams was the first speaker and his statement that the 155th Battalion was the only county battalion in Eastern Ontario that had reached the thousand mark was received with great applause. During March, 257 men had enlisted with this battalion and if 200 more could be secured in April the Col. said they would go into camp in full strength.

Senator Corby, the next speaker, gave a short address, which was heartily received.

Hon. W. T. Crothers, the Minister of Labor, who is a native of Prince Edward County, and whose career his many friends in this county have followed with admiration, gave a most excellent address. Mr. Crothers is a fluent and thoughtful speaker and his address was attentively listened to. He said that this meeting was honored by the presence of the veteran statesman, Sir Mackenzie Bowell, who had given to his county more than half a century of honorable service. In the course of his address, which was a most excellent recruiting speech, Mr. Crothers referred to the justice of the Allies' cause and said: "We will stay in the war until Belgium is liberated, and Germany is brought to her knees We entered the war to redeem the pledge given to Belgium, and believing that a nation's honor should be as sacred as an individual's, but above all to maintain the independence and freedom of Canadians. A German victory would mean a German Canada, and the sacrifice of all our British freedom and liberty. British subjects are protected, and their rights maintained, and the British flag respected the world over. Germany is fighting for territory and if she wins Canada will be the prize she will demand. "We are defending ourselves against German domination," said Mr. Crothers, "and everyone should pay, fight or serve." Every young man who has no good reason for staying at home should be at the front. The young man who allows someone else to fight for him is unworthy of this great country. Mr. Crothers paid a high tribute to the women of Canada who have done so much for the men at the front. In closing Mr. Crothers referred to the splendid record of the Canadian soldiers. He said: "The Canadian soldiers know everything about fighting except how to retreat." He hoped that the 155th would soon be recruited to full strength and he was sure that if they were called upon to go to the front, they would bring home with them an honorable record of service for the Empire.

Sir Mackenzie Bowell was received with hearty applause. In spite of his 92 years, he spoke with vigor and effectiveness. He referred to the time, fifty-four years ago, when he stumped the county from Weller's Bay to Long Point, and said that if he was younger he would now be at the front as were all his grandsons and nephews. He himself was proud to have earned the Long Service and Fenian Raid medals. Sir Mackenzie Bowell said that he was sure the blood of their U. E. L. ancestry flowed in the veins of the men of Prince Edward County today, and that they would do their part at this time.

Mr. J. W. Johnson, M.P.P., said he always felt at home in Picton and was glad to be present on this occasion. He referred to the splendid armory building in which the meeting was held and said it was a fortunate circumstance that Canada had been so well provided with these buildings that have proved so useful at this time. Mr. Johnson said that every Canadian who was going to the front was fighting for us, and he did not believe that there was any mother who would refuse to let her son go, and thus shelter him behind some other mother's son who was at the front.

Major Hepburn said that this was probably the last chance he would have of speaking to his friends in Prince Edward County until after the war was over.

THIS IS THE 613TH DAY THE BRITISH EMPIRE HAS BEEN AT WAR WITH GERMANY.

JUDGE HUGHES FOR PRESIDENT.

That man is a poor observer of the times who does not realize that the Republicans of the United States have already made up their mind to nominate Hughes, and that it is utterly futile for the machine politicians to think they can prevent it, says the Boston Herald. In Maine, the other day, the convention proved, by the testimony of all observers, for Hughes and nobody else. In New Hampshire, while its eight delegates are keeping discreetly silent, the real choice of a clear majority is Hughes. Vermont is a Hughes State; and has been from the start. The Burlington Free Press is calling aloud for his nomination. In Rhode Island, where Senator Lippitt early attempted to swing at least a complimentary ballot for Senator Weeks, sentiment is unmistakably for Hughes, who happens to be an alumnus of Brown University and its most distinguished trustee. Connecticut will vote with New York in the convention. After the compliments have been passed around and some attempts made to assuage the feelings of the politicians, these States will join in the procession. The Nebraskans, on whose ballot Hughes refused to allow his name to go will try to write it in lead pencil. In Minnesota and elsewhere in the Northwest the sentiment is the same. Pollings of straw votes everywhere have disclosed but one result—Hughes the choice of the great body of Republicans, and Hughes and Roosevelt the only two who were seriously regarded as of suitable size.

A PIECEMEAL MONUMENT.

In a Canadian letter to The New York Times, we are reminded, now that Canada is planning her new capitol buildings, an opportunity is given to the English-speaking nations to show their regard for the Dominions by offering sufficient fine hard woods to panel the Senate Hall and the House, or beautiful stained glass windows for those chambers! The United States would, of course, be expected to join in this plan.

With the names of the donors, their coats of arms and date of the gifts, inlaid in different colored woods or emblazoned in the stained glass, what a message of kindness and good-will to the Dominion would they always convey!

Should disputes arise between the Dominion and the United States or Australia, for example, continues the letter, surely the speakers should be compelled to take a kindlier tone with these gifts before their eyes. Disputes would really be half settled by the very presence of these contributions to the beauty of the new capitol

"Your readers are all familiar with the heroic figure of Christ in the Andes and the message it conveys to Chile and Argentine, and no doubt to other South American nations," says the writer, "and it would seem that the gifts I refer to would be helpful along similar lines. The same idea holds good with relation to the new Australian buildings, and I am sure that the people of this country would welcome an opportunity of making some contribution to their furnishings.

"Australians have not forgotten the visit of our fleet to their waters, and our sailors will long remember the warmth of their reception. Any link which binds the United States to Australia will be as enduring as steel.

"Letters of similar tenor have been sent to Australia, New Zealand, India, South Africa, Newfoundland, England and Jamaica.

"The effect of these gifts showing the solidarity of the English-speaking nations and their essential unity of purpose and thought and ideals will not be lost upon any nations which are jealous of the heritage we have acquired."

Quaint as the suggestions might appear, there is a vein of unselfishness throughout the thought that we would do well to consider. In any event the offer of such gifts would be in order, and, we doubt not, appreciated.

ARBOUR DAY.

The educational authorities in nearly every province of Canada proclaim an Arbour Day, for which special exercises are prescribed. Interesting programmes, including tree-planting, are carried out.

The planting of trees and shrubs and their protection and care is a feature of nature study well worth the attention of all school principals and teachers. Too many of our schools have a neglected and deserted appearance, an index of the character of those responsible for them. Nothing will overcome this drawback more easily or with less expense than the improvement of the school grounds. Trees, flower beds, borders and climbing vines add to the school a home-like and attractive appearance, causing it and its teacher to be remembered with pleasure by the pupils in after years.

It is not too early to prepare for this year's observance of Arbour Day in our schools. Educational authorities, school principals and teachers should commence at once on a programme, secure the necessary supplies of trees and shrubs, and interest their scholars in the work, so that when the day arrives they will enter with enthusiasm upon the task of beautifying their surroundings.

The Registrar-General of the Province has been notifying the clerks of all municipalities to be extremely careful about the registration of vital statistics. It is very difficult for clerks to make proper returns when persons interested do not hand in the full particulars of births, marriages and deaths. The most minute detail is required, and the Provincial Government forms clearly set out what is required. There are people, for instance, who fail to give particulars as to their own marriage when registering a birth. This information is required. Other very necessary information is also not forthcoming when the registration is made.

A correspondent with the United States punitive expedition in Mexico tells of a forty-eight hour equinoctial gale of terrific violence which swept the whole section in which operations are being carried out. The desert-like land surface, which is loose and sandy, was shrouded in almost asphyxiating clouds of dust, while in addition to these were snow and hail storms with a cold and cutting wind. The hunters of Bandit Villa seemingly are not having a very pleasant time of it.

Montreal Star: The British supply of silver bullets is to be increased by new taxation. The enormous sums which the British people are raising by taxation and loan indicate one point at which they were prepared for war. Our navy and our purse were ready—and both have been of incalculable value to the Allies.

It is perfectly clear that the Dutch Government believes that it has reason to fear attack from some one, and that it is following the good Swiss example in getting ready beforehand to make such an attack too costly to be delivered.

Current Comment

One "savage" and "uncivilized" Eskimo chief inside the Arctic Circle subscribes two dollars to feed the wretched Belgian populace being starved to death by the "cultured" German conqueror. One of the little paradoxes of the Year of our Lord 1916.

In 1908 Lord Fisher wrote in his daughter's birthday book that Germany would be at war with England in 1914, and that Jellicoe would be the Nelson of the Fleet. He justified his prophecy at the time by saying that by 1914 the Kiel Canal would be enlarged, the German Fleet greatly strengthened and the financial burden in Germany so great that it must mean war or diminished armaments.

Montreal Gazette: The completed returns of the voting in Manitoba on the prohibition law referendum show that 48,936 ballots were marked in favor of making the province dry and 25,293 against. The majority was large enough in one sense. It was, however, barely one-half of the number of voters at the time of the latest parliamentary election. The measure in operation will have to surmount the chief difficulty that defeated like enactments in smaller fields, or share their fate.

Great Britain is now wide awake. In the presence of the German enemy, Free Traders and Tariff Reformers are quite ready to come together and frame a national trade policy; and the true principles of reform are surely those to which the London Chamber of Commerce has given its cordial adhesion—joint commercial system with the Dominions; preferential trade relations with our Allies; and with Germany and the Central Powers a strict measure of like for like.—London Chronicle.

THE RED CROSS

(By Alexandria H. Campbell (Mrs. Campbell-Smith, B.E., D.L.A.)

When on the field the wounded lie,
Who answers to their helpless cry
And strives to rescue e're they die?
The Red Cross.

Out on the battlefield they go
To minister to friend and foe,
And for His sake no difference know!
The Red Cross.

And when on beds of racking pain,
The wounded warriors are lain,
Who nurses back to health again?
The Red Cross.

Or if our Captain Lord on High,
Should call the soldier, and he die,
Who bears the message and good-bye?
The Red Cross.

To work, to heal, to bind redress,
In spirit of true righteousness,
Both friend and foe mankind to bless!
The Red Cross.

Faithful and true 'mid shot and shell
'Mid bursting bomb and funeral knell,
The healing Christ 'mid man-made hell
The Red Cross.

Be the glorious task that's thine,
Blessed till eternal glory shine,
'Tis ours to aid this work divine!
The Red Cross.

That none may die from lack of care,
Let us our time, work, money spare,
Dedicate them with a prayer,
To—The Red Cross.

FARM AND GARDEN

MATING SIRE TO OFFSPRING

Mating a good sire and his purebred daughters has been practised with considerable success by some breeders, but such work should be carried on only by experienced and careful breeders. It is never advisable to mate a sire and closely related females if the animals have a common weakness, since the poor qualities will be intensified as well as the good qualities.—Hoard's Dairyman.

TWO WAYS OF SAVING CORN

On the Hoard Dairyman's farm seed corn was selected last year by throwing out the best ripened ears as these came to the cutter, while filling the silo. Thirty or forty bushels of seed were saved in this way, and it had a fair appearance when selected, but showed only 70 per cent. germination this spring.

The writer of this followed a different plan. He selected from the field, after the crop was fully ripened, and corn so saved showed 90 per cent. germination in a test this spring.

SOME HOLSTEIN RECORD

During the present year forty-nine Holstein cows and heifers have been accepted for entry in the Record of Performance. Twelve of these have produced over 630 pounds of butter, on an 80 per cent. fat basis, in a year. A new champion appears in the four-year-old class in Baroness Madoline. This heifer captured the championship last year in the three-year-old class, which shows her ability to stay with the job from year to year. Her new record as a four-year-old is 966.25 pounds butter, or 773 pounds fat, from 21,149 pounds milk. In the three-year-old class Lily Korndyke Daisy leads with 692.5 pound butter on an 80 per cent. basis and 16,307 pounds milk. Fairmont Aggie Mechthilde leads a class of twenty-two two-year-olds with the good record of 717.5 pounds butter, 574 pounds fat, and 15,927 pounds milk.

THE WATCH

(By Walt Mason)

My watch wouldn't work worth a dime; it was always a fortnight too slow; instead of recording the time, it monkeyed around to and fro. The mainspring seemed out of repair, it travelled by spasm and jerks; so I sat me down in a chair, and studied the watch and its works. I took it apart with a wrench, and studied the levers and gears, all piled in a heap on a bench; I studied and wiggled my ears. I put the wheels back in the case, and shook them to give them a shock; but the hands didn't go round the face, and the works didn't tick nor yet tock. I asked of the plumber advice, and counsel I asked of the judge, consulted the dealer in ice—and still the blamed works wouldn't budge. "Methinks," I remarked, "and I wist, I must go to the jeweler's shop." He gave it three twists of the wrist, and the watch went along like a top. That plan's kept me down in the past—a plan that is doubtless the worst: I always reserve till the last, the things I should tackle at first.

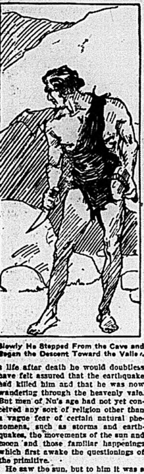
The Eternal Lover

by Edgar Rice Burroughs

Copyright, 1914, by W. G. Chapman

Slowly he stepped from the cave and began the descent toward the valley, for he was very thirsty and very hungry. Below him he saw animals grazing upon the broad plain, but even at that distance he realized that they were such as no mortal eye had ever before rested upon.

Warily he advanced, every sense alert against whatever new form of danger might lurk in this strange new world. Had he had any conception of a life after death he would doubtless have felt assured that the earthquake had killed him and that he was now wandering through the heavenly vale. But men of Nu's age had not yet conceived any sort of religion other than a vague fear of certain natural phenomena, such as storms and earthquakes, the movements of the sun and moon and those familiar happenings which first awake the questionings of the primitive.



Slowly He Stepped From the Cave and Began the Descent Toward the Valley.

He saw the sun, but to him it was a different sun from the great, swollen orb that had shone through the thick, humid atmosphere of the Neocene.

From Oo's lair only the day before he had been able to see in the distance the shimmering surface of the restless sea, but now so far as eye could reach there stretched an interminable jungle of gently waving tree tops, except for the rolling plain at his feet, where yesterday the black jungle of the ape people had reared its lofty fronds.

Nu shook his head. It was all quite beyond him, but there were certain things which he could comprehend: and so, after the manner of the self reliant, he set about to wrest his livelihood from nature under the new conditions which had been imposed upon him while he slept.

First of all, his spear must be attended to. It would never do to trust to that crude patch longer than it would take him to find and fit a new haft. His meat must wait until that thing was accomplished.

In the meantime he might pick up what fruit was available in the forest toward which he was bending his steps in search of a long, straight shoot of the hard wood which alone would meet his requirements.

In the days that had been Nu's there had grown in isolated patches a few lone clumps of very straight hardwood trees. The smaller of these the men of the tribe would cut down and split lengthwise with stone wedges until from a single tree they might have produced material for a score or more spear shafts, but now Nu must seek the very smallest of saplings, for he had no time to waste in splitting a larger tree, even had he had the necessary wedges and hammers.

Into the forest the youth crept, for, though 100,000 years had elapsed since his birth, he was still to all intent and purpose a youth. Upon all sides he saw strange and wonderful trees, the like of which had never been in the forests of yesterday.

The growths were not so luxuriant as prodigious, but for the most part the trees offered suggestions of alluring possibilities to the semiarboreal Nu, for the branches were much heavier and more solid than those of the great tree ferns of his own epoch and commenced much nearer the ground. Catlike he leaped into the lower branches of them, reveling in the ease with which he could travel from tree to tree.

Gay colored birds of strange appearance screamed and scolded at him. Little monkeys hurried, chattering, from his path. Nu laughed. What a quaint, diminutive world it was indeed! Nowhere had he yet seen a tree or creature that might compare in size to the monsters among which he had traveled the preceding day.

The fruits, too, were small and strange. He scarcely dared venture to eat of them lest they be poisonous. If the lesser ape folk would only let him come close enough to speak with them he might ascertain from them which were safe, but for some unaccountable reason they seemed to fear and mistrust him. This, above all other considerations, argued to Nu that he had come in some mysterious way into another world.

Presently the troglodyte discovered a slender, straight young sapling. He came to the ground and tested its strength by bending it back and forth. Apparently it met the requirements of a new shaft.

With his stone hatchet he hewed it off close to the ground, stripped it of branches, and climbing to the safety of the trees again, where he need fear no interruption from the huge monsters of the world he knew, set to work with his stone knife to remove the bark and shape the end to receive his spearhead.

First he split it down the center for four or five inches, and then he cut notches in the surface upon either side of the split portion. Now he carefully unwrapped the rawhide that binds the spearhead into his old haft, and for want of water to moisten it crammed the whole unfragrant mass into his mouth that it might be softened by warmth and saliva.

For several minutes he busied himself in shaping the point of the new shaft that it might exactly fit the inequalities in the shank of the spearhead. By the time this was done the rawhide had been sufficiently moistened to permit him to wind it tightly about the new shaft into which he had set the spearhead.

As he worked he heard the noises of the jungle about him. There were many familiar voices, but more strange ones. Not once had the cave bear spoken; nor Zor, the mighty lion of the Neocene; nor Oo, the saber toothed tiger. He missed the bellowing of the bull bos and the hissing and whistling of monster saurian and amphibian.

To Nu it seemed a silent world. Propped up against the bole of the tree before him grinned the hideous head of the man hunter, the only familiar object in all the world about him.

Presently he became aware that the lesser apes were creeping warily closer to have a better look at him. He waited silently until from the tail of his eye he glimpsed one quite near, and then in a low voice he spoke in the language that his allies of yesterday had understood; and though ages had elapsed since that long gone day, the little monkey above him understood, for the language of the apes can never change.

"Why do you fear Nu, the son of Nu?" asked the man. "When has he ever harmed the ape people?"

"The hairless ones kill us with sharp sticks that fly through the air," replied the monkey, "or with little sticks that make a great noise that kill us from afar. But you seem not to be of these. We have never seen one like you until now. Do you not wish to kill us?"

"Why should I?" replied Nu. "It is better that we be friends. All that I wish of you is that you tell me which of the fruits that grow here be safe for me to eat and then direct me to the sea beside which dwell the tribe of Nu, my father."

The monkeys had gathered in force by this time, seeing that the strange white ape offered no harm to their fellow, and when they learned his wants they scampered about in all directions to gather nuts and fruits and berries for him.

It is true that some of them forgot what they had intended doing before the task was half completed, and ended by pulling one another's tails and frolicking among the higher branches, or else ate the fruit they had gone to gather for their new friend, but a few there were with greater powers of concentration than their fellows, who returned with fruit and berries and caterpillars, all of which Nu devoured with the avidity of the half famished.

Of the whereabouts of the tribe of his father they could tell him nothing, for they had never heard of such a people, or of the great sea beside which he told them that his people dwelled.

His breakfast finished and his spear repaired, Nu set out toward the plain to bring down one of the beasts he had seen grazing there, for his stomach called aloud for flesh. Fruit and bugs might be all right for children and ape people, but a full grown man must have meat, warm and red and dripping.

Closest to him as he emerged from the jungle browsed a small herd of zebra. They were directly up wind, and between him and them were patches of tall grass and clumps of trees scattered about the surface of the plain.

Nu wondered at the strange beasts, admiring their gaudy markings as he came closer to them. Upon the edge of the herd nearest him a plump stallion stood switching his tail against the annoying flies, occasionally raising his head from his feeding to search the horizon for signs of danger, sniffing the air for the telltale scent of an enemy. It was he that Nu selected for his prey.

Stealthily the cave man crept through the tall grass, scarce a blade moving to the sinuous advance of his sleek body. Within fifty feet of the prey Nu stopped, for the stallion was giving evidence of restlessness, as though sensing intuitively the near approach of a foe he could neither see nor hear nor smell.

The man, still prone upon his belly, drew his spear into the throwing grasp. With the utmost caution he wormed his legs beneath him, and then, like lightning, and all with a single movement, he leaped to his feet and cast the stone tipped weapon at his quarry.

With a snort of terror the stallion reared to plunge away, but the spear had found the point behind his shoulder even as he saw the figure of the man rise from the tall grass. As the balance of the herd galloped madly off, their leader pitched headlong to the earth.

Nu ran forward with ready knife, but the animal was dead before he reached its side. The great spear had passed through its heart and was protruding upon the opposite side of the body. The man removed the weapon, and with his knife cut several long strips of meat from the plump haunches.

Ever and anon he raised his head to scan the plain and jungle for evidences of danger, sniffing the breeze just as had the stallion he had killed.

His work was but partially completed when he caught the scent of man yet a long way off. He knew that he could not be mistaken, yet never had he sensed so strange an odor. There were men coming, he knew, but of the other odors that accompanied them he could make nothing, for khaki and guns and sweaty saddle blankets and the odor of tanned leather were to Nu's nostrils as would Greek have been to his ears.

It would be best, thought Nu, to retreat to the safety of the forest until he could ascertain the number and kind of beings that were approaching, and so, taking but careless advantage of the handier shelter, the cave man sauntered toward the forest; for now he was not stalking game, and never yet had he shown fear in the presence of an enemy.

If their numbers were too great for him to cope with single handed he would not show himself, but none might ever say that they had seen Nu, the son of Nu, run away from danger.

In his hand still swung the head of Oo, and as the man leaped to the low branches of a tree at the jungle's edge to spy upon the men he knew to be advancing from the far side of the plain he fell to wondering how he was to find his way back to Nat-ul that he might place the trophy at her feet and claim her as his mate.

Only the previous evening they had walked together hand in hand along the beach, and now he had not the remotest conception of where that beach lay.

Straight across the plain should be the direction of it, for from that direction had he come to find the lair of Oo. But now all was changed.

There was no single familiar landmark to guide him. Not even the ape people knew of any sea nearby, and he himself had no conception as to whether he was in the same world that he had traversed when last the sun shone upon him.

CHAPTER IV.

The Dream Mate.

THE following morning the earthquake found Victoria Custer still abed. She told Lady Greystoke that she felt weak from the effects of the nervous shock, but the truth of the matter was that she dreaded to meet Curtiss and undergo the ordeal which she knew confronted her.

How was she to explain to him the effect that the subterranean rumblings and the shaking of the outer crust had had upon her and her sentiments toward him?

When her brother came in to see her she drew his head down upon the pillow beside hers and whispered something of the horrible hallucinations that had haunted her since the previous evening.

"Oh, Barney," she cried, "what can it be? What can it be? The first deep grumblings that preceded the shock seemed to awake me as from a lethargy, and as plainly as I see you beside me now I saw the half naked creature of my dreams, and when I saw him I knew that I could never wed Mr. Curtiss or any other.

"It is awful to have to admit it, even to you, Barney; but I—I knew when I saw him that I loved him—that I was his. Not his wife, Barney, but his woman—his mate—and I had to fight with myself to keep from rushing out into the terrible blackness of the night to throw myself into his arms.

"It was then that I managed to control myself long enough to run to you, where I fainted. And last night, in my dreams, I saw him again—alone and lonely—searching through a strange and hostile world to find and claim me.

THE VALUE OF TRUTH

Truth in business is just as important as truth in every-day life; truth creates confidence, establishes good-will and builds a reliability that will not be wrecked by the storms of competition.

Through three generations people have learned to place reliance on the advertised words of Scott's Emulsion, because they are untarnished, unexaggerated truisms about a household remedy of real and actual worth.

The popularity of Scott's Emulsion is increasing as intelligence advances, because in these days of adulterations it continues to guarantee pure cod liver oil medicinally perfected with glycerine and hypophosphites to build strength, improve the blood and strengthen the lungs. It is free from harmful drugs—a wholesome food-tonic, truthfully advertised.

WHY SUFFER WITH BACKACHE, KIDNEYS OR RHEUMATISM NOW?

Letter Tells of Long-looked-for Prescription.

Dear Readers—If I can do any good in the world for others, I wish to do it, and I feel that it is my duty to write about the wonderful results I received from the use of "Anuric." I was suffering from kidney and bladder troubles, scalding urine, backache and rheumatism, and feet and ankles swelled so that at times I could not walk without assistance. Had taken several different kinds of kidney remedies but all failed. I sent for a box of Dr. Pierce's newest discovery, "Anuric," which I received by mail in tablet form. I soon got better and am convinced that this popular new medicine is good. I wish to recommend it to my neighbors and everybody suffering from such troubles.

MRS. M. J. SARGENT.

NOTE: You've all undoubtedly heard of the famous Dr. Pierce and his well-known medicines. Well, this prescription is one that has been successfully used for many years by the physicians and specialists at Dr. Pierce's Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, of Buffalo, N. Y., for kidney complaints, and diseases arising from disorders of the kidneys and bladder, such as backache, weak back, rheumatism, dropsy, congestion of the kidneys, inflammation of the bladder, scalding urine, and urinary troubles.

Up to this time, "Anuric" has not been on sale to the public, but by the persuasion of many patients and the increased demand for this wonderful healing Tablet, Doctor Pierce has finally decided to put it into the stores, or send 10 cents for large trial package or 50 cents for full treatment.

Simply ask for Doctor Pierce's Anuric Tablets. There can be no imitation. Every package of "Anuric" is sure to be Dr. Pierce's. You will find the signature on the package just as you do on Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, the ever-famous friend to ailing women, and Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, proven by years to be the greatest general tonic and reconstructor for any one, besides being the best blood-maker known.

India's Hoarded Gold.

For many years London has been steadily drained of her gold by India. In ten years India has absorbed from circulation 150,000,000 gold sovereigns and hoarded them away. The coolie has learned that silver rupees are a poor investment, especially if he melts them into anklets or a nose ring for his wife, as over 30 per cent of the silver is lost in the melting pot, while the gold sovereign preserves its value whether he keeps it as a coin or melts it. When a coolie collects 15 rupees which he finds to be temporarily surplus he buys a sovereign with it. He has come to understand the wisdom of hoarding away only the gold coin, which he knows he can always realize on at its original value.

African Fashion Notes.

The prettiest dress of the Mpongwe woman is a cloth drawn up under the arms, a scarf on the shoulders and a handkerchief folded over the coiled hair in a high stiff fold set well up on the head, rather like a child's idea of a crown. There is a great fancy for purples and lavenders set off with shades of rose and red and a sudden keen note of gilt. With black there will be a touch of most delicious bright green. A cloth and a scarf worn by a woman of beautiful gesture—and a Gabonnaise is always that—have a certain mutable charm; the movements of the body, the wind that blows from the sea—these renew and display the folds of the garment so that the eye is intrigued.—Atlantic.

But None For Him.

"Any letters for me?"

"What name?"

"Jason Howlet."

"Um-m-m. Nope."

"That's strange."

"Expecting any?"

"No, but Israel Pubbleton was reading the other day thet there was enough letters sent through the postoffice last year to give every man, woman and child twenty-three each, an' I thought I'd come in for my share."

An Oversight.

"What do you think of his nerve?" exclaimed the old man, who was notoriously tricky in business. "He called me a barefaced robber!"

"Oh, well," replied the man who knew him, "probably in his excitement he didn't notice your mustache."

Another Reason.

"They call her the human graphophone."

"Just because she buzzes a bit?"

"It's on account of the airs she puts on."

Pinched Him Financially.

An esteemed citizen went into a shoe store in a metropolitan town and asked to see some leather goods. Another minute and an obliging salesman was hauling out some boxes.

"That is a nice looking shoe," remarked the customer as the salesman pushed his foot into a shiny right and started to lace it. "What is the price?"

"This pair is $8," responded the salesman as he finished the lacing and rap his hands across the vamp.

"Does it pinch you any?"

"Well, I should say it does!" was the prompt rejoinder of the customer. "Give me something about $5 cheaper."

Armenian History.

The history of the later years of the Armenian kingdom is bound up in the history of Am. The stronghold city became the capital of the Bagratid kings of Armenia in 961. The Byzantine emperor captured it in 1046, and it was then a hive of many scores of thousands, a wealthy city and an inviting one. The Seljuk Turks carried fire and sword throughout its confines eighteen years later. The warlike Georgians took it five times between 1123 and 1209. The Mongols overran it in 1239, and an earthquake in 1319 completed the work of ruin. The great cathedral, the most perfect survival, was founded in 1010, just at the beginning of the city's long chain of misfor-

SHORT AND TRAGIC

Career of the First Submarine Used In Real War.

SHE WAS BUILT IN MOBILE.

Constructed of Boiler Iron and Crude In Design, She Was Operated Against the Federal Ship Housatanic With Disastrous Results.

It is a fact that a submersible boat did actual service in the war between the states and was perhaps the first practical submarine used in actual warfare.

The boat was built in Mobile in 1864 by two men named Hundley and McClintock. It was of boiler iron, sharp at both ends and was about thirty feet long, five or six feet in beam and five or six feet deep. It was propelled by a screw, the shaft of which ran horizontally along the hold, almost from stem to stern and was turned by eight men, who sat four on each side of the shaft.

The only hatchway, placed well forward, was two feet in diameter, and it was closed by an iron cap that worked on a hinge and was airtight. In the forward part of the cap there was a clear glass bullseye, through which the pilot could see. The boat had water tight compartments, by filling or emptying which it could sink or rise. A ballast of iron rails was placed outside the hull, and by means of keys they could be detached so that the boat could rise instantly if necessary.

Besides a rudder, the boat had side paddles, or fins, which could be used to guide it up or down through the water.

The boat could go perhaps four knots an hour. It could remain submerged for half an hour or an hour without serious inconvenience to its crew, and once it remained as long as two hours under water without actual injury to them.

A floating torpedo was fastened to the boat by a line 100 feet long, and the inventor proposed that the boat should dive beneath the keel of the enemy's vessel and haul the torpedo after her. The triggers or sensitive primers of the torpedo would press against the ship's bottom, explode the torpedo and sink the vessel.

The boat was sent to Charleston to operate against the blockading fleet. General Beauregard had the torpedo fastened to the bow. It terminated in front with a sharp lance head, so that when the boat was driven against a ship the lance head would be forced into the ship below the water line and the torpedo fastened against the side. The boat was then to back off and explode the torpedo by a lanyard.

General Beauregard called on the Confederate fleet for volunteers, and Lieutenant Payne, a Virginian, and eight sailors volunteered. On the evening fixed for the expedition the crew had embarked, and the boat was submerged until only the combings of her hatch were above water. Lieutenant Payne was standing in the hatchway when the swell of a passing steamer rolled over the boat, and it sank instantly with her eight men. Lieutenant Payne sprang out of the hatchway as the boat sank, and he alone was saved.

In a few days she was raised, and again Payne volunteered and with him eight more men. The embarkation for the second attempt was made at Fort Sumter, and, as before, all being made ready, Payne, standing at his post in the hatchway, gave orders to cast off, when the boat careened and sank instantly. Payne sprang out, two of the men followed him, and the other six went down with the boat and perished.

Again the boat was raised, and her owner, Captain Hundley, took her for an experimental trip to Stone river, where, after going through her usual evolutions, she dived into deep water and disappeared. After a week's search she was found at an angle of forty degrees, her nose driven into the deep, soft mud of the bottom.

Her crew of nine men were standing, sitting or lying about in her hold, asphyxiated. Hundley had died at his post with a candle in one hand, while with the other he had been vainly trying to unclamp the hatch. The angle at which the boat had gone down had jammed the keys so that the men could not cast off the iron ballast that held them down.

Again the ill fated vessel was prepared for action, and volunteers were called for. Lieutenant Dixon of the Twenty-first Alabama volunteered and eight men with him.

The ship Housatonic was selected for attack and on a quiet night the brave crew set out from Charleston. Lieutenant Dixon guided the boat straight to the Housatonic, and the explosion tore open the ship's side, so that she went down with all her crew in two minutes.

The torpedo vessel never returned, and whether she went down with her enemy or drifted out to sea was long unknown. Many years after, in the work of deepening the bar off Charleston harbor, divers in submarine armor visited the wreck of the Housatonic and found the little torpedo vessel lying by her huge victim, and within her the bones of as devoted and daring men as ever went to sea.

In the history of the submarine certainly the Hundley is entitled to honorable mention.—Youth's Companion.

Many Military Matters

It is published for general information, that numerous complaints are being received from citizens of the United States for the discharge of relatives who are under 21 years of age and who have enlisted in a unit of the Canadian Expeditionary Force. Therefore, hereafter no men who answer questions (2) and (4) on attestation paper by giving their place of birth in the United States and their age as under twenty-one, or the address of their next of kin as being in the United States and their age as under twenty-one, or the address of their next of kin as being in the United States are to be enlisted. This, of course, will not apply to men over twenty-one years of age.

It is published for the information of all concerned, that commanding officers are to cause every order and circular issued for general information and guidance either to be republished in regimental orders or otherwise circulated throughout their corps, and they are to afford all officers under their command every facility for becoming acquainted with current changes in the regulations and orders. Ignorance of published orders cannot be admitted as an excuse for their non-observance.

Lieut.-Col. R. W. Smart, O. C., 136th Battalion, Port Hope, was in the city on Tuesday. The colonel is confident that he will march into camp with one of the best if not the best battalion in the division.

Lieut.-Col. W. J. Brown and Major R. E. Porter conducted examinations in the Provisional School of Infantry of the 77th Battalion at Ottawa on Tuesday.

W. F. NICKLE'S SECOND SON

Receives a Commission in The Forester's Battalion.

Douglas Nickle, son of W. F. Nickle, M.P., has been granted a commission in the 224th Foresters' Battalion, training at Quebec. He will report in that city at once and take a course of instruction. This is the second son of the Kingston member who has received an overseas commission. His brother, Lieut. William Nickle, jr., is now serving with the 21st Battalion in France.

The men about whom London Answers tells the following story were the roughest, rawest lot of recruits the sergeant had ever had to tackle. He worked hard at them for three hours, and at last thought they were getting into some sort of shape. He decided to test them.

"Right turn!" he barked. Then before they had got fairly under way he gave the order: "Left turn!"

One burly yokel slowly left the ranks and made off towards the barrack room.

"Here, you!" yelled the sergeant angrily. "Where are you off to?"

"Ah-ve had enough," replied the recruit in disgusted tones. "Tha doesn't know tha own mind for two minutes runnin'!"

Rids Poisons From the Blood, Clears Uy the Complexion

Sallow Skin, Pimples, Pains and Aches Are Soon Gone When Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills Are Used

The doctor feels your pulse and looks at your tongue, but at the same time he is reading your condition in your face. The sallow complexion tells him that your liver is not doing its work, the pimples tell him that the kidneys are not properly purifying the blood, he realizes that the bowels are constipated and the system overloaded with poisons.

You can apply this test in your own case and may be able to add other symptoms, such as headaches, pains and aches through back and limbs, spells of biliousness and indigestion.

If you have not used Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills you will be surprised to find how quickly they will rid your system of poisonous impurities and thereby remove the cause of pains, aches and skin troubles.

Mrs. F. N. Hall, 102 Queen street, St. John, N.B., writes: "I am glad to say I have used Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills with splendid results. I was greatly troubled with constipation and pimples on the face. I tried other remedies and used liquid arsenic three times a day for a year to get rid of the pimples but received no benefit. I began the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills and it was not very long before I was completely cured. The pills acted on the bowels, kidneys and liver and cleansed them of all impure matter. I think they cannot be beaten as a means of ridding a person of that tired aching due to weak kidneys, and I would not be without them in the house for any money."

SQUARE DEALING GOVERNED SHELL COMMITTEE TRANSACTIONS

General Bertram Says Royal Commission will Repudiate Charges—Ventures Opinion That Sir Sam Will Make the Fur Fly When He Returns

TORONTO, April 6.—"As far as I am concerned, the dealings of the shell committee were absolutely square," said General Alex. Bertram, when seen at the Queen's Hotel last night. He declined to discuss any of the charges made in the House of Commons, dismissing all queries with a smile and the remark that everything would be brought to light when the Royal Commission got its machinery in working order.

"I have a great deal off my mind," said General Bertram, "I am quite satisfied with the way the shell committee did its work. It was a clean job. From the very first I kept politics out of the whole business.

"I am not afraid of any inquiry. Everything is on record, and at the proper time and place all will be made plain. All the work that could be done in Canada was done here. Of course, the manufacturers made mistakes, just as we expected they would. But this was inevitable for men entering an entirely new industry. They had to gain experience, and they have done remarkably well.

"I look for improvement in the future. There are many ways in which the standard of the work could be raised."

When questioned about the Ottawa charges and the dealings he had with Colonel Allison, General Bertram said that he knew practically nothing about Mr. Allison, because he had only met him casually a couple of times. The opinion was ventured that "Sir Sam would make the fur fly" when he got on this side of the Atlantic.

As to the policy of the shell committee, General Bertram reiterated his statement that the procedure was to give Canadians the preference. Any outside contracts that had been awarded were given for reasons that would come out later. The General said he was much relieved to be rid of his burden.

He arrived in Toronto after his visit in Florida, and before coming here made a short stay at the home of his son, Mr. Henry Bertram, at Grimsby.

Investigating the Khaki Scandal

Probes Being Made in Town of Manufacture—Bad Workmanship

PETERBORO', Ont., April 6.—The Davidson Commission reopened its inquiry into the Auburn Woolen Co.'s contracts here this morning, Mr. D. O'Connell representing the Auburn Co. and Capt. Thompson, K.C., representing the Militia Department.

Major R. P. Watt, of the 93rd Battalion, a former employe of the woolen company, was the first witness. His duties called him into the finishing room of the mill several times every day. He had noticed specks in the khaki cloth.

Government inspectors had been at the mills since the outbreak of the war, but there had been times when an inspector had not been present.

Frieze cloth had been shipped to the Militia Department and to Mark Yorkman & Co., Montreal, without inspection.

The British Government had ordered blankets and there was an inspector for the blankets. This inspector had never inspected khaki cloth so far as the witness knew.

George Baird, dyer at the Auburn Mills until last October, was given several samples of cloth and wool stock to examine. He stated that the wool stock had hard ends due to bad workmanship. Good frieze could be made of 45 per cent. wool stock and the balance of wool. Pure wool No. 1 and No. 7 samples were the poorest of the samples, in his opinion. He could not say positively without having them on a machine.

Miss Ethel Miller, bookkeeper at the Auburn Company, identified several invoices for khaki waste which was bought from the Smith Manufacturing Co., Toronto, at 31 cents a pound, and she had never heard of any complaint of the khaki waste sent to these mills.

WEAK, AILING CHILDREN

MADE WELL AND STRONG BY SIMPLE REMEDY.

Here is another letter that has just come to our attention, showing the power of Vinol to build up health and strength for weak, puny, ailing children.

W. A. Smith of Shanesville, Ohio, says:—"My little child was puny weak and ailing, could not rest at night and would not eat. I learned about Vinol and tried it, and within a week noticed an improvement. The child's appetite improved, it slept well, strength and health were soon built up. We think Vinol is excellent for weak, puny children."

Vinol is a delicious cod liver and iron tonic without oil, containing beef peptone, which creates an appetite, tones up the digestive organs, enriches the blood and creates strength. Children love to take it.

"We ask all parents of weak, sickly, delicate children in this vicinity to try Vinol with the understanding that we will return your money if it fails to benefit your little ones. J. S. McKeown, Druggist, Belleville, Ont.

INSTANTLY RECOGNIZED MOTHER AND BROTHER

Memories of the Past Steadily Returning to Prof. Lavell

TORONTO, April, 6—Threads in broken fabric of the life of Prof. Cecil F. Lavell were picked up at the point where two years and five months ago they were dropped, when the professor yesterday visited his mother and brother in Brantford. His recognition of Mrs. Lavell and Rev. A. E. Lavell was instant and complete. He was able to converse with them upon incidents which had occured in the family shortly before his disappearance from the streets of Hamilton.

"The results of my husband's visit yesterday are indeed encouraging," said Mrs. Lavell. "I am very happy to know that memories of the past are steadily returning to him. He is quite fatigued to-day from his exertions at the reunion."

DIED IN WATERTOWN

A Watertown, N.Y., paper has the following reference to the death of a lady who was for many years a resident of Belleville:

Mrs. Sarah Belcher Cardwell, widow of Gilbert Cardwell, died early Thursday morning at the home of her son, Thomas Belcher, 312 Cooper street, aged 77 years, following a week's illness due to pneumonia. She was taken ill last Tuesday morning.

She is survived by four sons and one daughter. George Belcher of Belleville, Ont., Joseph W. Thomas and John F. Belcher of this city, Mrs. Catherine Baker of Huntington, Ind., and also 16 grandchildren and twelve great-grandchildren.

Her husband died 15 years ago. She had been a resident of this city for the past 28 years and for the past two years she had made her home with her son. She was twice married, her first husband being Joseph Belcher. The marriage took place in England, where she was born and had lived prior to her marriage.

Dandruff Surely Destroys the Hair

Girls—if you want plenty of thick, beautiful, glossy, silky hair, do by all means get rid of dandruff, for it will starve your hair and ruin it if you don't.

It doesn't do much good to try to brush or wash it out. The only sure way to get rid of dandruff is to dissolve it, then you destroy it entirely. To do this, get about four ounces of ordinary liquid arvon; apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

By morning, most if not all, of your dandruff will be gone, and three or four more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every single sign and trace of it.

You will find, too, that all itching and digging of the scalp will stop, and your hair will look and feel a hundred times better. You can get liquid arvon at any drug store. It is inexpensive and four ounces is all you will need, no matter how much dandruff you have. This simple remedy never fails.

FOREST PROTECTION.

Sweden's Embargo on Pulp Gives Canada a Big Opportunity.

According to press reports, Sweden proposes to cut off the export of chemical pulp to Great Britain. Naturally, all eyes are immediately turned to Canada to supply the threatened deficiency.

The Commission of Conservation has just issued a report on "Forest Protection in Canada, 1913-1914," which is of particular interest in this connection. It contains much information respecting the work of the provincial forest services and of the Federal departments entrusted with the care of our forests.

Forest fire protection is assuming a large place in public attention. It is obvious that, if Canada is to continue as a wood-producing country, she must conserve her resources of this natural product. The report treats exhaustively of the fire protection of forest lands along railway rights-of-way. Through co-operative action, great headway has been made in securing the reduction of forest losses through fires traceable to railway causes.

The forests of British Columbia and on Dominion lands in the West have been dealt with in reports containing the results of special studies conducted by Dr. C. D. Howe and Mr. J. H. White. The Trent watershed in Ontario has also received especial attention, in a report of an investigation by Dr. C. D. Howe in the Townships of Burleigh and Methuen. This district is important in that, while of very little value as an agricultural area, it is being repeatedly over-run by forest fires and the little remaining merchantable timber destroyed. It is suggested that the area be placed under the control of the Dominion Forestry Branch for protection from fires and for reforestation.

Big Ships Must Stay Home.

A new order has been promulgated whereby Canadian steamers whose gross tonnage exceeds 500 ton are prohibited from proceeding on any voyage, excepting voyages between ports in Canada or between Canadian and United States ports, unless a license to do so has been granted.

Some months ago the British Government passed an order prohibiting vessels from engaging in voyages from one foreign port to another without permission.

The Book For Him.

There was a backward student at Balliol who for failure to pass an examination in Greek was "sent down." His mother went to see the master, Dr. Jowett, and explained to him what an excellent lad her son was. "It is a hard experience for him, this disgrace," said the old lady, "but he will have the consolation of religion, and there is always one book to which he can turn." Jowett eyed her a moment and then answered: "Yes, madam, the Greek grammar. Good morning."

HAULED THE STONES.

Veteran Ottawa Man Recalls Building of Parliament House.

The destruction of the Canadian House of Parliament has awakened recollections of its building, in the mind of Peter Redmond, a retired locomotive engineer, who saw King Edward lay its foundation stone in 1860.

When construction work was first started Mr. Redmond was employed as a fireman on the Ottawa and St. Lawrence railroad, and he was promoted to engineer a few days before the first material for the structure was hauled to Ottawa. One train crew was employed for three summers, hauling sandstone and quarry rock from Prescott, where it was landed from the steamers on the St. Lawrence river.

The train made a round trip each day. The first stone used in the building came from quarries located where the main part of the city of Cleveland, Ohio, now stands. It was shipped by water to Prescott, where it was loaded from the boats onto the railway cars by large cranes.

Mr. Redmond's train did nothing else during three summers but haul the stone. "It required two cars and sometimes three for each piece of stone that was moved to Ottawa," Mr. Redmond said yesterday. "The smallest stone that was hauled by the railroad weighed three tons, and the average weight was about five tons. We moved two stones which weighed nine tons each. I believe they were the largest that were put into the building.

"Owing to the excessive weight on the cars, which were much lighter than the steel cars now in use on the railroads, it was necessary to run our engines slowly. We seldom went over eighteen miles an hour, and as a rule the fastest time we made was fifteen miles."

No iron or steel was used in those days for the springs on the cars. Solid rubber was used, for the most part, and the cars were loaded so heavy that at the end of each trip new springs had to be put in most of the cars.

"Our train was given the right-of-way over all other trains. This was principally because of the heavy train we hauled. We were permitted to stop only in case of necessity. The necessity came frequently and was caused mostly by the excessive weight on the trucks, which resulted in many hot boxes.

"My train brought out the first shipment of rock and stone and stone cutters' tools. The first part of the building erected was a massive wall, over 500 feet long. It was on the end of this wall that the Prince of Wales laid the cornerstone. Thousands of people witnessed the laying of the stone, and I had an opportunity to shake hands with the Prince, as did many of the workmen.

"The wall, when first built, was a crude affair, but after the workmen finished polishing it, and fixing it up, it was one of the finest pieces of work of that kind that I have ever seen. It was five feet high and several inches in thickness."

"The Prince of Wales at that time was about twenty years old. He was a fine looking fellow, much better looking than his brother, the Duke of Edinborough, who visited Canada a year later.

"There were no big functions for the duke. He visited about the country for a few months and he went away without any great fuss being made about him. He was not a very good looking man. Many of the farmer boys were much better.

"A few years ago I saw Barney Riley, the Irish ski rider from Bovey, Minn., who was born and raised here, and I thought that I was back in Ottawa at the time the duke was there. Barney and the duke were as much alike as any two men could be, in appearance, form, and looks."

Unhealthy to Oppose Canadians.

Mr. Philip Gibbs, Special Correspondent, writing from the British Field Headquarters, says:

"For a variety of reasons I fancy it must be nerve-racking to be on the opposite side of the way to the Canadians in Flanders. They are most quiet, they are most dangerous. They are not only inspired by a restless audacity, but they are cunning and so methodical that they will undertake what seems like a wild-cat adventure with certain death at the end of it and get back with hardly a scratch. They have brought the spirit of the trapper to the trenches, and they are very patient in marking down their prey.

"So it was in a recent 'cutting-out' raid, when a party of them, all volunteers, went out one night with the astounding intention of getting through the barbed wire outside one of the strongest German positions. For a small party to get back again from a trench full of Germans and machine-guns is not so easy as escaping from a jungle of man-eating tigers, and was not considered part of the program of war before the Canadians gave their exhibition. It was so successful that General Joffre has circulated an account of the Canadians' exploits as a model to the French army. After taking some prisoners and killing about 20 men, they came home again with only two casualties, one caused by accident. To men who know the conditions of trench warfare this exploit still seems fantastic and incredible. It was possible only because these Canadians had made cunning of more importance than courage itself, and had adapted old lessons of Red Indian warfare to these new conditions of modern fighting."

Deluged With Applications.

While recruiting is going on briskly throughout the country and the various units are being filled up in the regular way by applying to commanding officers of each battalion, the Department of Militia and Defence is deluged with direct applications for positions of paymaster, chaplain, or quartermaster in the Canadian expeditionary force. The number of applications is already far in excess of vacancies.

It takes two to make a garden: a man to do the digging and the seed buying, and a wife to tell him where to plant them.

THE VALUE OF CHEESE.

Greater Use of Daily Product Would Save Canada Millions.

Just a year ago Prof. H. H. Dean, of the Ontario Agricultural College, in an address before the dairymen of Ontario strongly urged a greater home consumption of cheese. He contended that by so doing not only would the cost of living be reduced but an additional market would be provided for our dairy products. He argued as follows:

"The food value of a pound of cheese is estimated to be equal to that of two pounds of average meat. Estimating the present meat consumption at 25 lbs. per capita (a low estimate), Canadians are consuming about 200,000,000 lbs. meat annually, at a cost of about $40,000,000. By a proper understanding of food values, we might save about $16,000,000 annually on this one item alone by substituting a part of the present meat ration for cheese. This would figure somewhat as follows: A cheese consumption of ten pounds per head would be about 80,000,000 lbs. This would take the place of about 160,000,000 lbs. meat, and still leave 40,000,000 lbs. meat for those who prefer corpse to cheese. The eighty million pounds of meat saved would cost about sixteen million dollars. The saving, by using cheese instead of so much meat would be sixteen million dollars annually. If a person were to go to the Finance Minister of Canada and tell him how to save sixteen million dollars annually for the people, such a person would be looked upon as a wizard or a fanatic and would probably get a 'soft job' with the Government—or be committed to a lunatic asylum—yet the figures show these astonishing results."

Prof. Dean's conclusions are certainly astonishing, but they would have been even more so if he had calculated on the actual meat consumption per capita, for, instead of twenty-five pounds statistics show it to be 175 pounds, while the consumption of cheese is estimated to be only three pounds.

Theoretically the substitution of cheese for meat works all right, yet doubtless, there were many heard the address or read a report of it who doubted its practicability. It seemed too good to be true. On a study of the British imports during the past two years, however, we see that it works practically as well as theoretically. During the year previous to the war 2,400,100,000 pounds of meat were imported while during the first twelve months of the war only 2,332,000,000 pounds were imported; a decrease of 68,100,000 lbs. R. H. Rew, Assistant-Secretary to the Board of Agriculture, says: "The large demands on imported supplies of meat for the British and French armies occasioned a distinct shortage for the civil population, but this was relieved by a reduced demand." Now, there must have been some substitute for these 215 million pounds of meat, and, on looking further we find that the imports of cheese during the same period increased by thirty-eight million pounds or about sixteen per cent. Thus it is quite evident that cheese has been taking the place of some of the meat.

The question then naturally comes up, why does not the Canadian consumer use more cheese? It is owing to the lack of knowledge regarding its economic value and how to prepare it in appetizing forms, such as meats are prepared. Prof. Harcourt in Bulletin 221 states: "Cheese is one of our most concentrated foods. More than one-fourth of its weight is protein, about one-third fats, and one-third water. It is not only valuable for the amount of protein, or muscle-forming material, and fat it contains, but, also because of the ease with which it can be kept and prepared for the table and for the variety of ways in which it may be served.—Family Herald and Weekly Star.

General Kissed Canadians.

The French military authorities, who have long admired the splendid gallantry of the Canadians, gave public proof of their appreciation a few days ago by decorating a number of officers and men with the Legion of Honor and Military Medal, says Philip Gibbs in the London Telegraph.

Canadian guards of honor, with two brass bands and pipers of Canadian Scots, were drawn up in a square in an old Flemish town opposite a French infantry group, generals and staff officers stood in advance of the men and the officers and non-commissioned officers who were to receive the decorations were in a separate place. It was strange that Canadian soldiers should be here to receive the kiss of the French general. He passed along their lines with his staff while the bands played the Marseillaise, and the general commanding the Canadian corps inspected the French troops. Then the tri-color was brought forward by a guard of honor and with the symbol of the spirit of France, unfurled in the grey old market place, the French general pinned the Legion of Honor and Military Medal to the breasts of the men marked out for honor, and saluted them with that kiss which France herself gives those who defend her soil. Canada will be proud of her soldiers who now wear the ribbons of French chivalry. They have won them by good and brave work on the field of honor.

For one of them, Captain George Taylor Richardson, of the Second Canadian Infantry battalion, the Cross of Chevalier of the Legion of Honor came too late except as a memorial of his gallantry, for he was killed on February 9.

Women's Emergency Corps.

The newly organized local branch of the Women's Emergency Corps in London, Ont., has decided to launch a campaign for 100 members. An effort will be made to have a local corps organized in every county in the first military district. Membership does not commit one to taking the place of a man at the front. This is provided for by registration.

HALTON'S PRIDE.

David Henderson Has Represented Riding at Ottawa Since 1888.

When the House of Commons had been burning half an hour I was on the Hill watching the scene, and found myself standing by the side of an old man in a fur coat and fur cap, who was gazing at the burning building as though an old friend were being taken from him, says Arthur Hawkes in The Toronto Star Weekly. He told me he had had a lucky escape from room sixteen, thanks to the help of some of the younger fellows, but he was in no mood to talk. A few minutes afterwards I met a group of members, whose first question was: "Have you heard anything of Davy?" It was a pleasure to tell them I had just left him—David Henderson, M. P. for Halton, and that he was as well as could be expected under the circumstances. They were thankful indeed for the news, for there were rumors around that the sacrifice in the fire was worse than it turned out to be.

Before seeing Mr. Henderson I had met Mr. Broder on the Hill, and he had told me that it was believed several members had been smothered. Among them it was feared was Mr. Henderson. The fear was peculiarly hard on Broder, for he and Henderson were deskmates in the front row on the Government. From memory I should say that they are the only septuagenarians in the House, except Sir Wilfrid Laurier. Mr. Henderson came here in 1888, eight years before Broder, one year before W. F. Maclean, and except Sir Wilfrid and Sir George Foster, I think he is the senior member of the House of Commons.

Mr. Henderson has had electioneering vicissitudes that are of no interest now. Elected in a general contest, unseated because his supporters were not as wise as they might have been, in and out once or twice, but firmly seated in 1900, he has been a fixture for sixteen years. A few years ago he was one of the handsomest men in public or private life. His side whiskers set off a face that might have belonged to the House of Peers. These days he shaves only his upper lip. He walks with shortened steps and slow, but his love of a quip is as pronounced as Broder's, though his philosophy is not as picturesque.

Nobody has written his name in Cabinet slates, either tentative or dream. He has never classed himself as a statesman. The Parliamentary Guide describes him as a general merchant of Acton, the place where Sir Donald Mann and the Rev. Dr. Albert Moore come from. He is a native of Halton, in which he and the Minister of Finance are entirely at one. There is an idea that the Hon. Davy may be succeeded by the Hon. Sir Thomas, but sometimes knights do not see all their hearts desire. It is supposed that Mr. Henderson could have gone to the Senate when the other native son of Halton went to the Cabinet, and Commons seats were at a premium. But Leeds offered what Halton did not cede, and so it has been left for the title—the only purely domestic peerage which a grateful Premier can confer—to be given in a more impressive way than it can ever be when a mere Senatorship has been handed out. A Senator is an honorable, but he is not a Privy Councillor.

EVOLUTION OF A WORD.

"Hypocrite" Was Once the Title of a Pantomime Actor.

Do you know what a hypocrite is? Why, he is a person who uses the church as a cloak to cover graft and greed and all manner of evildoing. At least that is what he was in the days of our fathers. More recently he has taken on another color, a different kind of cloak. He need not be a dissembler merely in the matter of religion. Hypocrisy may be practiced in friendship, in culture, in philanthropy. It goes a degree further even than that, for the hypocrite may deceive himself as well as his fellow man.

But how did the word, which is obviously a compound of "hypo," meaning "under," and the very familiar "critic" come to mean a person who deceives either himself or other people? This question suggests a second one: What is a critic?

The Greek verb from which the noun was derived meant originally to analyze, separate or judge. So the critic came to be one who had been set apart or judged worthy to plead a cause or present an argument. At one stage of his evolution the critic was a person who recited the works of the great dramatists. He was an actor—who did not act. The gestures were supplied by a man trained for that purpose, who went through a sort of pantomime while the real interpreter of the part gave the melodiously intoned words.

The pantomime artist was a "hypocrite" because he played an under part to the "critic." Later, when the speaking and acting were done by the same person, he was called the "hypocrite." Now any one who plays a part not his own is practicing hypocrisy.

An Ancient River.

In Long Island sound, not far from the north shore of the island, is clearly defined the channel of an ancient river. As shown by the United States coast survey it is a gorge, having a depth of about sixty feet below the general floor of the sound on either side of it. The gorge or channel was cut into the bedrock of gneiss, the erosion of which is exceedingly slow.

y-Liver Pills Are Used

St. John, N.B., writes: "I am glad to say I have used Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills with splendid results. I was greatly troubled with constipation and pimples on the face. I tried other remedies and used liquid arsenic three times a day for a year to get rid of the pimples but received no benefit. I began the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills and it was not very long before I was completely cured. The pills acted on the bowels, kidneys and liver and cleansed them of all impure matter. I think they cannot be beaten as a means of ridding a person of that tired aching due to weak kidneys, and I would not be without them in the house for any money."

"I look for improvement in the future. There are many ways in which he standard of the work could be raised."

When questioned about the Ottawa charges and the dealings he had with Colonel Allison, General Bertram said that he knew practically nothing about Mr. Allison, because he had only met him casually a couple of times. The opinion was ventured that "Sir Sam would make the fur fly" when he got on this side of the Atlantic.

As to the policy of the shell committee, General Bertram reiterated his statement that the procedure was to give Canadians the preference. Any outside contracts that had been awarded were given for reasons that would come out later. The General said he was much relieved to be rid of his burden.

He arrived in Toronto after his visit in Florida, and before coming here made a short stay at the home of his son. Mr. Henry Bertram, at Grimsby.

National Preparedness does not come from guns and dreadnoughts alone, but from men who are fit for the day's work. The making of men is a question of food and rational exercise. You can't build stalwart men out of an unbalanced "ration." Shredded Wheat Biscuit contains all the material needed for building the perfect human body. It is the whole wheat grain made digestible by steam-cooking, shredding and baking. One or more Shredded Wheat Biscuits for breakfast with milk or cream makes a man fit for work or play. Investigating the Khaki Scandal

Probes Being Made in Town of Manufacture — Bad Workmanship

PETERBORO', Ont., April 6.—The Davidson Commission reopened its inquiry into the Auburn Woolen Co.'s contracts here this morning. Mr. D. O'Connell representing the Auburn Co. and Capt. Thompson, K.C., representing the Militia Department.

Major R. P. Watt, of the 93rd Battalion, a former employe of the woolen company, was the first witness. His duties called him into the finishing room of the mill several times every day. He had noticed specks in the khaki cloth.

Government inspectors had been at the mills since the outbreak of the war, but there had been times when an inspector had not been present.

Frieze cloth had been shipped to the Militia Department and to Mark Yorkman & Co., Montreal, without inspection.

The British Government had ordered blankets and there was an inspector for the blankets. This inspector had never inspected khaki cloth so far as the witness knew.

George Baird, dyer at the Auburn Mills until last October, was given several samples of cloth and wool stock to examine. He stated that the wool stock had hard ends due to bad workmanship. Good frieze could be made of 45 per cent. wool stock and the balance of wool. Pure wool No. 1 and No. 7 samples were the poorest of the samples, in his opinion. He could not say positively without having them on a machine.

Miss Ethel Miller, bookkeeper at the Auburn Company, identified several invoices for khaki waste which was bought from the Smith Manufacturing Co., Toronto, at 31 cents a pound, and she had never heard of any complaint of the khaki waste sent to these mills.

WEAK, AILING CHILDREN

MADE WELL AND STRONG BY SIMPLE REMEDY.

Here is another letter that has just come to our attention, showing the power of Vinol to build up health and strength for weak, puny, ailing children.

W. A. Smith of Shanesville, Ohio, says:—"My little child was puny weak and ailing, could not rest at night and would not eat. I learned about Vinol and tried it, and within a week noticed an improvement. The child's appetite improved, it slept well, strength and health were soon built up. We think Vinol is excellent for weak, puny children."

Vinol is a delicious cod liver and iron tonic without oil, containing beef peptone, which creates an appetite, tones up the digestive organs, enriches the blood and creates strength, children love to take it.

"We ask all parents of weak, sickly, delicate children in this vicinity to try Vinol with the understanding that we will return your money if it fails to benefit your little ones. J. S. McKeown, Druggist, Belleville, Ont.

INSTANTLY RECOGNIZED MOTHER AND BROTHER

Memories of the Past Steadily Returning to Prof. Lavell

TORONTO, April, 6—Threads in broken fabric of the life of Prof. Cecil F. Lavell were picked up at the point where two years and five months ago they were dropped, when the professor yesterday visited his mother and brother in Brantford. His recognition of Mrs. Lavell and Rev. A. E. Lavell was instant and complete. He was able to converse with them upon incidents which had occurred in the family shortly before his disappearance from the streets of Hamilton.

"The results of my husband's visit yesterday are indeed encouraging," said Mrs. Lavell. "I am very happy to know that memories of the past are steadily returning to him. He is quite fatigued to-day from his exertions at the reunion."

DIED IN WATERTOWN

A Watertown, N.Y., paper has the following reference to the death of a lady who was for many years a resident of Belleville:

Mrs. Sarah Belcher Cardwell, widow of Gilbert Cardwell, died early Thursday morning at the home of her son, Thomas Belcher, 812 Cooper street, aged 77 years, following a week's illness due to pneumonia. She was taken ill last Tuesday morning.

She is survived by four sons and one daughter. George Belcher of Belleville, Ont., Joseph W. Thomas and John F. Belcher of this city, Mrs. Catherine Baker of Huntington, Ind., and also 16 grandchildren and twelve great-grandchildren.

Her husband died 15 years ago. She had been a resident of this city for the past 28 years and for the past two years she had made her home with her son. She was twice married, her first husband being Joseph Belcher. The marriage took place in England, where she was born and had lived prior to her marriage.

Dandruff Surely Destroys the Hair

Girls—If you want plenty of thick, beautiful, glossy, silky hair, do by all means get rid of dandruff, for it will starve your hair and ruin it if you don't.

It doesn't do much good to try to brush or wash it out. The only sure way to get rid of dandruff is to dissolve it, then you destroy it entirely. To do this, get about four ounces of ordinary liquid arvon; apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

By morning, most if not all, of your dandruff will be gone, and three or four more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every single sign and trace of it.

You will find, too, that all itching and digging of the scalp will stop, and your hair will look and feel a hundred times better. You can get liquid arvon at any drug store. It is inexpensive and four ounces is all you will need, no matter how much dandruff you have. This simple remedy never fails.

FOREST PROTECTION.

Sweden's Embargo on Pulp Gives Canada a Big Opportunity.

According to press reports, Sweden proposes to cut off the export of chemical pulp to Great Britain. Naturally, all eyes are immediately turned to Canada to supply the threatened deficiency.

The Commission of Conservation has just issued a report on "Forest Protection in Canada, 1913-1914," which is of particular interest in this connection. It contains much information respecting the work of the provincial forest services and of the Federal departments entrusted with the care of our forests.

Forest fire protection is assuming a large place in public attention. It is obvious that, if Canada is to continue as a wood-producing country, she must conserve her resources of this natural product. The report treats exhaustively of the fire protection of forest lands along railway rights-of-way. Through co-operative action, great headway has been made in securing the reduction of forest losses through fires traceable to railway causes.

The forests of British Columbia and on Dominion lands in the West have been dealt with in reports containing the results of special studies conducted by Dr. C. D. Howe and Mr. J. H. White. The Trent watershed in Ontario has also received especial attention, in a report of an investigation by Dr. C. D. Howe in the Townships of Burleigh and Methuen. This district is important in that, while of very little value as an agricultural area, it is being repeatedly over-run by forest fires and the little remaining merchantable timber destroyed. It is suggested that the area be placed under the control of the Dominion Forestry Branch for protection from fires and for reforestation.

Big Ships Must Stay Home.

A new order has been promulgated whereby Canadian steamers whose gross tonnage exceeds 500 ton are prohibited from proceeding on any voyage, excepting voyages between ports in Canada or between Canadian and United States ports, unless a license to do so has been granted.

Some months ago the British Government passed an order prohibiting vessels from engaging in voyages from one foreign port to another without permission.

Soldier's Last Wish Fulfilled.

The Book For Him.

There was a backward student at Balliol who for failure to pass an examination in Greek was "sent down." His mother went to see the master, Dr. Jowett, and explained to him what an excellent lad her son was. "It is a hard experience for him, this disgrace," said the old lady, "but he will have the consolation of religion, and there is always one book to which he can turn." Jowett eyed her a moment and then answered: "Yes, madam, the Greek grammar. Good morning."

HAULED THE STONES.

Veteran Ottawa Man Recalls Building of Parliament House.

The destruction of the Canadian House of Parliament has awakened recollections of its building, in the mind of Peter Redmond, a retired locomotive engineer, who saw King Edward lay its foundation stone in 1860.

When construction work was first started Mr. Redmond was employed as a fireman on the Ottawa and St. Lawrence railroad, and he was promoted to engineer a few days before the first material for the structure was hauled to Ottawa. One train crew was employed for three summers, hauling sandstone and quarry rock from Prescott, where it was landed from the steamers on the St. Lawrence river.

The train made a round trip each day. The first stone used in the building came from quarries located where the main part of the city of Cleveland, Ohio, now stands. It was shipped by water to Prescott, where it was loaded from the boats onto the railway cars by large cranes.

Mr. Redmond's train did nothing else during three summers but haul the stone. "It required two cars and sometimes three for each piece of stone that was moved to Ottawa," Mr. Redmond said yesterday. "The smallest stone that was hauled by the railroad weighed three tons, and the average weight was about five tons. We moved two stones which weighed nine tons each. I believe they were the largest that were put into the building.

"Owing to the excessive weight on the cars, which were much lighter than the steel cars now in use on the railroads, it was necessary to run our engines slowly. We seldom went over eighteen miles an hour, and as a rule the fastest time we made was fifteen miles."

No iron or steel was used in those days for the springs on the cars. Solid rubber was used, for the most part, and the cars were loaded so heavy that at the end of each trip new springs had to be put in most of the cars.

"Our train was given the right-of-way over all other trains. This was principally because of the heavy train we hauled. We were permitted to stop only in case of necessity. The necessity came frequently and was caused mostly by the excessive weight on the trucks, which resulted in many hot boxes.

"My train brought out the first shipment of rock and stone and stone cutters' tools. The first part of the building erected was a massive wall, over 500 feet long. It was on the end of this wall that the Prince of Wales laid the cornerstone. Thousands of people witnessed the laying of the stone, and I had an opportunity to shake hands with the Prince, as did many of the workmen.

"The wall, when first built, was a crude affair, but after the workmen finished polishing it, and fixing it up, it was one of the finest pieces of work of that kind that I have ever seen. It was five feet high and several inches in thickness."

"The Prince of Wales at that time was about twenty years old. He was a fine looking fellow, much better looking than his brother, the Duke of Edinborough, who visited Canada a year later.

"There were no big functions for the duke. He visited about the country for a few months and he went away without any great fuss being made about him. He was not a very good looking man. Many of the farmer boys were much better.

"A few years ago I saw Barney Riley, the Irish ski-rider from Bovey, Minn., who was born and raised here, and I thought that I was back in Ottawa at the time the duke was there. Barney and the duke were as much alike as any two men could be, in appearance, form, and looks."

Unhealthy to Oppose Canadians.

Mr. Philip Gibbs, Special Correspondent, writing from the British Field Headquarters, says:

"For a variety of reasons I fancy it must be nerve-racking to be on the opposite side of the way to the Canadians in Flanders. They are most quiet, they are most dangerous. They are not only inspired by a restless audacity, but they are cunning and so methodical that they will undertake what seems like a wild-cat adventure with certain death at the end of it and get back with hardly a scratch. They have brought the spirit of the trapper to the trenches, and they are very patient in marking down their prey.

"So it was in a recent 'cutting-out' raid, when a party of them, all volunteers, went out one night with the astounding intention of getting through the barbed wire outside one of the strongest German positions. For a small party to get back again from a trench full of Germans and machine-guns is not so easy as escaping from a jungle of man-eating tigers, and was not considered part of the program of war before the Canadians gave their exhibition. It was so successful that General Joffre has circulated an account of the Canadians' exploits as a model to the French army. After taking some prisoners and killing about 20 men, they came home again with only two casualties, one caused by accident. To men who know the conditions of trench warfare this exploit still seems fantastic and incredible. It was possible only because these Canadians had made cunning of more importance than courage itself, and had adapted old lessons of Red Indian warfare to these new conditions of modern fighting."

Deluged With Applications.

While recruiting is going on briskly throughout the country and the various units are being filled up in the regular way by applying to commanding officers of each battalion, the Department of Militia and Defence is deluged with direct applications for positions of paymaster, chaplain, or quartermaster in the Canadian expeditionary force. The number of applications is already far in excess of vacancies.

THE VALUE OF CHEESE.

Greater Use of Daily Product Would Save Canada Millions.

Just a year ago Prof. H. H. Dean, of the Ontario Agricultural College, in an address before the dairymen of Ontario strongly urged a greater home consumption of cheese. He contended that by so doing not only would the cost of living be reduced but an additional market would be provided for our dairy products. He argued as follows:

"The food value of a pound of cheese is estimated to be equal to that of two pounds of average meat. Estimating the present meat consumption at 25 lbs. per capita (a low estimate), Canadians are consuming about 200,000,000 lbs. meat annually, at a cost of about $40,000,000. By a proper understanding of food values, we might save about $16,000,000 annually on this one item alone by substituting a part of the present meat ration for cheese. This would figure somewhat as follows: A cheese consumption of ten pounds per head would be about 80,000,000 lbs. This would take the place of about 160,000,000 lbs. meat, and still leave 40,000,000 lbs. meat for those who prefer corpse to cheese. The eighty million pounds of meat saved would cost about sixteen million dollars. The saving, by using cheese instead of so much meat would be sixteen millio dollars annually. If a person were to go to the Finance Minister of Canada and tell him how to save sixteen million dollars annually for the people, such a person would be looked upon as a wizard or a fanatic and would probably get a 'soft' job' with the Government—or be committed to a lunatic asylum—yet the figures show these astonishing results."

Prof. Dean's conclusions are certainly astonishing, but they would have been even more so if he had calculated on the actual meat consumption per capita, for, instead of twenty-five pounds statistics show it to be 175 pounds, while the consumption of cheese is estimated to be only three pounds.

Theoretically the substitution of cheese for meat works all right, yet doubtless, there were many heard the address or read a report of it who doubted its practicability. It seemed too good to be true. On a study of the British imports during the past two years, however, we see that it works practically as well as theoretically. During the year previous to the war 2,400,100,000 pounds of meat were imported while during the first twelve months of the war only 2,332,000,000 pounds were imported; a decrease of 68,100,000 lbs. R. H. Rew, Assistant-Secretary to the Board of Agriculture, says: "The large demands on imported supplies of meat for the British and French armies occasioned a distinct shortage for the civil population, but this was relieved by a reduced demand." Now, there must have been some substitute for these 215 million pounds of meat, and, on looking further we find that the imports of cheese during the same period increased by thirty-eight million pounds or about sixteen per cent. Thus it is quite evident that cheese has been taking the place of some of the meat.

The question then naturally comes up, why does not the Canadian consumer use more cheese? It is owing to the lack of knowledge regarding its economic value and how to prepare it in appetizing forms, such as meats are prepared. Prof. Harcourt in Bulletin 221 states: "Cheese is one of our most concentrated foods. More than one-fourth of its weight is protein, about one-third fats, and one-third water. It is not only valuable for the amount of protein, or muscle-forming material, and fat it contains, but, also because of the ease with which it can be kept and prepared for the table and for the variety of ways in which it may be served.—Family Herald and Weekly Star.

General Kissed Canadians.

The French military authorities, who have long admired the splendid gallantry of the Canadians, gave public proof of their appreciation a few days ago by decorating a number of officers and men with the Legion of Honor and Military Medal, says Philip Gibbs in the London Telegraph.

Canadian guards of honor, with two brass bands and pipers of Canadian Scots, were drawn up in a square in an old Flemish town opposite a French infantry group, generals and staff officers stood in advance of the men and the officers and non-commissioned officers who were to receive the decorations were in a separate place. It was strange that Canadian soldiers should be here to receive the kiss of the French general. He passed along their lines with his staff while the bands played the Marseillaise, and the general commanding the Canadian corps inspected the French troops. Then the tri-color was brought forward by a guard of honor and with the symbol of the spirit of France, unfurled in the grey old market place, the French general pinned the Legion of Honor and Military Medal to the breasts of the men marked out for honor, and saluted them with that kiss which France herself gives those who defend her soil. Canada will be proud of her soldiers who now wear the ribbons of French chivalry. They have won them by good and brave work on the field of honor.

For one of them, Captain George Taylor Richardson, of the Second Canadian Infantry battalion, the Cross of Chevalier of the Legion of Honor came too late except as a memorial of his gallantry, for he was killed on February 9.

HALTON'S PRIDE.

When the House of Commons had been burning half an hour I was on the Hill watching the scene, and found myself standing by the side of an old man in a fur coat and fur cap, who was gazing at the burning building as though an old friend were being taken from him, says Arthur Hawkes in The Toronto Star Weekly. He told me he had had a lucky escape from room sixteen, thanks to the help of some of the younger fellows, but he was in no mood to talk. A few minutes afterwards I met a group of members, whose first question was: "Have you heard anything of Davy?" It was a pleasure to tell them I had just left him— David Henderson, M. P. for Halton, and that he was as well as could be expected under the circumstances. They were thankful indeed for the news, for there were rumors around that the sacrifice in the fire was worse than it turned out to be.

Before seeing Mr. Henderson I had met Mr. Broder on the Hill, and he had told me that it was believed several members had been smothered. Among them it was feared was Mr. Henderson. The fear was peculiarly hard on Broder, for he and Henderson were deskmates in the front row on the Government. From memory I should say that they are the only septuagenarians in the House, except Sir Wilfrid Laurier. Mr. Henderson came here in 1888, eight years before Broder, one year before W. F. Maclean, and except Sir Wilfrid and Sir George Foster, I think he is the senior member of the House of Commons.

Mr. Henderson has had electioneering vicissitudes that are of no interest now. Elected in a general contest, unseated because his supporters were not as wise as they might have been, in and out once or twice, but firmly seated in 1900, he has been a fixture for sixteen years. A few years ago he was one of the handsomest men in public or private life. His side whiskers set off a face that might have belonged to the House of Peers. These days he shaves only his upper lip. He walks with shortened steps and slow, but his love of a quip is as pronounced as Broder's, though his philosophy is not as picturesque.

Nobody has written his name in Cabinet slates, either tentative or dream. He has never classed himself as a statesman. The Parliamentary Guide describes him as a general merchant of Acton, the place where Sir Donald Mann and the Rev. Dr. Albert Moore come from. He is a native of Halton, in which he and the Minister of Finance are entirely at one. There is an idea that the Hon. Davy may be succeeded by the Hon. Sir Thomas, but sometimes knights do not see all their hearts desire. It is supposed that Mr. Henderson could have gone to the Senate when the other native son of Halton went to the Cabinet, and Commons seats were at a premium. But Leeds offered what Halton did not cede, and so it has been left for the title—the only purely domestic peerage which a grateful Premier can confer—to be given in a more impressive way than it can ever be when a mere Senatorship has been handed out. A Senator is an honorable, but he is not a Privy Councillor.

EVOLUTION OF A WORD.

"Hypocrite" Was Once the Title of a Pantomime Actor.

Do you know what a hypocrite is? Why, he is a person who uses the church as a cloak to cover graft and greed and all manner of evildoing. At least that is what he was in the days of our fathers. More recently he has taken on another color, a different kind of cloak. He need not be a dissembler merely in the matter of religion. Hypocrisy may be practiced in friendship, in culture, in philanthropy. It goes a degree further even than that, for the hypocrite may deceive himself as well as his fellow man.

But how did the word, which is obviously a compound of "hypo," meaning "under," and the very familiar "critic" come to mean a person who deceives either himself or other people? This question suggests a second one: What is a critic?

The Greek verb from which the noun was derived meant originally to analyze, separate or judge. So the critic came to be one who had been set apart or judged worthy to plead a cause or present an argument. At one stage of his evolution the critic was a person who recited the works of the great dramatists. He was an actor—who did not act. The gestures were supplied by a man trained for that purpose, who went through a sort of pantomime while the real interpreter of the part gave the melodiously intoned words.

The pantomime artist was a "hypocrite" because he played an under part to the "critic." Later, when the speaking and acting were done by the same person, he was called the "hypocrite." Now any one who plays a part not his own is practicing hypocrisy.

An Ancient River.

In Long Island sound, not far from the north shore of the island, is clearly defined the channel of an ancient river. As shown by the United States coast survey it is a gorge, having a depth of about sixty feet below the general floor of the sound on either side of it. The gorge or channel was cut into the bedrock of gneiss, the erosion of which is exceedingly slow.

SYNOPSIS OF COAL
MINING REGULATIONS.

Coal mining rights of the Dominion, in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Yukon Territories, the North-West Territories and in a portion of the Province of British Columbia, may be leased for a term of twenty-one years at an annual rental of $1 an acre. Not more than 2,560 acres will be leased to one applicant.

Applications for a lease must be made by the applicant in person to the Agent or Sub-Agent of the district in which the rights applied for are situated.

In surveyed territory the land must be described by sections or legal sub-divisions of sections and in unsurveyed territory the tract applied for shall be staked by the applicant himself.

Each application must be accompanied by a fee of $5 which will be refunded if the rights applied for are not available, but not otherwise. A royalty shall be paid on the merchantable output of the mine at the rate of five cents per ton.

The person operating the mine shall furnish the Agent with sworn returns accounting for the full quantity of merchantable coal mined and pay the royalty thereon. If the coal mining rights are not being operated, such returns should be furnished at least once a year.

The lease will include the coal mining rights only, but the lessee may be permitted to purchase whatever available surface rights may be considered necessary for the working of the mine at the rate of $10.00 an acre.

For full information application should be made to the Secretary of the Department of the Interior, Ottawa, or to any Agent or Sub-Agent of Dominion Lands.

W. W. CORY.
Deputy Minister of the Interior.

GIRL SOLDIER SENT HOME

A girl stowaway was found on one of the transports bringing Australian troops to the front, when she was two days out from Australia. The girl was dressed in khaki. She was sent back by another transport to Melborne. She is eighteen years of age. She disguised herself as a soldier, and managed to get on board a troopship outward bound from Sydney. Her explanation was an overpowering desire to see her brother, who is in Egypt on active service. Knowing that she would not be allowed to land in Egypt if her sex were known, she formed the plan of disguising herself as a soldier.

Lecture on Soil at Albert College

Prof. Harcourt, of Guelph Agricultural College, Speaks on Formation and Character of Soil

In connection with the classes and study at Albert College a new feature, the past winter season, has been introduced by the worthy Principal, Rev. Dr. Baker, in a weekly lecture to the students upon subjects that should prove beneficial. On February 17th H. Sirett, B.S.A., of Brighton, gave a lecture upon crops; on February 24th Mr. R. A. Duncan, B.S.A., district representative for Durham county, spoke on Fruit Growing; on March 2nd Mr M. Robertson, of Belleville, spoke on Dairying; March 9th Prof. G. E. Day, of the Agricultural College, Guelph, spoke on Live Stock; on March 16th Mr. S. C. Johnson, B.S.A., vegetable specialist of the Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto, spoke on Vegetable Growing; on March 23, Mr. G. B. Curran, B.S.A., for Lennox and Addington, spoke on Poultry, and on March 30th Mr. D. A. Macintosh, district representative of Hastings, gave an address relative to general farm work.

Yesterday afternoon the final lecture for this college term was given by Prof. Harcourt, of the Guelph Experimental Farm. Many students attended the lecture and were no doubt benefitted by the instruction imparted. Prof. Harcourt's topic was "Soil," and was handled in a manner which demonstrated that he was well posted on the subject. In his opening remarks the professor referred to the fact that soil was not, as some supposed, a dead earthy matter, but on the contrary was an extremely live matter. The formation of soil in its various forms was clearly explained by the speaker. In deep lakes the soil beneath the water was naturally of a clay formation, while on the shores where the water is shallow it was sand or gravel. There were various kinds of soil, all kinds of surface soil and all kinds of sub-soil. A soil which was composed largely of mineral matter was not worth cultivating, as it has not proper organic matter mixed with it. There were three important elements to be considered in regard to soil, namely: physical, biological and chemical, which were explicitly explained. A true clay soil has no stone in it. It is made of very fine particles and is also very tenacious. It is a fact that one cubic foot of clay spread out would cover the surface of one acre of land. A clay soil will naturally carry more water than any other kind of soil, because it is less porous. Air is needed in soil as well as other elements. We want well areated crops if we expect good crops, and for this reason the soil should be well cultivated. Air must be in the soil for productive purposes. It is as essential to have soil ventilated as it is necessary to ventilate a school room or our homes. By opening the soil up ventilation is secured. Some soil is drained for the purpose that it may be productive.

Our soils are teeming with life. There are all kinds of organisms at work in the soil. We have immense numbers of bacteria working in the soil. What is the food of these organisms? It is the ploughing in of manure and other material to make food for the soil. We must break the crust in order to secure proper ventilation.

Another main reason for cultivating is to secure an abundant supply of oxygen for the soil. Nitrogen, which is essential to the soil, is gathered from the air, and there is an abundant supply, being upwards of 70,000,000 lbs. over an acre of ground. Plant life could not thrive without nitrogen. As to chemicals, we have them in abundance in the soil. In one acre of land there are thousands of pounds of potash, which is an essential chemical for production. When a farmer cultivates the soil he causes the organic matters to decay, and do their part for production as intended by nature. There are a lot of chemical changes taking place in the soil. A well cultivated soil is rich in organic matter, and it is difficult to overestimate the value of organic matter. Some of our soils are becoming sour, and the reason is that the lime in the soil is being worked down instead of being worked up. Two things are necessary, i.e., organic acid must be formed from decaying matter, and lime must be procured to correct the acidity. This soil question is a large and varied subject. There are thousands of acres of land in this country that are not producing what they should for want of lime. A soil rich in lime is productive. We want lime applied to make it neutral and productive.

In the concluding portion of his address Prof. Harcourt spoke upon plant life and what soil was best adapted for different kinds of plants. Cereal crops were also referred to, and the different kinds of organic food they take in. We must know the soil and the character of the crop we are going to grow in order to have a good crop.

At the conclusion of the lecture the speaker was loudly applauded, and thanked by Rev. Dr. Baker.

"All Bosh—
Tea and Coffee
Dont Hurt Me"

says the cynic — but, we live and learn and at some time of life many tea or coffee drinkers wake up to the fact that the drug, "caffeine," in tea and coffee is "getting them."

Headache, nervousness, biliousness, heart flutter, insomnia, etc., are often signs that tea or coffee is getting in its work; and the growing knowledge of its true nature has led thousands of former tea or coffee drinkers to turn to

INSTANT POSTUM

This famous food-drink has a rich, snappy flavour, but is entirely free from caffeine and other harmful elements ever present in tea and coffee. It is made of whole wheat and a small portion of wholesome molasses, and permits Nature, unhampered, to carry on her work of daily re-building brain, nerves and muscle.

Postum comes in two forms: The original Postum Cereal must be boiled; Instant Postum requires no boiling—a level teaspoonful in a cup of hot water makes a delicious drink instantly. Both forms are equally delicious and the cost per cup is about the same.

Military Night at Belleville Lodge

Many Members of the Masonic Society Present—Banquet Followed Lodge Meeting

The regular meeting of the Belleville Lodge No. 123, A.F. and A.H. held last night was a memorable one and will not for some time be forgotten by those who attended. It was termed a khaki or military night owing to the fact that many brethren who are wearing the King's uniform were present. Not only were many members of the craft in the city present, but many who are members of other lodges.

After the business of the lodge had been completed the brethren retired to the banqueting hall, where a dainty spread was partaken of. This function was presided over by Wor. Bro. R. A. Backus, Worshipful Master of the Belleville Lodge, and he performed his duties in an able and affable manner. At the conclusion of the supper a toast list was carried, and the addresses given were much appreciated by all present. The toast list was as follows:

God Save the King. Grand Master and Grand Lodge of Canada—Proposed by V. W. Bro. A. R. Walker, and responded to by Rt. Wor. Bro. H. J. Clarke, Past D. D. G. M. Canada—Proposed by Wor. Bro. Rev. Dr. Blagrave, responded to by Very Wor. Bro. Mayor H. F. Ketcheson. C. G Smith and responded to by Wor Bro. H. W. Ackerman, W. M. of Eureka Lodge.

The toast to the Junior Warden was proposed.

At intervals, suitable solos were rendered by Wor. Bro. J. McIntosh and Bandsman F. Burke.

The orchestra of the 155th Battalion was in attendance, and rendered a number of selections in a manner that was most pleasing.

LOOKING FOR A SITE

Cobourg Sentinel-Star: Yesterday a representative from one of the largest manufacturing concerns in its line in Canada visited Cobourg with a view to establishing a plant here. A number of sites were looked over, including the plant of the Provincial Steel Co., on which he received an estimate of the cost to put it into first-class condition. He seemed favorably impressed with what was shown him, and will be back again shortly for a further interview with the Board of Trade, through whose endeavors he was brought here.

THE RING

WANTS WILLARD TO REFEREE AT TORONTO

CHICAGO, April 6.—Jess Willard was deluged to-day with a flock of offers, totalling $9,000 just for his appearance, either as a referee or an actor. The big fellow turned them down. "The wife is sick and I want to stay home for a while anyhow," said Jess.

Tom Ryan, of Toronto, offered Willard $1,500 to referee a fight.

Charles Murray, of Buffalo, and Walter Duffy, of Boston, went over that figure, just to have the champion show himself for half an hour for exhibition purposes. Toledo also made a fat offer.

Lou Derlicher, of New York, wired an offer of $2,000. He wanted Willard to referee a fight in Gotham.

PORKY FLYNN SHADED

NEW YORK, April 5.—The ringside referee to-day gave Charles Weinert a shade over Porky Flynn in their bout last night. Both men tumbled through the ropes near the close of the bout and Referee Haukop stopped it.

ZUNNER BEATEN

ALBANY, N.Y., April 6.—Walter Mohr, of Brooklyn, had the better of a vicious ten-round battle with Fighting Zunner, of Buffalo, here last night.

IN LINE FOR WILLARD

NEW YORK, April 6.—Fred Wenck, chairman of the State Athletic Commission, has announced that a contract has been filed in his office calling for Fred Fulton to meet Al Reich, Jim Coffey and Frank Moran over a period of nine weeks, on the road which he hopes will lead to a battle with Jess Willard for the heavyweight championship.

A syndicate headed by John J. Mack, the manager of boxers, has arranged for the bouts, and the first one with Reich has been set for April 28 at the Stadium A. C.

BOXING AT OTTAWA

OTTAWA, April 6.—The local sporting fraternity, which has been shedding tears over the loss of baseball this summer, can take off their hats and unbutton a few cheers. The boxing game will be resumed and a weekly show of first-class battlers staged at Park Royal during the summer.

The inaugural performance will be put on the first week in May if weather conditions are suitable. Billy Moorhouse, the Montreal promoter, will be in charge of the bouts and will provide some of the scrappers, while Charlie Huck of Syracuse, who has a magnificent string of clever boys in tow, will send several of his men along. Huck formerly managed Billy Allen when the Ottawa lad was in line for the featherweight crown a few years ago.

One sport that has been given a great impetus during the past six months is boxing.

MONTREAL SCORES

BOSTON, April 6.—One amateur champion, the 145-lb. class, went across the border this week when Eugene Brousseau, of Montreal, whom the judges regarded as one of the best boxers of the tournament, outpointed M. Stark, of New York.

Another Canadian, Dave Brown, of Toronto, was frustrated in his attempt to take the 125-lb. championship by the short jabs and right hand punches of Willie Morris, of New York.

Carlo Armstrong, New York, weighing only 161 pounds, took the heavyweight honors, while Patrick McCarthy, also of New York, slugged his way to the 175-lb. championship.

Thos. Murphy, Kansas City, won the 135-lb. finals by defeating Johnny Marto, Boston, and Thos Darcy, Boston, became the 108-lb. champion when he beat Isadore Wiesel, Providence.

LAST CONCERT BY 80th BATT. BAND AT GRIFFIN'S TO-NIGHT

A crowded house is sure to greet the Band of the 80th "Overseas" Battalion, C.E.F., at their concert tonight in Griffin's Opera House. Additional interest is lent to the occasion from the fact that the 80th is shortly to leave for the front, and patriotic citizens are sure to turn out in large numbers at the farewell performance of their band. With the exception of the famous Overture William Tell, which is being repeated by special request, an entirely new programme has been prepared, including some of the most popular band numbers.

The vocal part of the performance promises to be an outstanding feature nothing but praise for the finished work of Miss Gertrude and Miss Victoria Stares on the recent appearance together in Ottawa.

The sale of the tickets is proceeding steadily at Doyle's, and we are also informed by Lieut. Stares that there will be two hundred rush seats at a quarter each, which should give the younger portion of the community the opportunity of hearing this splendid band.

MISREPRESENTATION IS CHARGED

A young man named Charles Deline was last evening arrested in Belleville for an offence alleged to have been committed here in December last. The accused has been absent from the city, but upon returning was placed under arrest. He is charged with having on December 4th, 1915, obtained certain goods by misrepresentation from the Dominion Clothing House of this city; and on December 11th, 1915, of obtaining by false pretences a suit of clothes and a cap from Mr. Jonas Bargman of this city.

The accused was this morning brought up before Police Magistrate Masson and the charges read to him, but he made no election as to his trial. As the Crown was not prepared to proceed with the case Deline was remanded to jail for a week.

Women Bi-Lingual Fighters Convene

French-Canadians They Were Born French-Canadians They Will Die

OTTAWA, April 7.—A message of sympathy and support was brought to the French-Canadian women of Ottawa from the Province of Quebec at a big bi-lingual rally held this afternoon under the auspices of the French Canadian Educational Association.

Hundreds of women crowded the theatre to hear several speakers from Montreal who urged the women of the capital to keep up their battle against regulation 17.

Among those who addressed the meeting were Mrs. Madeline Huguenin, Montreal; Mrs. M. Davelny, Montreal; Mrs. E. Marchand, Ottawa; Miss Alida Seguin, Ottawa and Mrs. S. M. Genest, wife of the chairman of the Separate School Board.

"At the moment when we are fighting for our school rights," declared Mrs. Huguenin, "French and English together are fighting tyranny in Europe. It would be unjust to charge the whole Anglo-Saxon race with this persecution for which a few fanatics are responsible."

"Admirable mothers," exclaimed Miss Alida Seguin, "you will be the boast of the coming generation. French-Canadians we were born and French-Canadians we will die."

The rally is the first held by the women bi-lingual fighters, and will be followed by others.

Cripple Crept To Court's Bar

Legless Vagrant Sent to Prison for Six Months Term

MONTREAL, April 7.—Minus both legs, Ernest Cerutti, cripple shoemaker, who gave his address as 73 Desery street, walked on his hands from the prisoner's room at the Recorder's Court to the dock, where he hung on to the rail by his arms in an effort to hear what was said and in order that he might be identified as the man who was charged with being a vagrant. He is a powerful man in his arms, and is credited with the strength of two men. He was sent here from Three Rivers by his brother, and is alleged by Captain Murphy, of No. 11 station, to be an idler, although he has at times supported himself at his trade of shoemaker. The legless shoemaker was found guilty of being a vagrant with no visible means of support, and sentenced to serve a term of six months in jail and to pay a fine of $50 or serve another six months. He declined the offer of assistance tendered him by the dock officer, and, placing his hands on the floor, walked out of the dock to the prisoner's waiting room.

FIGHTING IN ARGONNE CONTINUES DESPERATE

Hand-to-Hand Conflicts With Grenades Forms Prominent Part of Battle—Germans Get a Footing South of Haucourt—Attacks by Enemy on Outposts Dispersed by Artillery

Canadian Press Special.

PARIS, April 8.—Afternoon statement—In the Argonne there has been fighting at Fille Morte, where we exploded two small mines with success. At Hill Number 285 we have occupied the southern side of the mine crater created by an explosion of a German mine. To the west of the Meuse the Germans last night renewed their attacks against our positions to the south and east of Haucourt. At this later point, in spite of repeated efforts the enemy found it impossible to dislodge us from our lines. We poured upon him murderous fire, which caused him heavy losses. To the south of Haucourt the Germans succeeded in winning a footing in two small works between Haucourt and Hill No. 287, which we had occupied.

To southeast of Bethincourt there has been a continuation of fighting with hand grenades in communicating trenches on the road between Bethincourt and Chattancourt, which resulted in some advantage to us.

To the east of the Meuse there has been an intermittent bombardment of our positions. An attack made by the enemy with hand grenades against one of our trenches north of Vaux fortress was repulsed.

In the Woevre district the night passed quietly.

In the Vosges reconnaissance by the enemy in an endeavor to occupy one of our small posts as Langenfeldkopa to the south of Sondernach, was dispersed by our artillery.

New York Girl Causes Sensation

Disappeared, Now Thought to Have Joined Soldier-Lover

NEW YORK, April 7.—An elopement may be the solution of the mystery of Alma Fuller Myers' disappearance, for her parents admitted to-day she not only had a love affair, but was apparently very much in love with Stanley Stranger, a British recruit now reported ill in Toronto.

On the theory that the twenty-year-old beauty of East Orange may have married the soldier, or have hurried to him in Toronto when she learned he was ill, the search for her was extended to that city to-day. Charles Myers, New York insurance broker, father of the missing girl, admitted the family had hopes something would develop in this new line of inquiry.

The disappearance of Miss Fuller has been featured by the New York newspapers the past few days as one somewhat similar to that of the Dorothy Arnold case.

Germans Repeat Cavel Murder

Belgian Girl Executed and Others Imprisoned

AMSTERDAM, April 7.—The assertion is made by the Echo Belge that Miss Gabrielle Petit, of Molenbeck, Belgium, has been put to death by Germans after trial by court-martial on a charge of treason. It is alleged she conducted an information bureau in the interest of Germany's enemies.

The newspaper also states that Louise De Bettignies, of Lille, has been sentenced to death, but that the sentence has been commuted to imprisonment for life.

Another woman, Marie Van Houtte, the newspaper says, has been sentenced to imprisonment for fifteen years.

AUSTRIAN TRANSPORT SUNK BY FRENCH SUB.

Canadian Press Special

PARIS, April 8.—It is officially announced today a French submarine has sunk an Austrian transport in the Adriatic.

Large Increase in Ocean Freight Rate

Grain Jumps From Four to Forty Cents, While Flour Increases Five Hundred Per Cent

Canadian Press Special

WASHINGTON, April 8—Letter written by Dr. Pratt, Chief of the Foreign and Domestic Bureau, to Chairman Alexander, of the House Merchant Marine Committee, states that since the beginning of the war the ocean freight rates on grain have advanced from four cents a bushel to forty cents, the rate on flour has increased five hundred per cent, and on provisions four hundred percent.

TIGHTENING OF EMBARGO BY CANADIAN PACIFIC

MONTREAL, April 7.—With reference to the C.P.R.'s embargo against the Canadian Government Railway officials the C. P. R. stated to-day: "Only eight cars were withdrawn from the accumulation of Canadian railway cars in the C.P.R. yards at St. Rosalie Junction on April 5th. The average for the past four days being seven and a half cars in spite of the fact that on March 25th G. R. Rutelius agreed with the C.P.R. to take sixty cars a day from that function. In order to help the Canadian Government railways the C.P.R. recently loaned twelve locomotives but the situation so far from being relieved has become so grave that the C. P. R. is considering the possibility of still further tightening the existing embargo on loaded cars at both Rosalie and St. John, and refusing all perishable freight to I. C. R. points.

The position to-day is that the C. P. R. has 625 cars of which it wishes the Canadian government railway to accept delivery.

PRO-GERMAN FINED

"There will be no justice here until Germany comes." This pro-German utterance was credited to George Strumer who in the Peterborough Police Court, pleaded not guilty to a charge of disorderly conduct. Strumer apparently objected to being placed under arrest by three police officers, all of whom swore that the accused refused to move on when requested by P. C. Smythe and incidentally used some very strong language. This Strumer denied likewise that the pro-German utterance that was credited to him. The accused said he was born in London, England, and was a "thorough Englishman." He has resided in Peterborough for upwards of thirty-eight years. He was fined $2.75.

GERMAN SUBS. MANNED BY BRITISH

Questionable Report Circulated That British Have Captured Subs

Canadian Press Special

LONDON, April 8.—Official statement issued here today: A statement has appeared in a Dutch newspaper to the effect that a captain of the Dutch mail boat has confirmed by an oath that he saw captured German submarines on the Thames under command of British officers. This is sheer invention.

BELATED SNOWFALL OF SEVEN INCHES

OTTAWA, April 7.—The belated snowfall of yesterday afternoon and evening, although it waited until April 6, broke the record that had been held now by the snowfall of the winter of 1907-08.

Seven inches of snow fell last night, making a total of 137 inches for the present winter, or pretty nearly 12 feet of the "beautiful." The previous record was 134 inches. Up to last night it has not been expected that the 1907-08 record would be reached, since most people thought "snowtime" was over.

While the snow last night came down literally in sheets, it yielded rapidly to the bright sunshine to-day. On the railway lines between Ottawa and Vars, the storm, which was local brought down quite a number of telegraph poles.

Hockey Star Killed in Action

Pte. Joseph H. Rogers, a well-known young hockey player of Peterboro and a member of the 21st Pattalion, has been killed in action at the front, the fatality occuring on March 16th. By hockey fans he will be at least remembered as a member of the Boston Exploits Club. His father, Gunner Jos. Rogers, enlisted a short time ago with the 52nd Battery, stationed at Kingston. A brother is employed in munition work in Quebec. His mother resides in Peterboro.

DOG TEAMS FOR USUAL LONG RACE

NOME, Alaska, April 7.—Dog teams "mushed" here yesterday in the first day's training for the ninth annual Alaskan marathon, to be run on April 11 over the snow trails from Nome to Candle and return, a distance of 412 miles. It is possible that six or seven dog teams will be entered. Scotty Allen, who drove the winners in 1911 and 1912, is not entered.

NEW CRAFT BUILDING

MORRISTOWN, N. Y.—April 7.—Men are interested in a new passenger boat now under construction at Alexandria Bay, which will cost about twelve thousand dollars. Where the new craft will ply has not been fully decided, but it is likely that a route will be taken which will include Brockville as a port of call.

Dutch Steamer Struck a Mine

Canadian Press Special

LONDON, Apr. 8—A Dutch steamer Rijndijk which was yesterday reported damaged off Scilly Islands, struck a mine, according to Lloyds, which today reports her now in harbor with holds full of water.

ATTACK TEN TIMES WITHIN SEVEN HOURS

Desperate Efforts of the Enemy to Capture Bethincourt Result in Complete Failure—Get Within Sixty Yards of First House When Three-Inch Guns Open on Them at Short Range

PARIS, April 8.—(Special) — A wounded artillery officer informed me to-day that the Germans are losing just as many men in their attempt to turn the Le Mort Homme position as they did to reach the fringe of the Douaumont plateau.

"The Wednesday battle," he said, "degenerated into a sheer massacre of some of the Kaiser's best troops. About 50,000 men, including the Fourteenth Hanoverians, whose flag is decorated with the Iron Cross, and the Second Bavarians, whose Honorary Colonel is Prince Rupprecht, hurled themselves against our Bethincourt and Haucourt salients.

"In point of numbers and ferocity of fighting this battle was the most important since that of March 7, when at Vaux we tore a gash in the German ranks which never can be repaired.

"Wednesday's onslaughts lasted seven hours, during which the Germans attacked ten times. They failed completely to take Bethincourt despite the fact that our few defenders had to submit to a continuous cross fire. Once they got within sixty yards of our first houses, when our three-inch guns suddenly opened on them at short range.

"I cannot recall what happened without a shudder. Within five minutes the whole attacking column bit the dust, and that was the last effort the enemy made against Bethincourt that day.

PORTION OF ST. ELOI TAKEN BY GERMANS

LONDON, April 8.—Special—The British official communication, issued last night, says:

"Yesterday at St. Eloi the enemy succeeded in regaining a portion of the ground we captured March 27. The fighting continues.

"Last night, after a very heavy bombardment, a small enemy raiding party entered one of our trenches north of the River Ancre, but was quickly driven out.

"Today there has been artillery activity about Souchez, Aix-Noulette St. Eloi and Ypres."

WHAT GERMANS REPORT

BERLIN, April 7.—The text of the official statement to-day follows:

"German troops, after careful preparation and tenacious fighting, conquered British crater positions south of St. Eloi, defended by Canadian troops."

Smuts' Troops Defeat Germans

Enemy Surrounded in Mountain Stronghold and Forced to Yield

LONDON, April 7.—Another success for the British in East Africa is reported by Lieut.-Gen. Jan. C. Smuts, commander of the British expedition operating against the Germans in the following despatch:

"As the result of a movement commenced on the afternoon of Monday, mounted troops, under Gen. Vanderventer, successfully surprised a German force with machine guns, stationed in a mountain stronghold in the Arusha region. This force was surrounded during the course of Tuesday and surrendered Thursday morning."

TWO GERMANS RECAPTURED

Escaped From Ellis Island by Swimming to Jersey

NEW YORK, April 8.—(Special.)—Johann Roudin and Hans Windels, the two Germans who escaped from Ellis Island last week by swimming to the Jersey shore and were recaptured, were ordered released to-day by the immigration authorities. They came to this country several weeks ago as stowaways on a Dutch ship, and were detained, as they could not be deported because of war conditions. Today, in appealing for release, they told a Board of Inquiry that, though German citizens, they were natives of Alsace and had fled to escape service in the German army.

DAVID MACLEAN DEAD

OTTAWA, April 8.—Special—David MacLaren, banker and capitalist, died here to-day after a lengthy illness. He was in his sixty-eighth year. Last year he retired from the Presidency of the Bank of Ottawa, but remained on the directorate.

Fifty Million Wanted at Once

Minister of Finance Presents a Supplementary Estimate For War Expedition

OTTAWA, April 8.—Special—At the opening of Parliament to-day Sir Thomas White, Minister of Finance, presented supplementary estimates to the amount, in one item, of $50,000,000. This is the first war vote of the session. The Minister explained that the amount was one-fifth of the war appropriation bill which had been introduced by Premier Borden, and it was desirable to vote the amount at once, as the money was needed for immediate military expenditure. The resolution was referred to Committee of Supply, Sir Wilfrid assenting.

WORRIED OVER WAR GERMAN GOES CRAZY

KINGSTON, April 8—(Special.)—Drinking heavily and worrying over the war Henry Pollex, a German, went suddenly insane and was locked up by the police. When brought before Magistrate Farrell he told a long story about men having plotted to hit him over the head with a bottle and shoot him. He has been employed on war munitions at the locomotive works.

CONFERENCE OF ENTENTE ALLIES ON QUESTION OF JOINT TARIFF

Canadian Press Special

PARIS, April 8.—A conference of the Entente Allies for discussion of economic and commercial questions will assemble in Paris on April 20th; It will be attended by many distinguished delegates, including a number of Cabinet ministers from various countries. The sessions will extend over four days. President Poincare will preside at the opening. The principal topic of discussion will be mutual exchange of commodities under a tariff system favorable to allied nations.

Premier Hughes of Australia, who will be a delegate, is expected to take an advanced position for a joint tariff system which will establish minimum rates among the allies and their colonies. Reasonable rates for neutral and strong discrimination against all dealings with hostile countries.

Woman Tells Harrowing Tales

Brutal Treatment by Germans of Women, Children and Old Men

CHATHAM, April 8.—(Special.)—A harrowing tale of brutality and oppression was unfolded to-day by Mrs. Victor Venlaven, a Belgian refugee, who, with two small children, joined her husband here to-day. The woman arrived by way of Detroit, and through an interpreter told of the treatment by German soldiers of women, children and old men in her home city, Termonde.

After the Germans occupied the city families were taken into fields and shot down like rabbits. German soldiers marching through the streets drove the bayonet through children and carried them along impaled on the blade. Parents were locked in their houses and at command of the German officers their children fired the houses. If they refused they were shot down.

French Canadian's Remarkable Delusions

LONDON, April 8.—Special—Remarkable delusions of a French-Canadian private were related during the trial at the Old Bailey to-day of Dominique Brunnet, who was sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment on a charge of misdemeanor. Expressing the conviction that the man was utterly mad and subject to homicidal mania, Maj. Calder declared that one of Brunet's delusions was that the King had appointed him chief medical officer of the British army, because he had invented a system of bringing the dead to life. The prisoner had admitted having been in a Paris prison for the criminally insane. He either escaped or was discharged from there, and although French born he joined the Canadians last August, being passed as fit for active service.

Examination of Ships Resented

TOKIO, April 8.—The frequent recurrence of detention and examination of Japanese merchant steamers by British converted cruisers in Indian and Chinese waters, especially the reported firing on the Nippon Yusen Kaisha liners, Chikuzen Maru and Miyazaki, Maru, has excited public opinion in Japan. The press and prominent naval officers denounce the reported action of the British warship as unlawful, and go even to the limit of calling it an insult to the national flag of Japan as well as a menace to Japanese shipping, involving losses to oversea trade.

It is reported that the government has requested Great Britain to explain the recent seizure of nine Hindu passengers from the Japanese steamship Tenyo Maru. The matter is one requiring delicate handling from Japan, because she is an actual ally of England and committed to a war for the defeat of Germany. Some newspapers interpret the action of the British feeling that Japan is not carrying on a sufficiently energetic campaign against enemy intrigue. At all events, it is believed here that Great Britain and Japan will settle the question in a manner satisfactory to both countries. England taking into consideration the resentment caused among the Japanese public.

Fanny Dickens.

Fanny, the sister of Charles Dickens, was one of the first students entered at the old Royal Academy of Music when it opened its doors at Tenterden street in 1823, and at that time the students lived at the academy, only going home for the week end. "Every Sunday," Dickens told Forster, "I was at the academy at 9 o'clock in the morning to fetch her (Fanny), and we walked back there together at night." And the Sunday itself the two spent—in the Marshalsea prison, where their father and mother then resided, owing to Mr. Dickens having "failed to propitiate his creditors." While her father was still in prison Fanny won a prize at the academy, and the future novelist, then engaged in pasting labels on blacking pots at 7 shillings a week, was present to see her receive it.—Westminster Gazette.

HUDSON HAS HIS EYE ON MOVIES

NEW YORK, April 7.—The exploit of Clarence Hudson, alias Ernest Schiller, in holding up the British steamship Matappo on the high seas last week, was not piracy, Hudson contended through counsel in federal proceedings here, but was an act of war which was acquiesced in by the captain and chief officer, who he declared joined him in a toast to the Emperor of Germany.

Hudson began to-day a legal battle to avoid being removed to Wilmington, Del., for trial in the federal court there on the charge of piracy, as requested by the United States attorney-general. His counsel demanded a full hearing and United States Commissioner Houghton held him in $25,000 bail for examination here on Saturday.

Unable to furnish the bond, Hudson went to the Tombs after offering to surrender the right to take moving pictures of himself to any company which would supply his bail.

DELIGHTFUL CONCERT BY 80TH BATTALION BAND

Bandmaster Stares and His Musicians Render Splendid Programme—Solos by Misses Gertrude and Victoria Stares Pleasing Features of the Entertainment

A delightful function! Such was the universal expression heard last night at the conclusion of the concert given at Griffin's Opera House by the the 80th Battalion Band under the capable direction of Lieut. H. A. Stares, Mus. Bach. To say that the Bandmaster has a fine band is but a mild expression, as all the members are artists without doubt. The leader, who has a thorough knowledge of music, is also intensely interested in it. He is truly sincere and conscientious in the task he has on hand. Not only in Belleville, but wherever the band has played there is nothing but praise, and the organization is certainly worthy of it. Last night's concert was termed the farewell entertainment of the band in Belleville, owing to the fact that the 80th Battalion will in the near future be en route overseas to do their bit for King and country. The programme presented was of such a variety as to bring out the musical talent of the organization in its truest sense. In addition to selections by the band, solos were given by Misses Gertrude and Victoria Stares, talented sisters of the Bandmaster. The latter had been heard in Belleville, having sang here at a previous concert given by the band, but Miss Gertrude was a stranger to a Belleville audience. Both young ladies have sweet voices, which have been well trained, and the selections given by them were such as demonstrated their abilities as soloists. Their reception was most cordial, and upon each appearance were compelled to respond to hearty encores.

The programme opened with an overture by the band entitled Mysora, which was beautifully rendered. For an encore "Washington Greys" was given.

Miss Gertrude Stares rendered a solo entitled "Love's Greeting," in a manner which captivated the audience. In this selection her beautiful sweet voice was heard to advantage. For an encore she sang "Annie Laurie.".

A cornet solo by Band-Sergt. Harold Cumming was most exquisitely executed, the selection giving the soloist a fine opportunity to display his ability as a cornetist. For an encore he played "O Dry Those Tears."

Miss Victoria Stares' clear and sweet soprano voice was heard to much advantage in a selection entitled "Sweetheart," and for an encore she sang "Do As I Do." and again being encored, a duet, "Glow Worm," was given by the two young ladies.

The next selection by the band was a grand fantasia, "Albion," and in this piece the following airs were introduced: "Blue Bells of Scotland," "Garryowen," "Charlie is my Darling," "Annie Laurie," "The British Grenadiers," "The Last Rose of Summer," "The Minstrel Boy," "Home Sweet Home," "The Campbells are Coming," "Tullochgorum," "God Save the King," "Rule Britannia." In this number the band, if possible, excelled itself, rendering it in a manner that completely captivated the audience. For an encore "Abide With Me," was played.

After a few minutes' intermission the band gave an item entitled "Carmen," which was delightfully given, and for an encore gave a comic selection, "Sliding Jim," which afforded the trombone section to "throw a few slurs," much to the delight of the audience.

Miss Gertrude Stares sang "One Fine Day," a selection which was gracefully and beautifully given. In response to a hearty encore she sang "Wake Up, Wake Up," a lively little song.

The "Sextette from Lucia" was next given by the band in a charming manner, and was a delight to all. The encore, "Who's Next?" was a selection that delighted the audience perhaps more than any other piece. It was most comical and amusing.

The last vocal number was given by Miss Victoria Stares, and was entitled "Spring," a beautiful selection, given in a captivating manner. For an encore she sang "Carissima."

The final selection by the band was without doubt the climax. It was the favorite overture "William Tell." This piece of music, which is well known to local music lovers, never gets tiresome, and last night all were delighted with the manner in which it was given by the band. It was exquisitely rendered, and the applause following was justly deserved.

The delightful programme concluded with the National Anthem.

During the programme Bandmaster Stares made a brief address, in which he stated that he desired to thank the citizens of Belleville for their kindness and patronage to the band. Of the members of the band some thirty-two were from Hamilton, and others from different parts of Ontario. He was sorry to be able to secure only one man in Belleville. They came here as strangers, but had been royally received and entertained. He and the members of the band appreciated the kindness bestowed upon them. Whilst here he and the members of the band worked hard and had endeavored to do their duty. They were not only musicians, but were out to play the game, and would drill and learn to handle the rifle in order, if possible, to assist in destroying our enemies. The band had endeavored to please the citizens in every way possible, and he was pleased that their efforts had not been in vain.

Stole Furnace From the Cellar

MONTREAL, April 7.—Michel Lasperance, the man who drove his rig to a house in the north end of the city and stole a furnace from the cellar, while the tenants were away, was sentenced to one month in jail this morning by Judge Lanctot. The stolen furnace was discovered in the rig. Lesperance, who removed it from the cellar, taking too fuch time to get it out of sight of the police, who helped him at his work and then arrested him.

MUSIC AND DRAMA

"POTASH AND PERLMUTTER"

For two seasons the theatre-goers of Belleville have been hearing and reading about "Potash and Perlmutter," the greatest success recorded in New York City within the memory of the oldest first-nighter, and now they are to enjoy for themselves the three-act comedy that has set two nations talking—for "Potash and Perlmutter" is as great a hit in England as it is in the United States. No play ever began its career under more remarkable conditions than this. The sketches, written by Montague Glass in the Saturday Evening Post had made Abe Potash and Morris Perlmutter known and beloved everywhere. Their virtues and their weaknesses, their joys and their sorrows, their failures and their triumphs had become classic, but the minute the suggestion was made that all this vast material might be dramatized the edict went forth that "it can't be done." The "premiere" is a matter of history now. Never before have the hearts of vast audiences gone out more completely to the heroes of a play. The success of "Potash and Perlmutter" was instantaneous, and from the opening night until the play was sent out on the road the Cohan Theatre was packed to the doors. That is the play that Mr. Woods will present at Griffin's Opera House next Tuesday night, for one night only.

THE ETERNAL CITY

A superb 8 part photo spectacle of Hall Caine's immortal novel and play, The Eternal City, featuring the talented dramatic star, Pauline Frederick, will be exhibited at Griffin's Opera House, next Wednesday and Thursday evenings. Produced amid the grandeur and beauty of modern Rome, this amazing photo spectacle marks a new era in dramatic picturization. For the first time in the history of motion pictures the Vatican Gardens, the Coliseum, St. Peter's, the Castle of St. Angelo's, and many other historic and impressive spots in the Imperial City, have been used for a screen production.

THE SPHINX

The popular American co-stars, Herbert Kelcey and Effie Shannon, appear at the Palace Theatre on Monday and Tuesday, matinee and night, in a lavish production of the great romantic drama, The Sphinx. This throbbing story of a boy's passion and a great woman's love is in 5 parts and is being offered in addition to a program of comedy and varied photoplays.

COMING ATTRACTIONS AT GRIFFIN'S OPERA HOUSE

Next Tuesday night, Potash and Perlmutter; Wednesday, April 19th, A Pair of Sixes; April 27th, 28th and 29th, The Birth of a Nation, special picture with symphony orchestra of 30; May 3rd and 4th, The Battle Cry of Peace, special picture and orchestra; Polly and Her Pals, musical comedy; Klaw and Erlanger production of "Pete"; Creatore's Band; Mutt and Jeff in College; Guy Bates Post in Omar the Tentmaker.

ARM-STAFF-SERGEANT T. B. INSLEY OF WORCESTER

The many friends of Private Ernest Insley, who left Belleville with the 29th, will be glad to know that recent letters report him as well, though serving with others in the trenches. It will also be interesting to learn that his father, Armourer-Staff-Sergeant T. B. Insley of 50 Boughton Street, St. John's, Worcester, England, is now home on sick leave. Staff Sergeant Insley belongs to the Nigerian Regiment of the West African Frontier Force. He is of high military repute, and has been entrusted with many missions of trust, calling for the exercise of the wide experience he has acquired.

He says that German West Africa, which since the present war broke out has been practically annexed by Great Britain, and believes that all the German territory, including the Cameroons, will eventually be annexed by Great Britain and France, whose troops have so signally defeated the Germans and practically cut off their supplies.

Self Poisoning by Food

The food which is taken to nourish the body and keep up vigor and strength becomes a poison to the system when digestion fails. You feel drowsy after meals, lose appetite, suffer from constipation, have pains in the bowels and through the body. Instead of being digested, the food ferments and gives rise to gas or wind on the stomach, which crowds about the heart, causing suffocating feelings and derangements of the heart's action.

Resort to aids to digestion cannot afford more than temporary relief, for the trouble is caused by torpid, sluggish action of the liver and bowels. These organs must be awakened so that they will filter the poisons from the blood and remove from the system the accumulating waste matter.

Here lies the cause of indigestion and dyspepsia, and neglect only leads to chronic and complicated derangements, which destroy all comfort and shorten life.

The ideal treatment for indigestion is Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, because they promptly and positively remove the cause of trouble. Acting directly and specifically on the liver, kidneys and bowels, they cleanse the system of all impurities, and their occasional use keeps these filtering and excretory organs regular and active. The blood is purified, pains and aches disappear, and such derangements as indigestion, constipation, biliousness, backach and kidney derangements are cured.

One pill a dose, 25 cents a box, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto. Do not be talked into accepting a substitute. Imitations disappoint.

GLORIA CANADIA.

Anthem.

By Alexandria H. Campbell (Mrs. Campbell-Smith, B.E., D.Sc.A.)

From ocean tide to ocean tide, Gloria Canadia,
Fling all they banners wide, Canadia, Canadia.
Lift up your hearts and sing, Gloria Canadia!
Let distant mountain echoes ring, Canadia, Canadia.
Ruler of land sea, guide Thou our destiny;
May our country ever be—Gloria Canadia the free.

Chorus:—
Gloria, Gloria, Gloria Canadia,
All hail the land of the maple tree!
Gloria, Gloria, Gloria Canadia,
Gloria Canadia the free.

Lead thou in noble thought, Gloria Canadia.
Stand where thy great hath wrought, Canadia, Canadia,
Deeds of intrinsic worth, Gloria Canadia.
Bless'd land upon this earth, Canadia, Canadia,
Great souls be found in thee; God guard thy destiny;
Good deeds thy portion be, Gloria Canadia, the free.
Chorus:—

Raise, raise your standard high, Gloria Canadia!
In thy defence thy sons would die, Canadia, Canadia.
For love of thee thy sons would live, Gloria Canadia,
The prize of life they freely give, Canadia, Canadia,
In peace, in strife, to thee, to thee. Peace by thy destiny!
Bless'd may our country be, Gloria Canadia, the free.
Chorus:—

SIR THOMAS WHITE ON ECONOMY.

"Since the inauguration of the European war the Canadian Government has exercised economy," declared Sir Thomas White in the House on Thursday. "The policy of the Government has been to carry on works under contract, and works which were indispensably necessary, and no others."

Mr. White also indicated the manner in which expenses had been reduced in each successive term since the outbreak of hostilities. "In the fiscal year ending March 31, 1914," he said, "the total expenditure of the Dominion amounted to about $187,000,000. In the fiscal year ended March 31, 1916, the expenditure, including a large amount of interest of war expenditure, amounted to $165,000,000, and the estimate of expenditure for the year 1916-17 was only $165,000,000." The Finance Minister pointed out, moreover, that the estimates for the year 1916-17 included some $37,000,000 for interest charges. He indicated that the interest on the public debt had increased, largely by reason of the war, from $13,000,000 in 1914 until the fiscal year just begun it would be $37,000,000. The expenditure for 1916-17, exclusive of war expenditure and charges on the public debt, would thus be only about $125,000,000. Sir Thomas White pointed out that the last estimates voted by the Laurier Government had amounted to $157,000,000. The estimated expenditure for 1916-17, therefore, although it included a much greater amount for interest on the public debt, was only $3,000,000 in excess of the expenditure of 1911-12. Sir Thomas showed that the expenditures of the Dominion on current account, on capital account, and for railway subsidies amounted in the fiscal year 1913-14 to $161,000,000; in 1914-15 to $157,000,000, and in 1915-16 to $141,000,000. There had thus been a reduction of more than twenty million dollars in the last two years.

Who could ask for a more explicit statement on the financial condition of the country? Even the wayfaring man, though a fool, need not err as he follows the above figures—all but the deliberately skeptical on the Opposition side of the House.

WHAT LAURIER NEVER DID.

Toronto News: At present the Oppositionists, from Sir Wilfrid down, are engaged in a bitter partisan attempt to persuade the country that Sir Robert Borden has refused an inquiry into the shell charges. Did Sir Wilfrid Laurier ever grant a judicial investigation into any of the numerous and well-founded charges against his own Administration. Did he ever place the reputation of his Government in the hands of two eminent Judges, one a life-long Liberal and the other a resolute foe of political wrongdoing? Was it ever in Sir Wilfrid's conception of statesmanship to suggest the appointment by his opponents of one of the two counsel to probe the charges against his own party? Did he ever permit any kind of an inquiry into the diversion of millions of dollars of public money during his regime to railways, contractors and party favorites? Did he not in fact systematically use a large and obedient Parliamentary majority to suppress investigation and avert publicity regarding suspicious transactions? Neither the Liberals in Parliament nor the Liberal press ever insisted that the lid should be removed as Conservatives in Parliament from Sir Robert Borden down and the Conservative press have done.

Montreal Star: The very fact that the German Chancellor thinks it worth while to pause in the midst of this murderous and thunderous world-war to deny officially that he has his eye on Canada, is significant and sinister. Why should he think of us at all? Who is talking about the future of Canada in Europe today? No one outside the German Foreign Office. There is not a statesman in Britain—there is not a man in all the Allied countries—who imagines for a moment that Germany will obtain in this war sufficient command of the seas to menace Canada. They are not worrying about us. But the German Chancellor is thinking of us so much and so seriously that he deems it timely and prudent to deny that he has our conquest in his mind. Men are often betrayed by what they deny—especially when they deny that of which they have never been accused.

There is not a boat that sails from Europe to New York, probably, that does not carry on its passenger list some man or women whose business it is to supply information concerning affairs in the United States to one of the belligerent powers. There are the men who come to make contracts, the men who come to find out how the contracts may be broken, and the men and women who come on a general scouting expedition. These genuine agents have the same desire for publicity as an escaping murderer. Had they not the ability to remain obscure and unnoticed they would not be sent. These are the real secret agents of the war. Little is heard about the agents of the Allies. Not one name comes to mind that has found its way into the newspapers. The less that is heard about these men the better they may be assumed to have discharged their duties, says The Mail and Empire.

Providence Journal: The lesson is clear. By being prepared for protection and effectual resistance, Switzerland and Holland have been able to escape the horrors of war and preserve their territory intact. Belgium, with thirty or forty thousand men instead of the hundreds of thousands that should have been available, is now a vast field of desolation, with merely a nominal existence as a nation and almost her whole territory under German control. "Preparedness" is not a mere catch-word or scare-word; it means something vital to national security.

Mail and Empire: It is one of Herr Rohrbach's hobbies to imagine Germany in control of the Suez Canal. He has dreamed about it, written reams about it, made long speeches about it. What he drives home as the central idea—that the Allies cannot quit without complete victory for their own vital welfare—holds perfectly true.

GLIMPSES INTO THE PAST

From The Intelligencer, April 8, 1868.

Hon. T. D. McGee was assassinated in Ottawa at 2 o'clock this morning. The assassin is still at large, a reward of $10,000 being offered for his arrest.

Orders have gone forward to French troops now occupying Rome to return. It is thought the evacuation will be complete in a few days.

One of the printers of the Napanee Standard, Mr. J. Briggs, met with a serious accident to his hand, one finger being amputated.

Current Comment

We do not believe the Canadian Government should assume responsibility for British buying in Canada or elsewhere.—Toronto News. Why should it?

Sir Wilfrid's contention that the Government of Canada ought to bring the Shell Committee under the investigation of the Parliament of Canada would not be made by any but a politician whose judgment has been unsettled by party eagerness.—Mail and Empire.

Hon. Dr. Pugsley called attention to a statement of the Acting Minister of Militia that Sir Sam Hughes left for England on June 3rd, 1915. According to Hansard, he stated further, the Minister endorsed the fuse contracts on June 19, or sixteen days after the Minister had departed. Just like Pugsley.

The United States Government, not being one of the Allies, has of course lent no money to the Belgian Government, explained Sir Edward Grey in the Commons. The people of the United States, however, have lent the Belgian people aid of a very material kind in a hundred ways, and are continuing the good work, which is perfectly legal and very welcome.

FARM AND GARDEN

CHEESE COMPANIES AND PAYMENTS FOR MILK.

The Menio District Ayrshire Breeders' Club, consisting of the counties of Northumberland, Durham, Hastings and Prince Edward, was the first Ayrshire Breeders' Club of any class organized under the Dominion Department of Agriculture. In these counties it is estimated there are now about two hundred farmers who are breeding pure-bred Ayrshire cattle. At a recent meeting of the association the question of cheese companies paying by test for milk in preference to the pooling system now generally practised was strongly endorsed by the club, and the opinion expressed that the cheese and dairy industry would be greatly benefitted if legislation to make this effective were generally adopted.

Women of Briton Work On Farms

Every County in England to be Organized to the Smallest Village

LONDON, April 7.—The appointment a fortnight ago by the Board of Agriculture of 10 women organizers, who have already started on their work of seeing that every county is organized to its smallest village, is already bearing fruit. The organizers' duties include seeing that village registers are opened and that both women and farmers are made acquainted with them. The fact that farm labor can be "diluted" by unskilled women is being realized — there are openings for both trained and untrained women—and the farmers are better pleased when women do not claim to do everything. There are still men to do the plowing, and walking a furrow is not a woman's work.

In many counties the local education authorities are giving instruction in light farm work and milking, and in some cases farmers are taking in the women as pupils. In Herefordshire, for instance, suitable women and girls are being taken on a farm for a course of six to eight weeks as milkers. A sum of money is allotted to them in the form of an exhibition or scholarship, and this covers the cost of instruction and provides 10s a week each for maintenance. The cowman gets 5s a week for the first pupil and 1s a week for every extra one. Similar arrangements are being made locally for training in the care of calves, pigs and poultry.

All over the country women are registering for farm work. They must not, however, be astonished or disappointed if they are not called up for a long time, as the local village women will be taken first. Already 15,000 women are at work under the new scheme, and the registered women are forming a big reserve army.

The Government armlet a red crown on a dark green ground, has been authorized, but is not yet available. It must not be confused with another armlet which is being issued. The Government badge will only be given after a definite period of proved service on the land, and is likely to be much prized.

Protection of Birds in Canada

Splendid Educational Work of the Canadian Society for the Protection of Birds

In past years, one of the greatest obstacles encountered in the effort to secure proper protection for the wild life of Canada has been the lack of strong, organized endeavour, independent of official connection. The work of the Canadian Society for the Protection of Birds, incorporated in 1915, promises, in large measure, to remedy this difficulty. The objects of this society, stated generally, are as follows:—

(a) To instruct the public regarding the importance of protecting bird life in the interests of the country by holding meetings, lectures and exhibitions.

(b) To publish and distribute literature relating to birds, and co-operate with the Federal and Provincial Governments and regularly organized natural history societies throughout Canada in this respect; also to acquire and maintain a library.

(c) To secure legislation in behalf of bird protection in addition to existing legislation and to assist in enforcing the same.

(d) To forward the study of migration and all other matters relating to the nature of birds.

From the foregoing it will be seen that the work of this society is mainly educational. It has already organized and undertaken a thorough-going campaign for the promotion of nature study in Canadian schools. The concentration of effort in this direction will, it is hoped, inculcate in the minds of the rising generation a deeper and fuller appreciation of the values, both material and sentimental, which attach to bird life than has characterized the Canadian people heretofore.

This is the wonderful SERIES 17 Studebaker SIX at $1450—the biggest VALUE that Canada has ever seen in 6-cylinder cars. And the most remarkable car ever "Made in Canada."

With its big 3⅞-inch bore x 5-inch stroke motor it develops FULL 50 horse power and has a most remarkable range of operation, throttling down in high so slow that a man can walk round the car while it is in motion—and picking up to 50 miles an hour in a flash.

It has plenty of room for SEVEN—and for SEVEN full-grown people, too. It has beauty of design and luxury of finish that no car at any price excels. It has a 122-inch wheelbase—tank in rear with Stewart Vacuum Feed—upholstery of the finest straight-grain, semi-glazed leather—DIVIDED and adjustable front seats overlapping, storm-proof windshield—and a score of other late refinements that make it not only the most up-to-date car on the market, but the GREATEST 6-cylinder value that has ever been offered in Canada at so LOW a price as $1450.

You know the quality that name of Studebaker and the GREAT Studebaker plants at Walkerville insure. You will find that you can not equal this SIX in POWER, size and quality unless you pay hundreds of dollars more. And we urge you to see it, ride in it, have it demonstrated before you decide on any car. Know what this splendid car offers.

SYNOPSIS OF COAL MINING REGULATIONS.

Coal mining rights of the Dominion, in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Yukon Territories, the North-West Territories and in a portion of the Province of British Columbia, may be leased for a term of twenty-one years at an annual rental of $1 an acre. Not more than 2,560 acres will be leased to one applicant.

Applications for a lease must be made by the applicant in person to the Agent or Sub-Agent of the district in which the rights applied for are situated.

In surveyed territory the land must be described by sections or legal subdivisions of sections and in un-surveyed territory the tract applied for shall be staked by the applicant himself.

Each application must be accompanied by a fee of $5 which will be refunded if the rights applied for are not available, but not otherwise. A royalty shall be paid on the merchantable output of the mine at the rate of five cents per ton.

The person operating the mine shall furnish the Agent with sworn returns accounting for the full quantity of merchantable coal mined and pay the royalty thereon. If the coal mining rights are not being operated, such returns should be furnished at least once a year.

The lease will include the coal mining rights only, but the lessee may be permitted to purchase whatever available surface rights may be considered necessary for the working of the mine at the rate of $10.00 an acre.

For full information application should be made to the Secretary of the Department of the Interior, Ottawa, or to any Agent or Sub-Agent of Dominion Lands.

W. W. CORY,
Deputy Minister of the Interior.

Stomach Trouble and Rheumatism Relieved By "Fruit-a-tives"

MR. L. LABRIE

594 Champlain St., Montreal.

"I have been restored to health by taking 'Fruit-a-tives'. For two years, I was a miserable sufferer from Rheumatism and Stomach Trouble. I became very weak, had frequent dizzy spells and when I took food, felt wretched and sleepy. I suffered from Rheumatism dreadfully, with pains in my back and joints and my hands swollen.

A friend advised me to try 'Fruit-a-tives' and from the outset, they did me good. After I had started the second box, I felt I was getting well and I persevered in the treatment. I can truthfully say that 'Fruit-a-tives' is the only medicine that helped me.

MAJOR MUTRIE KILLED

GUELPH, April 7.—(Special.)—Mrs. (Major.) Mutrie received word this morning that her husband, Major Mutrie, second in command of the 2nd Canadian Mounted Rifles, had been killed in action. Major Mutrie enlisted at Vernon, B.C., where he had resided for some years. He was born on a farm near Rockwood, and finished his education at Fergus High School. His wife, formerly Alice Tolton of Guelph, came here to stay with her parents while her husband was at the front. He leaves also four children, the eldest eight years of age. His father, Col. Mutrie of the 153rd (Wellington) Battalion, who, although seventy years of age, offered his services here, and is actively engaged in bringing the county battalion to full strength.

Spring Blood Is Watery Blood

HOW TO GET NEW HEALTH AND NEW STRENGTH AT THIS SEASON.

Spring ailments are not imaginary. Even the most robust find the winter months most trying to their health. Confinement indoors, often in overheated and nearly always badly ventilated rooms—in the home, the office, the shop and the school—taxes the vitality of even the strongest. The blood becomes thin and watery and is clogged with impurities. Some people have headaches and a feeling of langour. Others are low-spirited and nervous. Still others are troubled with disfiguring pimples and skin eruptions; while some get up in the morning feeling just as tired as when they went to bed. These are all spring symptoms that the blood is out of order and that a medicine is needed. Many people take purgative medicines in the spring. This is a serious mistake. You cannot cure yourself with a medicine that gallops through your system and leaves you weaker still. This is all that a purgative does. What you need to give you health and strength in the spring is a tonic medicine that will enrich the blood and soothe the jangled nerves. And the one always reliable tonic and blood purifier is Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. These Pills not only banish spring weakness but guard you against the more serious ailments that follow, such as anaemia, nervous debility, indigestion, rheumatism and other diseases due to bad blood. In proof of this Mrs. D. E. Hughes, Hazenmore, Sask., says: "About a year ago I was badly run down, my nerves were all unstrung, and I could not go up stairs without stopping to rest. As I was a long ways from a doctor I determined to take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and in the course of a few weeks I felt like a new person. As an all round restorative I can heartily recommend this medicine."

If you are ailing this spring you cannot afford, in your own interest, to overlook so valuable a medicine as Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

FUTURE OF DOMINION IN FARMERS' HANDS

Increased Agricultural Production Key to Economic Situation in Canada—Minister White Speaks—War Tax Measure is Once More Explained in Detail

OTTAWA, April 7.—Sir Thomas White found it necessary yesterday to explain his war tax measure once again. Although the Minister had more than once previously gone over the whole ground in detail, Liberal members seemed to think it desirable to indulge in another protracted debate on the measure, and it was held in committee for further consideration to-morrow. The Opposition, it was said, was marking time for some purpose of their own. During the debate Messrs. A. K. MacLean, of Halifax, and Mr. E. M. Macdonald harked back to their charges of extravagance on the part of the Government, and were answered by a careful statement by the Finance Minister..

Sir Thomas White pointed out that the total expenditure, aside from that for the war in the fiscal year 1915-16, was sixteen million dollars less than that of the previous year and twenty millions less than that of 1913-14. He also showed that the estimated expenditure for the coming financial year, including $37,000,000 for interest on the public debt, but not the principal of the war disbursements, would be only $160,000,000, as compared with $187,000,000 in the first year of the war and $157,000,000 in the last year of Liberal rule, when the interest on the public debt only reached $13,000,000. The Minister of Finance declared that the Government was still pursuing its policy of economy and of not undertaking new public works unless they were indispensably necessary. He affirmed that the country would be able to sustain the financial situation, and that he expected out of the estimated total expenditures to pay not only the ordinary expenses and the interest of the public debt, but also a portion of the capital and war expenditures of the Dominion. Increased agricultural production, he declared, was the key to the economic situation in Canada.

Bank Interest on Savings

Mr. L. A. Lapointe, St. James Division, Montreal, introduced a bill to amend the Bank Act by providing that chartered banks should pay interest at the rate of not less than four per cent. on savings deposits

Hon. William Pugsley drew attention to a reply given to a question in the House yesterday. In that answer it was stated that Sir Sam Hughes had left Canada for England on June 3, 1915, and had not returned until September 2. At the same time the contract between the Shell Committee and American Ammunition Co., for fuses had borne the ratification of the Minister of Militia, dated June 19, or 16 days after the Minister had left for Europe. Mr. Pugsley suggested that there might be some error in the answer to the question, and Hon. A. E. Kemp promised to make enquiries.

Second reading of the bill to levy a tax on business profits having been moved, Mr. A. K. MacLean, of Halifax, rose to discuss it. He suggested that the title of the bill should be "The Business War Profits Tax Act, 1916." He objected to the bill on the ground that it would not tax the wealthy. He also disapproved of the sections dealing with the profits of mining companies, saying that they had already led to the withdrawal of capital from Canada and would drive away more. Mr. MacLean also contended that the country should receive a larger share of the profits of companies engaged in the manufacture of munitions than 25 per cent. of the excess over seven per cent.

Increase on Apples.

The Halifax member then turned to the discussion of the increases in the customs duties on apples and fuel oil. He said they were unjust and that no good reason had been given in support of them. He asserted that the general increase made in the tariff last session had been a failure and should be repealed. It had not yielded any additional revenue, and it had acted practically as a prohibition of importation.

Mr. MacLean said that the people would not object to taxation for war purposes, but that they would be opposed to taxation which could be avoided by economy in public expenditures. He admitted that there had been a substantial reduction in expenditures on public works last year, but held that it had been insufficient. Many undertakings carried on last year might have been postponed, and two million dollars of the amount to be raised by the business tax might thus have been in the hands of the Government. He had observed that there had been increases in the salaries in the Civil Service. There did not, he thought, seem to be anything to justify an increase in the cost of administration under the head of Civil Government. He had noticed that the staff of the Militia Department had been considerably augmented, and that 200 persons were employed by the War Purchasing Commission. He was of opinion that these employes might have been supplied by the tranfer of employes from other departments which were less busy than before the war.

Post-Office Expenditures.

Mr. MacLean continued that substantial reductions might have been made in the staff of the Fisheries Service without injuring it, and he then turned to the Post-office Department. The increase in rural mail deliveries, the establishment of parcels post, and salary advances would account for only a million dollars of the three million dollar increase in post-office expenditures last year. It was urged that expenditures in the large city post-office were greater, but why should this be the case when the figures showed that post-office business in Quebec, Montreal and Toronto had grown appreciably?

Mr. E. M. Macdonald stated that if the financial position of the country were as represented, new rural mail routes had become a luxury and should not be established. The country was struggling to meet the necessities of the war with railway problems again looming up before it.

The member for Pictou had heard that the Canadian Northern Railway would this session be asking for additional financial aid. With such a possibility before it the Government should see that economy in the Post-office Department was a necessity. Mr. Macdonald dilated upon the theme of economy and pointed to the shortage of ocean tonnage for the transportation of Canadian goods across the ocean as a problem to be dealt with. He said that the estimates might well be revised in order that Parliament might provide funds for meeting war expenditure, for solving railway problems, and for meeting the need for shipping on the Atlantic.

Consideration for Farmers.

Captain J. H. Burnham, of West Peterboro, rose "to speak of the reckless extravagance of the language of the member for Pictou." The latter, he said, had been wearing away the weary hours in reckless vituperation of the Post-office Department, and had been denouncing extravagance with one breath and calling for it in the next. Captain Burnham declared that the farming community was entitled to more consideration than it had had in the past. He hoped that the Postmaster-General would not allow himself to be scared into the practice of false economy, in regard to the rural free mail delivery system.

"Since the beginning of the war the Government has exercised economy," said Sir Thomas White. The policy of the Government had been to carry on works under contract and works which were indispensibly necessary, and no others. He indicated the manner in which expenditures had been reduced in each successive term since the outbreak of hostilities. In the fiscal year ended March 31, 1914, the total expenditure of the Dominion amounted to about $187,000,000. In the fiscal year ended March 31, 1916, the expenditure, including a large amount of interest on war expenditure amounted to $165,000,000, and the estimate of expenditures for the year 1916-17 was only $160,000,000. The Finance Minister pointed out moreover, that the estimate for the year 1916-17 included some $37,000,000 for interest charges. He indicated that the interest on the public debt had increased largely, by reason of the war, from $13,000,00 in 1914 until in the fiscal year just begun it would be $37,000,000. The expenditure for 1916-17 exclusive of war expenditure and charges on the public debt would thus be only about $125,000,000.

Reduction in Last Two Years

Sir Thomas pointed out that the last estimates voted by the Laurier Government had amounted to $157,000,000. The estimated expenditure for 1916-17, therefore, although it included a much greater amount for interest on the public debt, was only $3,000,000 in excess of the expenditure of 1911-12. Sir Thomas showed that the expenditures of the Dominion, on current account, on capital account and for railway subsidies amounted in the fiscal year 1913-14 to $161,000,000, in 1914-15 to $157,000,000 and in 1915-16 to $141,000,000. There had thus been a reduction of more than twenty million dollars in the last two years.

Sir Thomas White said he had acted upon the principle that Canada should finance well in advance and should, as far as possible, avoid short-date loans. While the financial situation was serious the country was, he believed, well able to sustain it. He hoped, during the coming year, out of income to meet the $160,000,000 of ordinary expenditures, which included the interest on the National debt and also to pay a portion of the capital and war expenditures. Sir Thomas said that even at the risk of having the Immigration Department overmanned, for a short time, it would be a mistake to disband a staff which might soon be needed.

"The most important questions of this country for many years to come," he continued, "will be immigration, land settlement and increased agricultural production. Increased agricultural production is the key of the economic situation in Canada. It will solve the railway situation ultimately."

Burden Not on Farmers.

The Finance Minister said that Canada was not as heavily taxed as any other country engaged in the war. He dissented from Mr. MacLean's view that the tariff increase of last session had not produced revenue, pointing out that the revenue for the last fiscal year was $21,000,000 in excess of his estimate at the beginning of the period. He pointed out the difficulty in levying the tax that was proposed on manufacturers of munitions by pointing out that there might be discrimination between concerns producing war supplies and firms producing the raw materials for those war supplies. He held that the burden of taxation should not fall heavily upon the farmers who had been asked to increase their production, and that the imposition of an income tax would be trenching upon the field of the provinces. Moreover, he estimated that a Dominion income tax would produce only about $3,000,000, from which would have to be deducted the cost of administration.

As to the tax on mining companies, he asserted that mining men thought the measure, as amended to make allowance for the exhaustion of the mine, a fair one and he did not see how it would be possible to exempt from taxation mining companies which were paying large dividends.

Mr. E. W. Nesbitt, of North Oxford, said that mining men did not approve of the bill. They considered the exemption of seven per cent. of the profits of a mining company too small, even though allowance was made for depreciation.

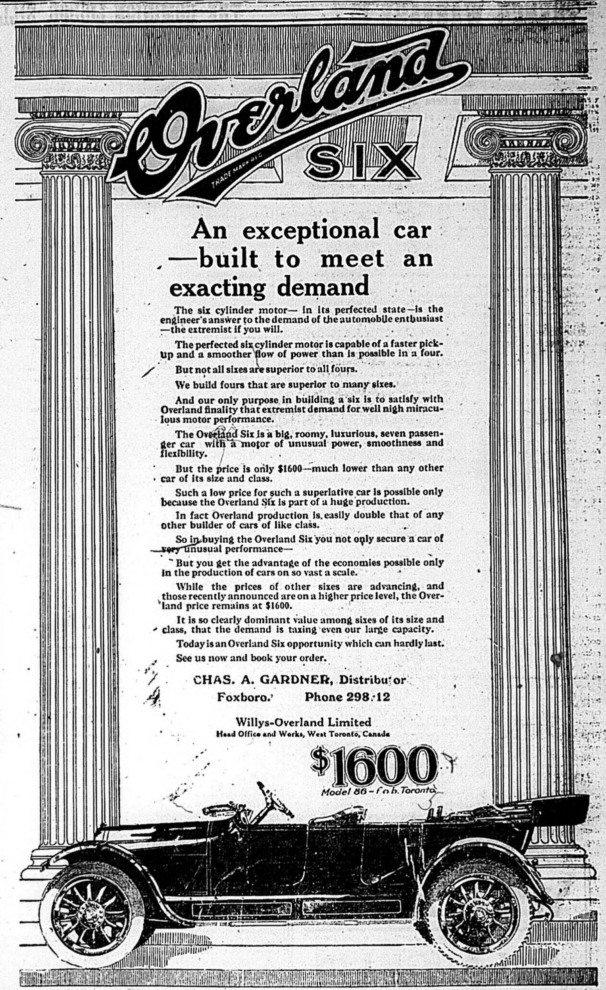
Tax Fire Insurance Companies.

Mr. J. H. Sinclair hoped there would be no patronage in the appointment of Boards of Referees under the Act, and favored posting up lists of firms and their taxation in different municipalities. The Finance Minister, however, thought such publicity would be undesirable.

Messrs. E. M. Macdonald and Hon. Geo. P. Graham said that fire insurance companies licensed in Canada were now taxed, while unlicensed companies were not. Why should this anomaly exist?

Sir Thomas replied that there was undoubtedly unlicensed foreign companies, such as Lloyds and others, carrying on business in Canada through agents whom they sent in, but as they had no offices they could not be taxed. It had been suggested that a tax should be imposed on the premiums of firms which insured with them. It must be remembered, however, that when in 1910 a bill had been introduced, with a similar purpose in view, it had been rejected by the Senate. The Finance Minister had therefore considered it unwise to introduce a controversial measure of the kind at this time, though the question might be taken up when the Insurance Act was under discussion.

The committee rose and reported progress, and the House adjourned.



An exceptional car —built to meet an exacting demand

The six cylinder motor— in its perfected state—is the engineer's answer to the demand of the automobile enthusiast —the extremist if you will.

The perfected six cylinder motor is capable of a faster pick-up and a smoother flow of power than is possible in a four.

But not all sixes are superior to all fours.

We build fours that are superior to many sixes.

And our only purpose in building a six is to satisfy with Overland finality that extremist demand for well nigh miraculous motor performance.

The Overland Six is a big, roomy, luxurious, seven passenger car with a motor of unusual power, smoothness and flexibility.

But the price is only $1600—much lower than any other car of its size and class.

Such a low price for such a superlative car is possible only because the Overland Six is part of a huge production.

In fact Overland production is easily double that of any other builder of cars of like class.

So in buying the Overland Six you not only secure a car of very unusual performance—

But you get the advantage of the economies possible only in the production of cars on so vast a scale.

While the prices of other sixes are advancing, and those recently announced are on a higher price level, the Overland price remains at $1600.

It is so clearly dominant value among sixes of its size and class, that the demand is taxing even our large capacity.

Today is an Overland Six opportunity which can hardly last.

Cowered In Beds While "Intruders" Stripped House

MONTREAL, April 6.—Two young men were brought to court this morning on charges of attempted burglary, their capture having been effected through the coolness of George Henri Linteau, who arrived at his home, 227 Amherst street, at 11 o'clock last night to find his family in bed, terrorized by two men who had entered the place and taken possession of the rooms and their contents. Linteau was surprised to come across the two intruders, whom, he alleged, were tearing things to pieces. Curtains, rugs and carpets were pulled from their places, he claimed, and piled in the centre of the room. Too afraid to move or make an outcry, the family, in their sleeping rooms, trembled with fear as the men under full lights, ransacked the place.

Mr. Linteau took in the situation at a glance, and instantly closed and locked the door. His two calls for the police were heard by Constable Nadeau, who climbed the stairs and entered the house with drawn revolver. With Mr. Linteau he escorted the two prisoners to the station, where they gave their names as Alphonse Lamoureau and Joseph Mantore, living at 532 Wolfe street. They appeared before Judge St. Cyr this morning charged with attempted burglary, pleaded not guilty, and were remanded for enquiry until the 11th.

KEEP CHILDREN WELL

To keep little ones well the bowels must be kept regular and the stomach sweet. Nine-tenths of childhood ailments are caused by derangements of these organs Baby's Own Tablets never fail to regulate the stomach and bowels—that is why thousands of mothers would give no other medicine to their little ones. Concerning them Mrs. Chas. A. Turner, Marie Joseph, N.B., writes:—"We have been using Baby's Own Tablets off and on for the past year and a half and have found nothing to equal them." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

TRENCH WARFARE IS SURPRISE OF CONFLICT

Value of Artillery Has Also Been Demonstrated—No Fear Regarding Preparedness at Sea—First Lord of the Admiralty Talks of War

NEW YORK, April 6.—The London correspondent of the Tribune cables under yesterday's date:

Arthur J. Balfour is first lord of the admiralty, head of the British navy, in the world. With it out of the way, Germany could win the war in a couple of months, take over the British Isles, hammer France into submission, and demand ruinous indemnities that would turn the world topsy-turvy.

It is Mr. Balfour's job to see that the navy remains very much in the way. Recently I had the pleasure of seeing and talking with him at his London home, only a stone's throw from the office of the admiralty. Fully six feet tall and broad in proportion, Mr. Balfour does not show his sixty-eight years. His manner is courteous and charming—if that adjective may be applied to a man. He is gentle and kind, without a trace of the brusqueness commonly associated with sea lords

I should say that war is the last game Mr. Balfour would select for enjoyment or reception. He is the antithesis of von Tirpitz.

Turning the conversation to the question of fighting, I asked::

"What has been the big surprise of this war—submarines, aerial warfare, speed or gun range?"

"None of these," replied Mr. Balfour. "In my opinion, trench warfare and the value of artillery. Students of the submarine have not been surprised; they had thought out and planned ways of increasing its efficiency and also defences against it. Students of air problems have not been surprised at the development of aerial warfare. The development of both these branches of fighting has been rapid, but along lines thought out before war.

"No one anticipated that trench warfare would play so great a part in modern fighting, and no one forecasted the tremendous importance of artillery. Even the Germans, with all their thoroughness in making preparations for this conflict, failed to foresee to what extent trench fighting would have to be relied upon, once the contending forces were of any way near equal strength.

"The Germans prepared for artillery fighting, but Verdun is a striking illustration of the fact that they have not reached perfection. They pounded and smashed fortifications which were considered impregnable. But still they have not been able to reach their objective."

We were standing at the entrance to the admiralty, and officers passing in and out saluted the first sea lord. In every case he returned the salute, but continued to talk on just as if he were in his study, with nothing to distract his attention. He is a member of the war council and as such knows every detail of the fighting on land and sea.

It struck me as highly interesting that this man, the head of Great Britain's navy, should consider that the surprises of the war come from the field rather than at sea. There was not a word of boastfulness from him about the British navy, but I came away with a feeling that he was not worried by any lack of preparation or efficiency in his department, and that if Germany decided finally to try conclusions on the sea. Britain would meet her without fear of the result.

Of British naval officers I have met there was not a single one who was a pessimist. There is a spirit of unrest among them, the unrest of a perfectly trained thoroughbred in paddock before the race, a keenness to get into action. At their head is Balfour, calm, courteous and serene. He makes you feel that he is master of the situation, strong and powerful as the British navy itself. You can give no higher praise to any war leader.

HE SANG AMID SHOT AND SHELL

Seldom has the "Marseillaise" been sung under more dramatic circumstances than on one occasion that Lucien Muratore tells about in connection with his own experiences at the front for France.

"One day, you see," said Muratore to a New York American reporter, "our commandant, General Carre de la Touche, paid us a visit. In his honor, and to cheer up the poor fellows in a neighboring hospital, I offered to give a song recital. I drew up a programme, and the General, with his staff, went to the hospital

"The German trenches were four miles away For weeks and weeks we had been pounding at one another. But we gave that concert. I got through my programme.

THE DOMINION LIQUOR BILL

OPERATIONS EXPLAINED AND PENALTY CLAUSES ADDED

The following is an interesting synopsis of the Liquor Bill introduced into the House of Commons by the Government to give effect to the fullest extent of any Prohibition Bill which any Province may enact. It is further evidence that when real and effective reforms are to be placed upon the statute book they have to emanate from a Conservative Government. Let the prohibitionists make a note of it.

When the Doherty Bill to prevent the importation of liquor into provinces where prohibitory legislation has been enacted, when such action is in contravention of the laws of the province, was being considered in committee Mr. J. H. Burnham stated that some prohibitionist papers, such as the Pioneer, of Toronto, seemed to be almost wilfully misrepresenting the import of the bill and its effectiveness. He was told by the Minister of Justice that any anti-liquor Act any province would pass would be perfectly protected by the bill.

To Mr. Hugh Guthrie, who objected that the provinces have now no power to prohibit the manufacture of liquor within their boundaries for export purposes and that there could not be prohibition in provinces where manufacture was allowed, Mr. Doherty stated that it was not correct to assert that the provinces could not prevent the manufacture of liquor within their borders. The Privy Council's decision in this matter had been that where there was evidence that the manufacture of liquor, within a province, even if ostensibly for export, contributed to the defeat of the province's prohibitory legislation, its Legislature could prevent such manufacture. If one man obtained a drink of liquor so manufactured further manufacture could be prohibited. As for preventing manufacture in Canada purely for export the Minister thought it would be time enough to protect the people of other countries when Canadian provinces had gone to the limit of their powers to protect their own people.

PROVINCES TO ACT FIRST.

To members who objected that Parliament should definitely settle the question of prohibiting all manufacture within prohibitionist provinces, even if an amendment to the British North America Act were necessary, the Minister stated that such action would scarcely be called for until the provinces had gone to the limit of the powers they already possessed.

The Minister emphasized the fact that no delegation of powers, to the provinces was proposed in the measure before the committee and went on to state when a province prohibited the consumption of liquor, the bill would prevent its importation altogether Mr. Doherty wondered why the provinces had always hitherto aimed at the traffic in liquor instead of directly prohibiting its use. He had not the slightest doubt it was within the power of the provinces to prohibit the use.

Hon. William Pugsley said he favored a measure of this kind, but asked the Minister whether he would not embody a law in his bill preventing the manufacture of intoxicating liquors where their use was prohibited.

Mr. Doherty was not prepared to assent immediately, and pointed out once more that the provinces already had such power where such manufacture was a detriment to their legislation.

AMENDMENTS TO BILL.

Mr. H. H. Stevens, of Vancouver, then proposed two amendments to the bill before the committee. The first was a clause providing that in addition to any other penalty prescribed for the violation of the Act anyone holding a license as distiller or brewer under the Inland Revenue Act, who sold or delivered intoxicating liquor in violation of the law of any province, should also be liable in addition to the suspension of his license for a first offence for not more than 3 months; for a second offence, for not more than six months; and for a third offence should forfeit his license altogether.

The second clause provided that everyone was guilty of an offence and liable to a penalty of not more than $200 fine or six months' imprisonment, or both, who sent or shipped in any public conveyance to any prohibited area any package containing intoxicating liquor which was not plainly labeled to show its contents, any such package addressed otherwise than to the actual consignee, or who being a common carrier knowingly received, carried or delivered any such package, or knowingly took delivery from any such common carrier of any such package.

SUGGESTED SCOTT ACT.

Hon. William Pugsley said this bill began just where the Scott Act had done and would be liable to the same long list of appeals since there were no provisions against appeals or in regard to the onus of proof.

He was informed by Mr. Doherty that the Minister did not share his apprehensions, but would welcome any safeguarding suggestions.

Mr. Pugsley suggested that if distillers were allowed to dispose of liquor to agents, ostensibly for export, there was danger of distribution within the province, and Mr. Lemieux added that if the House did not prohibit distilling it would be running counter to public sentiment, at least in Ontario, where total prohibition was desired.

To Mr. Pugsley the Minister of Justice said that if distillers' agents distributed liquor in a province in violation of the provincial laws they could be punished.

To Mr. Lemieux, he asserted that if a province desired total prohibition it merely had to say so through its Legislature. He believed that a province could make an effective law enacting that there should be no liquor within its boundaries.

"For export?" enquired Mr. Pugsley.

"If those words are added they may throw doubt upon it," replied the Minister of Justice.

Dr. Edwards, of Frontenac, contributed a well-reasoned speech to the debate. He understood that a province could prohibit the sale of liquor by any person—distiller, brewer, wholesaler, or retailer—to any other person within its territory. When it had done that the question arose what should be done to deal with persons who sent liquor into a province for use as a beverage. There the bill proposed by the Minister of Justice would become operative. It would prevent the importation of liquor into a province for beverage purposes. Dr. Edwards argued that no one who believed in the principle of local option could help believing in provincial prohibition.

He held that no one who believed in maintaining provincial rights could favor the adoption of a Federal law prohibiting the manufacture and importation of liquor contrary to the wishes of some provinces. The debate was then adjourned.

Before the House rose at midnight Sir George Foster announced that the debate upon Sir Wilfrid Laurier's motion calling for a parliamentary investigation of the operations of the Shell Committee would be resumed.

Family of Six Slayed by Madman

Husband, Wife and Three Children Shot Down—Buildings and Stock Burned

SASKATOON, April 7.—A whole family of six was wiped out in the Wakaw district last night when Prokup Manchure, his wife, brother-in-law, and three children, were murdered, the house burned over their dying bodies, their animals shot down and left to perish in burning buildings.

The crime was evidently committed by a madman in whose hands a rifle, found in the ruins, had been used with terrible effect.

The brother-in-law of the family had been shot a number of times, bullet holes in scalp and chest, being clearly indicated.

After the murder of the human inhabitants on the homestead, the miscreant evidently started in on the live stock of the farm, for three head of oxen were found outside the barn shot dead

Among the buildings burned were two granaries each containing 1,000 bushels of wheat, two barns, in one of which six head of horses perished in the fire, and in the other two head of cattle.

The mounted police have but little to work on. The family were noted throughout the district as being quiet and law abiding.

TOOK BOTTLE TO PARTY AND LANDED IN COURT

OTTAWA, April 7.—Damt Suleine was found guilty in police court this morning of two charges preferred against him as a result of a row with some fellow countrymen, whom he visited at 312 Rochester street on Wednesday evening. Before paying his visit he possessed himself of a bottle of liquor to promote sociability at the gathering.

The bottle of liquor was the primary cause of his mixup with the police, according to the evidence in the case. He and the rest of the people in the house got drunk and the row started. Suleine claims he was all alone against five others in the house.

However, he managed to hold his own pretty well against the odds and this morning he was charged with stabbing and slightly wounding Bill Sydon. He was found guilty of breaking a window valued at $3 by throwing a brick through it and for this offence he was fined $3 and $2 costs. He said that the window was broken when the others threw him through it.

Many Military Matters

Lieut.-Col. W. J. Brown, General Staff Officer, M. D., No. 3, is expected to return from his inspection trip through the district today.

Major J. Hamilton, A. D. of S. and T., has already recruited seventy bakers for immediate overseas service. These with any others that come in are using the Artillery park dormitories that part formerly in use by the "C" Battery R.C.H.A. draft. On Thursday two came from Guelph, two from Owen Sound and one from New Brunswick. Some applications from bakers in Regina have been received.

Lieut. Tregillis is an English Civil Engineer but was so anxious to get overseas that he enlisted as a private under Major J. Hamilton, A. D. of S. and T., who says that his splendid training could be used to better advantage if given a commission, and he secured a lieutenancy for him.

The next machine gun school at Kingston starts on April 10th and will be conducted for non-commissioned officers only. The present class is composed of officers.

The 80th Battalion, Belleville, have been under orders for the past week, which does not necessarily mean that they will proceed overseas immediately, although they are liable to be ordered to move at any moment. A unit is warned to be ready for moving usually some time before they actually entrain. Lieut.-Col. W. G. Ketcheson, O.C. 80th Belleville Battalion, Capt. F. Pilley, paymaster of the same unit, were in the city on Wednesday.—Kingston Whig.

There will be no unmarried men who are eligible for military service driving automobiles to Barriefield camp, if the authorities carry out their present intentions. Last year a host of men bought both cars and automobiles and made quite a collection of loose coin by driving officers and men between the city and the camp grounds. These men, instead of taking the money earned by civilians who have enlisted to fight in the King's Army, should be made to put on the uniform and do their bit for the national defenses, unless they can show good reason for not doing so.

A wounded Tommy was travelling back home by train from Somewhere in France. The train stopped, and he put out his bandaged head and saw a brand-new battalion of Territorials marching in fine array towards the front.

"Are you dahn-hearted?" the Tommy shouted from his carriage, and all the regiment, from the colonel down, shouted back a gay and thunderous "No!"

The Tommy, as he drew his bandaged head in again, yelled:

"Well, ye dashed soon will be when ye get in them trenches!"

Within the Military Circle

KINGSTON

The infantry at Barriefield, in addition to the 77th Battalion, will be composed of the 93rd Battalion, Peterborough; 109th, Lindsay; 130th, Perth; 136th, Port Hope; 139th, Cobourg; 146th, Kingston; 161th, Cornwall; 155th Belleville, and 156th, Brockville. The present strength of these units is now 8,981 men, and when recruited to strength will me 11,500. These battalions, with the departmental corps, staff, instructors, and all necessary for the conduct of the camp, will make a total of fully 12,000 men under canvass in Barriefield Camp for the summer.

It is the intention of Colonel Hemming, officer commanding the Third Military District, to bring together in the city some time next week all the officers commanding units in the district, for the purpose of a conference on military matters during the coming summer. Things in connection with Barriefield camp, and other matters of the vital importance will be under discussion, and the gathering will no doubt prove helpful and profitable.

There are many in the city who will be pleased to know that Capt. Watson, the first adjutant of the 80th Battalion, has been made senior major of that unit. Those who know him will agree that the promotion is a most deserving one and the new senior major possesses in a preeminent degree all the qualities essential for success in his new position.

Lt.-Col. Ketcheson and Captain Pilley, of the 80th Battalion, have returned to Belleville after a visit to the city, and a consultation with Colonel Hemming.

BELLEVILLE

Recruits are coming in steadily every day for the 155th Battalion.

Lieut. Nurse of the 155th Battalion Tweed, is in the city to spend Sunday with relatives.

Lieut. Webb of the 155th Battalion, was presented with a cane by the Madoc Platoon, before proceeding to Montreal, where he will take a course in bayonet fighting. The platoon also accompanied him to the station and gave him a royal send off.

The commanding officers of the battalions in the 3rd Division together with the adjutants and medical officers, have been called to attend a meeting at Kingston on Tuesday next.

Capt. Noble of the 155th, Picton, is in the city today visiting headquarters.

Three recruits of the 155th Battalion reported this morning from Bancroft.

Lieut. Schuster and twenty recruits of the 22th Foresters' Battalions, left for Quebec City at noon today. Fifteen more will leave Lindsay on Monday morning.

Why Shamed by Blotchy Skin

If you are a sufferer from Eczema or unsightly pimply skin, you know just what it means to have that humiliating, backward feeling about meeting strangers and oftentimes friends. Many a time you have looked into the mirror and wished that your skin would be like other people that you know, "without a blemish." This wish can be yours for the asking. If you will go to the druggist and procure a bottle of D. D. D., the greatest of all skin remedies, apply it according to directions in a short time your skin will be as soft as velvet.

Come in and ask for a bottle today on our money-back guarantee. Ask also about D.D.D. Soap, that keeps the skin healthy.

Today's Market Largely Attended

One of the largest markets held in Belleville for some time was that of today. Not only was the interior of the market building filled up with sellers of produce, but the market square contained a large number of vehicles. All through much produce was offered for sale, prices realized were good. Dairy butter sold at 30c. and 32c. per pound, whilst a few basket lots were bought at 29c. Fresh eggs were plentiful, and the ruling price was 20c. and 21c. per dozen. Dressed chicken sold from $1.25 to $1.75 per pair according to quality A few pairs of ducks were sold at $1.75 and $2 per pair. Potatoes dropped slightly in price, owing to the fact that the supply was quite abundant. They sold at $1.75 and $1.80 per bag. Apples were a rather scare article and sold readily at 30c. to 40c. per peck, according to variety. Whilst considerable quantity of maple syrup was offered for sale, the ruling price was 10 cents per qt., and $1.50 per gallon. A number of market gardners offered for sale lettuce, radishes, and green onions which found ready purchasers. Hay sold at from $17 to $18 per ton. Live porkers commanded an excellent price namely 11 per hundred weight, and small pigs sold at $10 and $11 per pair.

Pitcher Shocker To Be Retained

Bill Donovan Will Let Tipple Rather than Part with Ottawa Boy

DETROIT, April 7.—Until the fifteenth of May the Yanks have decided to carry an even dozen pitchers, a decision that Bill Donovan reached after having barely escaped the loss of Urban Shocker, the young Detroit twirler, who looks to be the goods.

It was a question of the retention of Shocker or Dan Tripple, but when Bill discovered to his amazement that his $750 pitcher—the cheapest buyer of the year—was in demand all over the circuit, he decided to hold them both. But it was not an easy job.

Dan Tipple cost the New York club $9,000 in cash, while Urban Shocker stands them a measly $750—incidentally the price that Ty Cobb brought. Just the same, the club found it possible to get waivers on the $9,000 Tipple, while two big league clubs made a dive for Shocker, already had their money up, and but for some rapid work over the telegraph wires at the last minute he would have been lost. The Cleveland club is still hollering about having been given the "work."

The capture of this young man Shocker is so well in keeping with the history of so many great stars, that he should make good just to keep up tradition. It seems that Harry McCormick the former Giant, while managing Chattanooga, recommended a pitcher on the Ottawa team in the Canadian League. As many clubs were after this fellow, the sleuthing had to be done mysteriously. Bobby Gilks, the scout, took a sneak up that way to have a look and make a report. He found others on the trail. His report read:

"There may be some trouble in getting the man you spoke of, but there is a much better pitcher on the same team. Put in a draft for Urban Shocker, right away."

In the draw New York got Shocker, and all they had to pay was $750. Two days ago they had to fight to keep a club from taking him away for $1,500. Right now they could sell him for more money than they could Dan Tipple, and Dan cost $9,000. But they are not going to let Shocker go. If it comes to a decision between the two Tipple will go first, the difference of $8,250 notwithstanding.

The Yanks staff of 12 men is the best they have ever had.

THE TURF

HORSES COMING TO CANADA

OTTAWA, April 7. According to announcement from Hot Springs, Kentucky will get most of the horses racing there, though for a time it looked as though Tijuana would get a goodly share, but the announcement by the management of that track that no horses will be taken off the cars by the association has caused many owners to change their plans. The half-mile tracks of Canada will benefit from this, and the influx of horses is expected this week.

GEORGE SMITH DOING WELL

Southern report says there is no question now that George Smith will be ready to meet his Kentucky Derby engagement, and will, by the time for the running of that race on Saturday, May 13, be as fit as his capable trainer can make him to go the route of one mile and a quarter.

There are some horsemen, regarded as good judges as any, who believe at times last season that George Smith was the equal of any two-year-old that raced in 1915. He started twelve times and won nine races. With the exception of Dodge, he won races on more tracks than any other Derby candidate.

From all accounts he has spread out and greatly developed since last season and has been pronounced as fine a specimen of a three-year-old in individuality as is now training. His stable companion, St. Isidore, also has a two-year-old, winning three of his six starts and finishing second on the three occasions when he failed to win.

HEARTS OF OAK TO JUMP.

The first Toronto-trained horses to go abroad with racing intent this season, and probably the only ones until after Woodbine, will be Hearts of Oak and Jim O., which have been shipped to Maryland. They will go to Havre de Grace, whose meeting follows Bowie, the latter having no steeplechase course. Both are in fine order, and Hearts of Oak active as a cat and bold as a lion, should prove a real champion through the field.

RITCHIE'S

"HOUSE CLEANING WEEK"

NEXT WEEK will see the inauguration of this SEMI-ANNUAL CLEAN-UP TIME—a time when all good housewives are enthused with the one idea—that of "Brightening up the Home Beautiful." With it comes the realization that one or more rooms in the home needs a new Rug—perhaps New Draperies or Window Shades.

This is just a gentle reminder that Spring 1916 finds us better prepared than at any former season to cater to your Home Furnishing needs. Advanced buying in this department has kept the prices down in most instances to their former level, and we kdow it will be a pleasant surprise to you when you learn at what a reasonable cost one can really "Brighten up the home" when they buy at Ritchie's. Read—

Oil Cloths and Linoleums

Showing the finest selection of new patterns we ever stocked. All the very best qualities and standard widths, priced very reasonable considering the present wholesale prices.

RUGS AT PRACTICALLY OLD PRICES

The low prices at which we have marked our Spring Rug stock were made possible only by purchasing many months ago, and today we are in a position to save prospective buyers at least 15 to 20 per cent. on their needs. Come in and see Tapestry Rugs—Sizes 1½ x 2 yds. to 4x 5 yds., priced $4.75 to $29.75.

Axminster Rugs—Sizes 2¼ x 3 yds. to 3½ x 4½ yds., priced at $25.00 to $57.00.

Wilton Rugs—Sizes 2¼ x 3 yds. to 3½ x 4½ yds., priced at $15.00 to $70.00.

Velvet Rugs—Sizes 2¼ x 3 yds. to 4 x 4½ yds., priced $19.50 to $50.00.

Wool and Union Rugs—priced from .... $4.25 to $25.00

Lace Curtains

One could not wish for a better or more complete stock of Lace Curtains than our spring showing represents. It embraces all the best qualities, all the newest patterns and every pair marked at a decidedly low price. The prices start in with a special value at 75c. a pair and range up to $16.00 a pair.

Curtain Materials

The foremost mills in America and Canada have contributed of their best to make this season's showing of Curtain Fabrics the finest we ever assembled. The range is varied and represents the most artistic designs for Spring, 1916. The assortment is well chosen, and no matter whether you need an inexpensive Chintz or Scrim fabric or an elaborate Silk or Velour material you are sure to find exactly what you most desire at a pleasing cost. Prices start in at 15c. yard and range up to $5.00 yard.

Curtain Stretchers

HOME-KISSED ADJUSTABLE SPRING PIN

Certainly the old Curtains must be stretched, and to do it properly a Curtain Stretcher must be used. Just now we are featuring a special value—adjustable brass pin Curtain Stretchers, easel back, solid Holmquist frames, marked very special at $2.50.

WINDOW SHADES Made to Order.

With the House Cleaning Season only a short time distant, we want to remind our customers that one of the special departments in our store is devoted to making Window Shades to Order. We carry a large stock of the standard cloths and trimmings, and no shade is too large or too small that it cannot be made in this department. Prices moderate. (3rd floor)

DRAPES Made to Order.

This season finds us splendidly ready to meet the ever increasing demand for made-to order Draperies. Mr. Poste, who has charge of this work, spent several weeks in the foremost workrooms in New York, thus placing us in a position to design and make the highest class of work at a price much less than is charged in larger cities. We make no charge for Mr. Poste's services, and we want you to take advantage of them.

Upholstering a Specialty.

Is there anywhere in your home chairs, settees or sofas that have become shabby? Perhaps the present coverings are badly faded. If so, let our upholsterer give you an estimate on the cost of re-upholstering them. Satisfaction assured at a reasonable price.

Canadians Prepare For After-War Trade

Organization in London of Dominion Exporters— Bright Outlook

LONDON, April 7.—At the Canadian exporters' luncheon held today under the chairmanship of Colonel Pelletier, Agent-General for Quebec, it was decided to put the organization on a sound footing by formally constituting a club at an early date. Mr. F. C. Armstrong reported the steps taken in the interest of Canadian trade on his recent visit to Canada, and urged the manufacturers of the Dominion to get ready now for the after-the-war trade.

The report on the Lyons Exhibition, presented by Secretary Bell, showed that great interest in Canada had been evoked among French merchants. The statement was made that the general feeling in France toward the United States has changed, with a resultant benefit to Canadian manufacturers. Mr. Armstrong leaves for Faenza (Faience), Italy, next week.

COUNSEL FOR SIR SAM

J. S. Ewart E. Lafleur, and Wallace Nesbitt to Act for Minister

OTTAWA, April 7—General Sir Sam Hughes will be represented before the Royal Commission appointed to investigate the Kyte charges as to fuse contracts, by three counsel of his own. It is learned that Mr. J. S. Ewart, of Ottawa; Eugene Lafleur, K.C., of Montreal, and Hon. Wallace Nesbitt, of Toronto, have been retained by the minister by cable, and will protect his interests during the investigation.

While the Government has not yet announced its counsel, the name of Mr. I. F. Hellmuth, K.C., of Toronto, is most prominently mentioned.

It is understood that Sir Wilfrid Laurier will recede from his stand against acceptance of the Royal Commission, and also name counsel, as he has been asked to do. Among the names mentioned in this connection is that of Mr. W. N. Tilley, K.C.

POTATO PATCHES BUY MOTOR AMBULANCE

TORONTO, April 7.—Ontario rural school children have accumulated the handsome sum of $1,766, to be used to buy a motor ambulance for the Canadian Red Cross Society for overseas. Noel Marshall was informed yesterday by C. F. Bailey, assistant Deputy Minister of Agriculture, that the money had been collected. The money was raised by means of small potato patches, which the country school children attended, as the result of appeals for money to be used for Red Cross purposes.

FIVE MEN STABBED IN A SHIRT-WAIST RAID

Albert Kaplan's Factory in New York Scene of Desperate Fight—Owner Himself a Victim—14 Others, Mostly Girls, Were Injured as Sequel to Discharging Strikers Few Weeks Back

NEW YORK, April 6.—Five men were stabbed and fourteen other persons, five of them girls, were otherwise injured by a band of alleged shirt-waist strikers in a raid on the Albert Kaplan shirt-waist factory, Flushing Avenue, Brooklyn, late this afternoon. The five men, all of whom were seriously hurt, were removed to St. Catherine's Hospital, after the raiders had made a spectacular flight down the rear fire escape of the building. Three ambulance surgeons worked for three hours attending the injured men

The raid, according to the police was inspired by men formerly employed by Mr. Kaplan and who were discharged following the general walkout in the needle trades weeks ago Late this afternoon twenty of these men walked into the office of the factory and began a heated argument with Mr. Kaplan. According to the story told by him to the police, the leader of the band was Carmelo Trovno, 24 years old, a former employee, whose place, like those of his followers, had been taken by other workers.

Several men employed by Mr. Kaplan, hearing the argument, gathered about the office door and their arrival was the signal, it was said, that began the fighting. The raiders, drawing knives, first stabbed Mr. Kaplan in the chest, and then charged the crowd, which in the meantime had provided itself with chairs and other missiles available for fighting. In the general scrap that followed girls were knocked and kicked about and flying weapons filled the room. The raiders, by a vigorous use of their knives, forced their way toward the fire escape at the rear of the factory, where they were halted for some minutes by the men who had gone to Mr. Kaplan's aid, and who tried hard to capture the raiders.

The surgeons and police found Mr. Kaplan bleeding from a knife thrust in the chest and from other hurts. The cut was not a deep one, but it was serious enough to have him removed to the hospital The other four men were also slashed about the chest and face.

MR. CARVELL RETRACTS HIS BASELESS CHARGES

Not Justified in His References to Comox-Atlin's Member, He Admits—Complete Withdrawal—Enquiry Into Victoria, B.C., Harbor Dredging Case is Continued

OTTAWA, April 7—The public withdrawal by Mr. F. B. Carvell, of Carleton, of references made to Mr. H. S. Clements, Conservative member for Comox-Atlin, in the Public Accounts Committee last week was a feature of yesterday's session of that body. On the occasion in question Mr. Carvell elicited from G. E. Mallory, superintendent for the sub-contractor in the dredging of Victoria, B.C., harbor, a statement which left the impression that $1,500 had been paid by sub-contractor Macdonald to Mr. Clements in connection with the contract. The witness said, further, that both Messrs. G. H. Bernard and R. F. Green, M.P.'s had asked him to keep this matter quiet, a statement which met with immediate denial from these gentlemen, while Mr. Clements denied the main allegation very emphatically in the House the same day.

"I want to state now," said Mr. Carvell, "that I do not think I was justified in these references to Mr. Clements I do not think the proceedings of this committee should be made any more unpleasant than is necessary, but I was convinced that an organized attempt was being made to block this enquiry."

Further evidence was taken in the dredging case from Ulric Valiquette, engineer of the Public Works Department, who had reported everything all right at Victoria last summer, after being sent out by the Minister of Public Works to investigate the classification of material returned by the contractors and for which they were being paid.

Assistant Deputy-Minister Arthur St. Laurent had, later, been sent out on the same mission, and had found that there had been improper classification of material, as a result of which the contractors had been overpaid. Mr. Valiquette this morning explained his report by the statement that Mr. MacLachlan, the resident engineer, had deceived him.

The witness was asked why letters dealing with this contract, which were written to the Public Works Department, were put on the private rather than official files. He did not know. He was asked why he had not accepted the proposal of Mr. G. H. Barnard, M.P., to send down a diver to examine the nature of the material which had to be dredged and stated he had thought it a useless proceeding, though he had afterwards changed his opinion.

Mr. G. W. Kyte observed it was perfectly clear the witness had been "gold-bricked" by MacLachlan

The witness then gave evidence that the contractors on the work and MacLachlan, the engineer, had given him the impression that Mallory, the engineer who first made the charges as to improper classification, was a sorehead. He also claimed that Mr. Barnard, M.P., had contributed to that impression, although he admitted that the member had impressed upon him his desire for a full investigation. In extenuation for the cursoriness of his investigation the witness said that Mr. H. S. Stevens, the member for Vancouver, had assured him the Minister of Public Works was himself having an investigation made into the matter.

The committee before it concluded decided to take steps to secure Col. J. Wesley Allison's attendance when he returns to Ottawa.

NOT A MURMUR OF DISSENT CAN BE HEARD IN GREAT BRITAIN OVER NEW BUDGET

Sir George Paish States That Chancellor McKenna's New Finance Bill is a Great Piece of Work—So Long as British Can Borrow Money in the Country They Can Carry on The War Indefinitely

LONDON, April 7—By Sir George Paish, Editor of The London Statistic — "Chancellor McKenna's new budget is a great piece of work. Its best point is that it follows the opinion of the country, neither anticipating nor trying to lead it. There is not a murmur of dissent from one end of Great Britain to the other.

"It is also a tribute to the country's financial stability, making every present possible provision for repayment of the country's debt. It proves that so long as we borrow here and not abroad, Great Britain will be able to continue the war indefinitely, even should it prove more drawn out than is anticipated.

"The amount of the new budget sounds tremendous, but we must not be frightened by figures in such times as these. It is a matter of common knowledge that a nation's income naturally rises during war times; ours did enormously during the Napoleonic wars. Prices rise and wages follow suit, with a consequent ability to pay increased taxation.

Will Not Be Burdensome

"I do not believe this budget will prove more burdensome to the great majority than did the old $1,000,000,000 budget. Beyond the fact that we are creating a class which later will derive large incomes from war loans, we will be able easily to maintain the war expenditure so long as the money is supplied by our own people. The chief effect will be that we will have to increase our standards of production afterwards, which we will be able to do at the utmost benefit to ourselves.

"The Chancellor's budget speech indicated two welcome items of news. First, our expenditure of $25,000,000 daily, inclusive of advances to our Allies and Dominions, bringing our net expenditure down under $20,000,000 daily, is contrary to the idea Premier Asquith gave when moving to vote a credit. Secondly, there are great signs of economy everywhere, the War Office especially seeming to have gained a grip on the situation, and making all purchases and expenditures on a far more economical basis.

Duke Specially Interested In Irish Rangers

Reviewed Troops in City Yesterday and Expressed Admiration for Appearance of Men

MONTREAL, April 7.—It was a very fine body of troops which were inspected at Windsor station yesterday afternoon, by His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught. The tall forms and sturdy physiques of the men drew many compliments from the crowds which thronged the streets.

The unit in question was the 51st Battalion from Edmonton, and its appearance is fully equal to that of the other splendid fighting force which have previously been sent from Western Canada. The battalion, which was on its way east, was halted here for a couple of hours in the afternoon and the men lined up on No. 1 and 2 platforms of the station; the men with relatives in Montreal being excused from the inspection.

The Duke arrived at 2.30, accompanied by Brig.-Gen. Wilson, and walked slowly along the lines. Then he called the officers out and briefly addressed them, expressing the hope that they would maintain the reputation already made by Canadian troops at the front.

In the meantime the 199th Battalion Irish-Canadian Rangers had been marched from the armory, on Stanley street, to the Craig street drill hall, which was used instead of the Champ de Mars, because of the sloppy condition of the concrete. The new battalion, as yet only 250 strong, was drawn up on the east side of the drill hall, and at 3.30 His Royal Highness arrived and thoroughly inspected the men, who made a most excellent showing. He then addressed the battalion and told them that he felt a particular interest in Irish troops, since he was himself honorary colonel of the London Irish. He said that he was greatly pleased with their appearance, and felt confident that the battalion was going to be a very good one when finally completed.

After the inspection, Lt.-Col. Tribey led his men out and down Craig street, their smartness in marching winning many compliments from the crowds outside.

TURKS CANNOT ATTACK THE SUEZ CANAL

New Form of Trench Which Resists Pressure of Driven Sand—Desert is Conquered—Elaborate Preparations Made by British Against Any Invasion

LONDON, April 7.—An idea of the difficulties attendant on a Turkish attack on the Suez Canal is given by a correspondent in the Times today. Despite the elaborate preparations the British have made to repel any such expedition the chief obstacle to be faced by an attacking Turkish army is a 100-mile waste of desert land which they must cross before they can engage the enemy.

The correspondent says:

"Prudence prompted our command to construct numerous light railways on the eastern side of the canal and to lay an elaborate system of pipe lines for the water supply. Unless the Turks make similar arrangements over ten times the mileage they cannot bring an army equal in numbers to that which they have to meet nor keep them opposite our lines for more than two days even without a shot being fired at them.

"Our preparations are planned to resist the most serious attacks that could in any circumstances be made against Egypt. We have stores carried miles into the desert by rapid little trains and a hundred miles of roads made for wheeled transports. The hum of the motor is carried far into the desert air, but even the aid of almost every modern appliance for speedy locomotion is not sufficient for our purpose.

CAMELS VIE WITH AUTOS.

"While long clouds of dust raised on the roads by self-proposed vehicles tell the story of an up-to-date transport service, you can see camel trains, moving as in Pharaoh's time, larger perhaps, than ever before in history, carrying different loads, but in the same slow, methodical, follow-the-leader way. This curious blend of modern and ancient transport is necessary and desirable in order to bring to the service of the army every possible means of carriage, and it is due to the employment of all available resources that such astonishing defensive works have been completed.

"What the system of defences is must not be indicated, for the very good reason that the enemy would like to know, but it is certain that if ever there were any chances of a Turkish success they have completely vanished.

"During my visit to the front line of defences I was much impressed with the character of the work and the enthusiastic labor of the troops. In this sector preparation of the lines was given to a division composed of veterans who proved their courage and martial spirit in the stern days in Gallipoli. Some had held on to their duties longer than their health warranted, because they wished to see the quality of the reinforcements and impress upon them how vital it was that the younger nations should show the Mother Country that their stock was true.

They came to Egypt with nerves unshaken, for the Gallipoli ordeals had merely tempered them. But jaundice and other forms of sickness which prey on troops had lowered their systems. After recuperating for three weeks in a desert rest camp they were ready for fresh trials. Indeed the divisional commander told me that the news that his men were to prepare to occupy the first line gave them intense satisfaction, though the subsequent toll was heavy and the calls upon their cheerfulness and endurance were great their health remained splendid. Their work for the Empire has acted as a tonic and the rate of sickness among these war-worn heroes has fallen to 3 per 1,000.

TRENCH PROBLEM SOLVED

"Hired labor is used on railway and road construction, but only troops are employed on the defences. For weeks the troops, British and Colonial, dug, leveled, sandbagged and so on until they had produced a system of earthworks incomparatively superior to any made in Egypt before. Those who watched them were amazed at their skill and pride in the work. They have done magnificently, and in the whole of a wonderful line the men see to it that there is not an idler. There is no room for a drone in that hive of bees.

"Trench making in the desert used to be never-ending and heart-breaking. You cut a hole and the sand filtered in like water. Even should the air be still, tiny particles would drift in; but when the Khamseen blows, as it does now with the force of a moderate gale, heavily charging the air with sand, there comes over the trench parapet and gun emplacements a fog of dust which quickly fills the laboriously cut holes. This is bad enough, but the loose sand is easily disturbed when the storm subsides. What is to be feared is that the walls of the trenches will fall away and then the whole previous exertion will have been in vain.

"A new form of trench has been planned to meet the difficulty. The latest design involves infinitely more labor in the initial stages, but prevents damage by storm or the pressure of the sand. These elaborate trenches will stand the ravages of time and of the desert storm. Perhaps some future excavators for relics of ancient people will come upon these memorials of the love free men today have for all that civilization and progress stand for."

BERLIN THINKS HOLLWEG WAVED OLIVE BRANCH

More Than Hinted at Specific Terms on Which Germany Was Prepared to Make Peace—Struck Popular Note by Emphasizing Point Fight Against Heavy Odds Was Not Actuated by Desire to Conquer Territory

BERLIN, April 7. The eagerly awaited speech of Chancellor von Bethmann-Holwegg in the Reichstag yesterday contained some unexpected and sensational element which marked it as one of the most important official utterances of the war, since it lifted the veil, though slightly, from Germany's concrete war aims, and more than hinted at the specific terms on which Germany was prepared to make peace. The reception of the speech by the House, varying from strong and sustained applauses by the Liberals, the bulk of the Socialists and even members of the Centre party, to lukewarmness or silence on the part of the pan-Germanists and annexationists generally, gave a good idea of the significance of the Chancellor's address, which was written primarily for home consumption.

Immediately after the Chancellor concluded, a political specialist in the Reichstag lobby interpreted the Chancellor's cryptic utterances of peace terms as follows:

The Chancellor's very moderate programme calls for no annexation of Belgium and no annexation of French territory. He hinted only at the annexation of Courland and Lithuania, as chiefly inhabited by peoples of Germanic race. His peace terms also included, as a guiding principle, that under no circumstances must Poland revert to the Muscovite yoke. Furthermore, an independent Belgium must be a Flemish Belgium, freed from French influence and British "vassalage."

The restitution of conquered French and Belgium territory, however, said this interpreter, must be conditional upon Germany receiving binding guarantees that French territory will not in future be a gateway through which Germany can be attacked, and that the independent Belgium will not be a British bulkhead against Germany.

To an American listener, the portion of the Chancellor's speech dealing with these matters seemed to be of the nature of an extension of the olive branch to France and Belgium.

Particular importance as indicating the Chancellor's tone of moderation, was attached by political experts to his reference to France, Belgium and Poland as "neighbors," and his hint that, as far as Germany was concerned, nothing was intended or desired that could leave behind the germs of future wars.

By emphasizing the point that the German armies in their fight against heavy odds were not actuated by a desire to conquer territory, but solely to defend the Fatherland, the Chancellor struck a popular note. His first intimation of the concrete base on which peace is possible as far as Germany is concerned, will be hailed with enthusiasm by the bulk of the German people.

Sentry' Bullet Kills a Woman

ST. JOHN, N.B., April 6.—Mrs. Jennie Cook lies dead in Sussex as a result of a stray shot by a military sentry.

An inquiry held by a Coroner's Jury has exonerated the sentry who did the shooting. Pte. Frank Best, of the 104th Battalion, was on duty outside the armoury when he saw a man approaching in a suspicious manner, through a clump of bushes.

He hailed the man, ordering him three times to stop. As no notice was taken of his orders he fired. The man fled and although pursued by the guard was not caught.

The bullet, deflected by a rock, passed through the wall of a frame dwelling and struck Mrs. Cook, killing her instantly.

The victim, who was engaged as a nurse in the home of Edward Arnold was found dead by Mr. Arnold, who heard her fall.

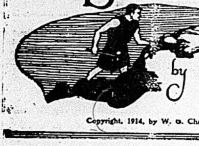
The Eternal Lover

by Edgar Rice Burroughs



Copyright, 1914, by W. G. Chapman

"You cannot know, Barney, how real he is to me. It is not as other dreams, but instead I really see him—the satin texture of his smooth, bronzed skin, the lordly poise of his perfect head, the tousled shock of coal black hair that I have learned to love and through which I know I have lovingly run my fingers as he stooped to kiss me.

"He carries a great spear, stone tipped—I should know it the moment that I saw it—and a knife and hatchet of the same flinty material, and in his left hand he bears the severed head of a mighty beast.

"He is a noble figure, but of another world or of another age. Somewhere he wanders, so lonely and alone that my heart weeps at the thought of him. Oh, Barney, either he is true and I shall find him or I am gone mad. Tell me, Barney, for the love of heaven, you believe that I am sane!"

Barney Custer drew his sister's face close to his and kissed her tenderly.

"Of course you're sane, Vic," he reassured her. "You've just allowed that old dream of yours to become a sort of obsession with you, and now it's got on your nerves until you are commencing to believe it even against your better judgment. Take a good grip on yourself, get up and join Curtiss in a long ride.

"Have it out with him. Tell him just what you have told me, and then tell him you'll marry him, and I'll warrant that you'll be dreaming about him instead of that young giant that you have stolen out of some fairy tale."

"I'll get up and take a ride, Barney," replied the girl, "but as for marrying Mr. Curtiss—well, I'll have to think it over."

She did not join the party, however, that were riding toward the hills that morning, for the thought of seeing the torn and twisted stratum of a bygone age that lifted its scarred head above the surface of the plain at the base of the mountains was more than she felt equal to. They did not urge her, and, as she insisted that Mr. Curtiss accompany the other men, she was left alone at the bungalow with Lady Greystoke, the baby and the servants.

As the party trotted across the rolling land that stretched before them to the foothills they sighted a herd of zebras coming toward them in mad stampede.

"Something is hunting ahead of us," remarked one of the men.

"We may get a shot at a lion from the looks of it," replied another.

A short distance farther on they came upon the carcass of a zebra stallion. Barney and Butzow dismounted to examine it in an effort to determine the nature of the enemy that had dispatched it.

At the first glance Barney called to one of the other members of the party, an experienced big game hunter.

"What do you make of this, Brown?" he asked, pointing to the exposed haunch.

"It is a man's kill," replied the other. "Look at that gaping hole over the heart, that would tell the story were it not for the evidence of the knife that cut away these strips from the rump. The carcass is still warm. The kill must have been made within the past few minutes."

"Then it couldn't have been a man," spoke up another, "or we should have heard the shot. Wait, here's Greystoke; let's see what he thinks of it."

The ape man, who had been riding a couple of hundred yards in the rear of the others with one of the older men, now reined in close to the dead zebra. "What have we here?" he asked, swinging from his saddle.

"Brown says this looks like the kill of a man," said Barney; "but none of us heard any shot."

Tarzan grasped the zebra by a front and hind pastern and rolled him over upon his other side.

"It went way through, whatever it was," said Butzow as the hole behind this shoulder was exposed to view. "Must have been a bullet, even if we didn't hear the report of the gun."

"I'm not so sure of that," said Tarzan, and then he glanced casually at the ground about the carcass, and bending lower, brought his sensitive nostrils close to the mutilated haunch and then to the trampled grasses at the zebra's side. When he straightened up the others looked at him questioningly.

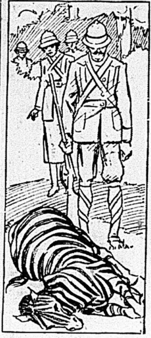
"A man," he said; "a white man has been here since the zebra died. He cut these steaks from the haunches. There is not the slightest odor of gunpowder about the wound. It was not made by a powder sped projectile. It is too large and too deep for an arrow wound."

"The only other weapon that could have inflicted it is a spear, but to cast a spear entirely through the carcass of a zebra at the distance to which a man could approach one in the open presupposes a mightiness of muscle and an accuracy of aim little short of superhuman."

"And you think"—commenced Brown.

"I think nothing," interrupted Tarzan, "except that my judgment tells me that my senses are in error. There is no naked white giant hunting through the country of the Waziri.

"Come, instead of speculating on the impossible, let's ride on to the hills and see if we can't locate the old villain who has been stealing my sheep. From his spoor I'll venture to say that when we bring him down we shall see the largest lion that any of us has ever seen."



"It is a man's kill."

As the party remounted and rode away toward the foothills two wondering black eyes watched them from the safety of the jungle.

Nu was utterly nonplused. What sort of men were these who rode upon beasts the like of which Nu had never dreamed?

At first he thought their pith helmets and khaki clothing a part of them, but when one of them removed his helmet and another unbuttoned his jacket Nu saw that they were merely coverings for the head and body, though why men should wish to hamper themselves with such foolish and cumbersome contraptions the troglodyte could not imagine.

As the party rode toward the foothills Nu paralleled them, keeping always down wind. He followed them all day during their fruitless search for the lion that had been entering Greystoke's compound and stealing his sheep, and as they retraced their way toward the bungalow late in the afternoon Nu lurked in their rear.

Never in his life had he been so deeply interested in anything as he was in these strange creatures, and when halfway across the plain the party came unexpectedly upon a band of antelope grazing in a little hollow and Nu heard the voice of one of the little black sticks the men carried and saw a buck leap into the air and then come heavily to the ground quite dead deep respect was added to his interest and possibly a trace of awe as well. Fear he knew not.

In a clump of bushes a quarter of a mile from the bungalow Nu came to a halt. The strange odors that assailed his nostrils as he approached the ranch warned him to caution.

The black servants and the Waziri warriors, some of whom were always visiting their former chief, presented to Nu's nostrils an unfamiliar scent—one which made the black shock upon his head stiffen as you have seen fine hair upon the neck of a white man's hound stiffen when for the first time his nose detects the odor of an Indian.

As darkness came on Nu approached closer to the bungalow, always careful, however, to keep down wind from it.

Filled with wonder as he was, the troglodyte had become a prey to the liveliest sort of curiosity concerning the identity and habits of these strange beings. Particularly was he interested in some one whom he had not seen, yet of whose hidden presence he was vaguely aware. In some way this unknown individual reminded him of Nat-ul, the beautiful girl with whom he had walked but yesterday beneath the shade of the tree ferns—Nat-ul, the girl he loved.

Through the windows he could see people moving about within the lighted interior, but he was not close enough to distinguish features. He saw men and women sitting about a long table, eating with strange weapons upon which they impaled tiny morsels of food which lay upon round, flat stones before them.

There was much laughter and talking, which floated through the open windows to the cave man's eager ears, but throughout it all there came to him no single word which he could interpret.

After these men and women had eaten they came out and sat in the shadows before the entrance to their strange cave, and here again they laughed and chattered, for all the world, thought Nu, like the ape people; and yet, though it was different from the ways of his own people, the troglodyte could not help but note within his own breast a strange yearning to take part in it—a longing for the company of these strange, new people.

He had crept quite close to the veranda now, and presently there floated down to him upon the almost stagnant air a message as clear as word of mouth, which told him that Nat-ul, the daughter of Tha, sat among these strange people before the entrance to their wonderful cave.

And yet Nu could not believe the evidence of his own senses. What could Nat-ul be doing among such as these? How, between two suns, could she have learned the language and the ways of these strangers?

It was impossible. And then a man upon the veranda, who sat close beside Victoria Custer, struck a match to light a cigarette and the flare of the blaze lit up the girl's features. At the sight of them the cave man involuntarily sprang to his feet. A half smothered exclamation broke from his lips, "Nat-ul!"

"What was that?" exclaimed Barney Custer. "I thought I heard some one speak out there near the rose bushes."

He rose as though to investigate, but his sister laid her hand upon his arm.

"Don't go, Barney," she whispered.

He turned toward her with a questioning look. Her eyes were dilated with wonder and fear, her hands were trembling and she was so agitated her brother was deeply concerned about her, remembering as he did the strange hallucinations to which she was subject.

"Why?" he asked, eyeing her fixedly. "There is no danger. Did you not hear it too?"

"Yes," she answered in a low voice. "I heard it, Barney. Please don't leave me."

He felt the trembling of her hand where it rested upon his sleeve. One of the other men heard the conversation; but of course he could not guess that it carried any peculiar significance. It was merely an expression of the natural timidity of the civilized white woman in the midst of the savage African night.

"It's nothing, Miss Custer," he said. "I'll just walk down there to reassure you—a prowling hyena, perhaps, but nothing more."

The girl would have been glad to deter him, but she felt that she had already evinced more perturbation than the occasion warranted, and so she but forced a laugh, remarking that it was not at all worth while. Yet in her ears rang the familiar name that had so often fallen from the lips of her dream man.

When one of the others suggested that the investigator had better take an express rifle with him on the chance that the intruder might be Old Raffles, the sheep thief, the girl started up as though to object, but realizing how ridiculous such an attitude would be, and how impossible to explain, she turned instead and entered the house.

Several of the men walked down into the garden, but though they searched about for the better part of half an hour they came upon no indication that any savage beast was lurking near by.

Always in front of them a silent figure moved just outside the range of their vision. When they returned again to the veranda it took up its position once more behind the rose bushes, nor until all had entered the bungalow and sought their beds did the figure stir.

CHAPTER V.

The Zebra Killer.

NU was hungry again, and knowing no law of property rights, he found the odor of the Greystoke sheep as appetizing as that of any other of the numerous creatures that were penned within their compounds for the night. Like a supple panther he scaled the high fence that guarded the imported, pedigreed stock in which Lord Greystoke took such just pride.

A moment later there was the frightened rush of animals to the far side of the inclosure, where they halted to turn fear filled eyes back toward the silent beast of prey that crouched over the carcass of a plump ewe. Within the pen the killer ate his fill and then, catlike as he had come, he glided back toward the garden before the bungalow.

Out across the plain, down wind from Nu, another silent figure moved stealthily toward the ranch. It was a huge maned lion.

Every now and then he would halt and lift his sniffling nose to the gentle breeze, and his lips lift, baring the mighty fangs beneath, but no sound came from his deep throat, for he was old, and his wisdom was as the wisdom of the fox.

Once upon a time he would have coughed and moaned and roared after the manner of his hungry brethren, but much experience with men and their deafening thunder sticks had taught him that he hunted longest who hunted in silence.

Victoria Custer had gone to her room much earlier in the evening than was her custom, but not to sleep. She did not even disrobe, but sat instead in the darkness beside her window, looking out toward the black and mysterious jungle in the distance and the shadowy outlines of the southern hills.

She was trying to fight down forever the foolish obsession that had been growing upon her slowly and insidiously for years. Since the first awakening of developing womanhood within her she had been subject to the strange dream that was now becoming an almost nightly occurrence.

At first she had thought nothing of it other than it was odd that she should continue to dream the same thing so many times, but of late these nightly visions had seemed to hold more of reality than formerly and to presage some happening in her career—some crisis that was to alter the course of her life.

Even by day she could not rid herself of the vision of the black haired young giant, and tonight the culmination had come in the voice she had heard calling her from the rose thicket.

She knew that he was but a creature of her dreams, and it was this knowledge which frightened her so, for it meant but one thing—her mind was tottering beneath the burden of the nervous strain these hallucinations had imposed upon it.

She must gather all the resources of her nervous energy and throw off this terrible obsession forever. She must! She must!

Rising, the girl paced back and forth the length of her room. She felt stifling and confined within its narrow limits. Outside, beneath the open sky, with no boundaries save the distant horizon, was the field best fitted for such a battle as was raging within her.

Snatching a silken scarf, she threw it about her shoulders—a concession to habit, for the night was hot—and, stepping through her window to the porch that encircled the bungalow, she passed on into the garden.

Just round the nearest angle of the house her brother and Billy Curtiss sat smoking before the window of their bedroom, clad in pajamas and slippers. Curtiss was cleaning the rifle he had used that day, the same that he had carried into the rose garden earlier in the evening. Neither heard the girl's light footsteps upon the sward, and the corner of the building hid her from their view.

TO SAVE EYES

Is the Object of This Free Prescription—Try It if your Eyes Give You Trouble.

Thousands of people suffer from eye troubles because they do not know what to do. They know some good home remedy for every other minor ailment, but none for their eye troubles. They neglect their eyes, because the trouble is not sufficient to drive them to an eye specialist, who would, anyway, charge them a heavy fee. As a last resort they go to an optician or to the five and ten-cent store, and oftentimes get glasses that they do not need, or which, after being used a few months, do their eyes more injury than good.

Here is a simple prescription that everyone should use: 5 grains Bon-Opto dissolved in ¼ glass of water. Use three or four times a day to bathe the eyes. This prescription and the simple Bon-Opto system keeps the eyes clean, sharpens the vision and quickly overcomes inflammation and irritation; weak, watery, overworked, tired eyes and other similar troubles are greatly benefited and oftentimes cured by its use. Many reports show that wearers of glasses have discarded them after a few weeks' use.

It is good for the eyes, and contains no ingredient which would injure the most sensitive eyes of an infant or the aged. Your own druggist can fill this prescription, or the Valmas Drug Co. of Toronto will fill it for you by mail. Try it, and know for once what real eye comfort is.

A prominent City Physician to whom the above article was submitted, said: "Bon-Opto is a very remarkable remedy. Its constituent ingredients are well known to eminent eye specialists and widely prescribed by them. It can be obtained from any good druggist and is one of the very few preparations I feel should be kept on hand for regular use in almost every family."

J. S. McKeown fills many Bon-Opto prescriptions, and will gladly fill yours.

How Fat Folks May Become Thin

By Elizabeth Thomas

Perhaps you are suddenly becoming stout, or it may be that you have been putting on weight for years. In either case the cause is the same—lack of oxygen carrying power of the blood. This trouble occurs in adults of both sexes and all ages, but it may be overcome very easily and without any of the privations that most people imagine necessary to reduce their weight.

Simply go to your druggist and get some oil of orilene capsules. Take one after each meal and one before going to bed. Weigh yourself so as to know just how fast you are losing weight. Wonderful results have been accomplished by this inexpensive recipe, but be sure to get the genuine oil of orilene in capsule form. It is sold only in original sealed packages. Any large druggist can supply you, or a large size box will be sent on receipt of $1.00. Address D. J. Little Drug Co. Box 1240 Montreal, Can.

DEVELOPEMENT PLAN FOR NEW ONTARIO

Government Will Lend Money and Provide Live Stock for Settlers Until They Get on Their Feet—Fourth Liberal Policy Adopted By Government This Year

TORONTO, April 7.— Important legislation in connection with the development of Northern and Northwestern Ontario, providing for Government loans to settlers not exceeding $500 to any settler, the appointment of a Commissioner, the distribution of pure seed, the encouragement of live stock grazing and dairy farming and a closer supervision of settlement with a view to developing the social life of the settlers, was introduced by the Hon. G. Howard Ferguson, Minister of Lands, Forests and Mines, in the Legislature yesterday.

The legislation is practically the legislation the Liberals in Ontario have been urging for the last five years. Only last session the Government turned down a resolution introduced by Mr. Sam Carter (Liberal member for South Wellington) asking for the very action the Government is now taking.

FOUR POLICIES ADOPTED

In this connection it is interesting to note that this makes the fourth policy advocated by the Liberal party that the Government has adopted during the present session of the Legislature, the other three policies being: "abolish the bar," the establishment of a trades and labor branch and the policy of submitting to the Legislature itemized statements of proposed Timiskaming & Northern Ontario Railway expenditure.

In introducing his bill yesterday Hon. Mr. Ferguson said that the settlement of New Ontario had been progressing very rapidly, but there were conditions to be met in that part of the Province which had to be met perhaps in no other part of the Dominion of Canada. The peculiar character of the lands, being heavily timbered, put settlers in Northern Ontario in unfair competition with settlers upon prairie lands. The settlers in Northern Ontario were somewhat handicapped if they went into the country without capital, because they had to clear the land of timber before they could grow anything. He thought a little monetary assistance from the Government that would help the settlers to provide themselves with implements, stock, etc., would be of great benefit to the settlers, and make settlement in the northern section of the Province more attractive.

NEW ERA OF IMMIGRATION

Ontario was on the eve of a new era of immigration, Mr. Ferguson thought, and they would also have to provide for the period of reconstruction following the war. They ought to have facilities ready to direct the immigration that would follow the war, and retain it in the newer portions of the Province "where we have so much land, and where the whole country is pregnant with opportunities."

In the past the timber and mineral phases of the development of New Ontario had received more attention than the agricultural possibilities, but in the future it was the intention to pay a good deal more attention to agriculture.

TWENTY MILLION ACRES.

In New Ontario there were twenty million acres of just as good land awaiting the settlers as there was anywhere on the face of the globe. Settlement of that country would undoubtedly proceed rapidly, and the Government had been considering very carefully how they might meet the problems that would arise.

The Government had decided to make loans and advances to settlers to an amount not exceeding $500 for any settler. The object the Government had in mind was to make New Ontario the big agricultural belt of Ontario, as the southern portion of the Province would probably be the big industrial section.

In the Timiskaming district of New Ontario alone there were about 25,000,000 acres of land and 17,000,000 acres was excellent arable land. There has already been sold in the Timiskaming district, almost 900,000 acres, and in that district there were 6,000 settlers who were actually settled on the land.

AMAZING CROP FIGURES.

As showing the progress made by the settlers in that district Hon. Mr. Ferguson gave some crop figures. Returns made to the Government this year showed that the crops in the Timiskaming district, the grain, roots and field crops, were valued at almost three-quarters of a million dollars.

ROWELL ON TIMISKAMING

Hon. Mr. Ferguson recalled the fact that while travelling in Northern Ontario last summer he had met Mr. Rowell, the Liberal leader, who was returning to Toronto from a tour of western Canada. As they stood on the back of the train coming through the Timiskaming district the Liberal leader had remarked to him, referring to the fine fields of grain, that he had seen nothing more creditable west of the Great Lakes. (Applause).

Referring to the distribution of pure seed to settlers in New Ontario, Hon. Mr. Ferguson said that last year four thousand settlers availed themselves of the opportunity of securing seed grain of one kind or another, including roots. The total of loans of seed grain to the farmers of New Ontario last year amounted to $80,000. The loans had become due for repayment only on the first of this month and the money was already coming in at the rate of $1,500 to $2,000 a day. (Applause). That was evidence of the energy, sincerity and prosperity of the farmers of New Ontario. Another startling and tangible evidence of the progress made by the settlers was that as compared with the four thousand applications for seed grains last year they had received only four hundred applications this year, which showed that the settlers were now able to stand on their own feet.

ASSIST SETTLERS.

The Government also intended to assist the settlers in other directions, said Mr. Ferguson. They were going to encourage the farmers to engage in stock raising and dairy work. There was one thing that would contribute more than anything else to the settlement of that splendid country, and that was the introduction of live stock. "We propose to provide the settlers with a limited amount of live stock so that they can get on their feet as rapidly as possible," said Mr. Ferguson.

Another object they had in mind was to provide the new settler with a home and an opportunity for earning a livelihood while he was clearing the ground and opening up and developing the country. Financial assistance would be very largely based on the amount of land a settler cleared. It was estimated that the cost of clearing an acre of timbered land was $10 to $50. The Government proposed to advance to settlers $25 to $30 per acre for every acre of land they cleared. In that way the Government would be taking absolutely no risk.

ADVANCE TO SETTLERS.

These loans, Mr. Ferguson said, would be made through a Commissioner to be appointed by the Government. The commissioner would have everything to do with the advancing of money and the rating of values. As a safeguard against loss, and in order to keep the matter within the limits of legitimate assistance to settlers, the Government had decided to limit the amount of the loan that the commissioner might make to any settler to $500. He thought $500 would be sufficient to assist any settler to work out his future.

AFTER THE WAR.

The Government was preparing for conditions after the war, and in carrying out a scheme for the colonization of New Ontario they proposed to conduct a vigorous, energetic propaganda in order to secure good settlers. In future there would be closer supervision of settlement and, instead of the haphazard methods of the past they would group settlement by settling one township at a time on a systematic basis.

SOCIAL SIDE, TOO.

By opening up one township at a time and grouping the settlement they would be able to develop the social life of the settlers. A home atmosphere would be created that would make the life attractive to the settlers' wives, and they would have the churches and schoolhouses growing up in the neighborhood.

Offices would probably be opened at Cochrane, Port Arthur and other points, Mr. Ferguson said, where intending settlers might go for information and assistance. There would be a Loan Commissioner's office, with inspectors attached, and the inspectors would go out and determine whether the settlers applying for financial aid were deserving of it and whether it was worth while encouraging them to stay there.

WELCOME FOR SETTLERS.

In addition to these officials it would probably be found advisable to have some man at the gateway to New Ontario to welcome settlers going into that country. The new settler would be able to go into a land office and find there a map of any township regarding which he desired information, and the map would contain all the notes of the original surveyor plotted out on that map so far as the surveyor had been able to give the information. They proposed in that way to make access to the country the very best possible and the most inviting that might be made.

AN OPPOSITION POLICY.

Mr. N. W. Rowell said he was pleased that the Government had decided to introduce legislation dealing with the very important question of New Ontario development. "I listened to my hon. friend with very much pleasure, and it reminded me of the numerous addresses made on this side of the House during the last five or six years urging the Government to take the very action they are now taking." Mr. Rowell recalled the fact than Hon. Mr. Ferguson, who was introducing the legislation, had voted only last session against a resolution introduced by Mr. Sam Carter of South Wellington asking for the same things as were provided for in the bill now before them.

Mr. Carter—I thought it was myself speaking. (Opposition applause).

Hon. Mr. Ferguson—Well, don't ever make that mistake again. (Government applause.)

PLEASING TO LIBERALS.

Mr. Rowell, continuing, said he called attention to the fact only to show that the action the Government is now taking was one that would commend itself to the men on the Liberal side of the House because it was action they had been urging. His only regret was that his honorable friends did not take the action sooner. The problem of settling the north country was one of the most serious they had to face. It would be well if the Government would get all the agencies for the settlement of that country in operation before the return of the soldiers from the front. If they did that they would be doing a real service to Ontario, to Canada and to the Empire. Northern Ontario was an immense heritage, a great responsibility and a splendid opportunity, and its development along sound lines would greatly contribute to the progress of the whole Dominion.

Columbia Records
NOW COST YOU LESS

THE vastly increased demand for Columbia Records has made it necessary to greatly enlarge our Canadian manufacturing facilities whereby we have materially reduced the cost of production. We are therefore giving record buyers the benefit of this saving in the price of Columbia Double-Disc Records.

Beginning with March 20th, when the new April records go on sale, the following prices will prevail throughout the Dominion on all Columbia Records, (except symphony series which now sell at $1.00 up to $3.00, and formerly were priced up to $7.50).

10-inch Columbia Double-Disc Records
(Former Price $1.00) now 85c.

12 inch Columbia Double-Disc Records
(Former Price $1.50) now $1.25

Notwithstanding the substantial reduction in prices, the same artistic standards will be maintained; and the same excellence and quality will characterize Columbia Records that has made them more and more popular year by year all over the Dominion.

Once you have played a Columbia Record on your instrument, you will never again be satisfied with a tone any less round and rich and natural.

It will be to your advantage to ask for Columbia Double-Disc Records. The Columbia dealer nearest to you will be glad to furnish a catalogue, or we will mail you one on request.

STANDING CROP COMPETITIONS

Agricultural societies in Ontario will again this year be allowed to enter two kinds of crops in standing field crop competitions. The Government grant to a society will be $50 for each crop, making a total grant of $100 if two crops are entered. This amount must be supplemented by the society to the extent of $25 for each competition. Seven prizes must be offered as follows for each crop: First, $20; second, $15; third, $12; fourth, $10; fifth, $8; sixth, $6; seventh $4. Societies desiring to enter this competition must notify the Superintendent of Fairs not later than the first day of May, except for corn; the latest date for making entry in corn will be May 15. Not less than ten bona fide entries for each crop in any society will be accepted.

PAINFUL SWOLLEN VEINS
Quickly Relieved and Reduced

Mrs. R. M. Remler of Federal, Kansas writes an interesting account of her success in reducing a severe case of enlarged veins that should be encouraging to others similarly afflicted. She suffered with badly swollen and inflamed veins (in fact one had broken), for more than seven years before she became acquainted with Absorbine Jr., and used it. Absorbine, Jr., was faithfully applied for several weeks and, to quote from her letter, "The large knots in the veins left, it was all nicely healed, and has not bothered me since."

Absorbine, Jr., is an antiseptic liniment—healing cooling and soothing. Safe and pleasant to use. $1.00 and $2.00 at your druggist's or postpaid. Liberal trial bottle postpaid for 10c. in stamps. W. F. Young, P.D.F., 457 Lymans Bldg., Montreal, Can.

Rate of Seeding For Best Results

Experience of Illustration Farmers on This Important Question

The question of the amount of seed grain to sow per acre to secure the best results is an important one for the farmer.

In a review of this question and the results secured by the farmers on the twenty-four illustration farms conducted for the Commission of Conservation, Dr. J. W. Robertson, at the last annual meeting of the Commission said:—

The question of the amount of grain to sow per acre to get best results had not received much attention by the farmets, and attention by the farmers, and many did not consider the condition of the soil when determining the amount. Thirteen state they now know that the amount sown previously was not suitable, and have changed their rate of seeding. Every farmer says that he has found that cleaned and selected seed does not require to be sown as thickly as uncleaned seed, and that soil conditions should determine to a considerable extent the amount per acre to be sown. A number had previously given this point in different consideration, but ten stated that they had not thought of it at all previous to the visits of the Commission's instructor.

George R. Barrie, (Galt, Ont.) says: 'We have found that the richer the land the smaller the quantity of seed needed, and where the land is poorer a heavier seeding is needed. We formerly seeded it all the same.'

Only two of the farmers claimed to have been sowing their clover seed thickly enough to ensure a good catch. Twenty-one had been sowing an average amount of six pounds per acre whereas they now sow ten pounds per acre. Some had sown as little as three or four pounds, but are now convinced that ten pounds is better and are sowing it. Three farmers had previously grown their own seed while now twelve are regularly doing so.

George R. Barrier, (Galt, Ont.) again says: 'The high price of clover seed has something to do with our sowing a small amount. Since growing our own seed we do not mind sowing it more heavily and find that the extra seed more than pays for itself.'

Another farmer, who had not previously grown his own seed, states that in 1914 he produced 500 lbs of alsike seed and 100 lbs. of red clover, while in 1915, he grew over 1,000 pounds of red clover seed. The farmer doing illustration work for the Commission in Lanark county, Ont., in 1914, grew 1,200 pounds of red clover seed; he had never grown a pound of his own seed previous to commencing work with the Commission.

Heaven is Lined With Pork And Beans

NEW YORK, April 7.—Carrying the gospel to the soldiers of the Canadian overseas contingent in France through the medium of pork and beans has been the work of Major Gerald Walker Birks of Montreal, who returned to-day on the Nieuw Amsterdam. Major Birks is on a two months' leave of absence to raise a fund of $225,000 to carry on the work for the Y. M. C. A. in the trenches.

"Pork and beans has brought many a Canadian Tommy to God," said the major. "The British army is the best fed force in the world. The soldiers get plenty to eat, but they crave certain luxuries.

"The things they want more than anything else are pork and beans, canned fruit, chocolate and tobacco. So all our Y.M.C.A. huts in Flanders are stocked with them. One of the soldiers said to me: 'I used to think Heaven had pearly gates, and was where milk and honey was flowing all the time, but now I know better. Heaven is lined with tincans and everyone of them is pork and beans, and the angels can get all they can eat whenever they feel hungry.' So we are carrying the gospel to the trenches by shipping beans to them."

Canadians at Front Number Sixty Thousand

Over 200,000 Men Still to be Recruited Here

OTTAWA, April 7.—A memorandum summarizing the work of the Department of Militia in connection with the war, during the past twelve months, was presented to Parliament yesterday by Sir Robert Borden as a preliminary to the request which will come in a day or so for the voting of $260,000,000 to provide the sinews of war for the coming fiscal year.

The memorandum covers reports from the Chief of the General Staff, the Quartermaster-General, the Master-General of the Ordnance, the Paymaster-General and the Director of Contracts and includes several hundred orders-in-council dealing with contracts and war operations of all kinds.

Perhaps the most interesting information given is that Canada had actually at the front, on March 18 last, about 60,000 troops or practically three complete divisions.

Also in England or in passage to England on that date, there were 44,000 troops; in Canada, there were 134,000 troops, in the West Indies there was the 38th Battalion, at Bermuda, and a company of the Canadian Royal Garrison Artillery at St. Lucia, while with the British Mediterranean expeditionary force there were three Canadian general hospitals, and three Canadian stationary hospitals.

Out of a total of effectives amounting to $40,000 there were only 60,000 troops actually in the fighting. On garrison duty, etc., in Canada, including the permanent force there were 13,000 men. At the present time, to complete the total authorlized army of half a million, a little over 200,000 men have still to be recruited.

To Concentrate in Canada

Of the 44,000 troops in England, about half are at Shorncliffe, as one training division, under Brig.-Gen. J. C. MacDougall, while another training division is at Bramshott, under Brig.-Gen. Lord Brooke.

It is intended as soon as the weather permits, to concentrate the men in training in Canada at camps for the summer, namely, at London, at Niagara, at Petawawa (with a detachment at Barriefield), at Valcartier (including the Quebec and the Maritime Provinces men), at Camp Hughes, Man.; at Vernon, B.C., and at the Sarce Reserve, in Alberta, near Calgary.

To transport 87,659 of all ranks, and in addition, 2,891 Montenegrins overseas during the past twelve months, has required 157 special trains, and ninety-four steamships. In addition, 17,013 horses had been sent over on eighteen steamships.

Housing Cost High.

The housing of the troops in Canada for the winter months cost a total of $853,130, while for the housing of guards, prisoners of war, the establishing of convalescent homes, etc., the cost was $147,135. On the defences at Halifax there has been an expenditure of approximately $145,000, and on the Quebec defences, nearly $90,000.

The report of the Paymaster-General shows that for the sixteen months ending with December 31 last, the total expenditure on war account had been $153,000,000, of which $118,000,000 had been expended in Canada, and $34,600,000 in England.

Of the total expenditures approximately $82,000,000 went for pay allowances, rations, etc.

The total expended in separation allowances is given as $9,148,000.

At the present time the monthly expenditure is up to about $18,000,000 or considerably over half a million per day.

Vacant Lot Gardens

An Excellent Means of Reducing the Cost of Living and Securing Vegetables

Organization work for the promotion of vacant lot gardening should be taken up at once. Good work was done in many places last season and this year should show a large increase. Many mouths may be fed by this means; fresh vegetables, the most healthful food available, may be obtained with very little effort. In every city and town many vacant lots can be made available for gardens, requiring only the initiative of public-spirited citizens to start the movement.

Among the successes of last season, the results from vacant lot gardens in Ottawa may be cited. The enterprise consisted of 128 plots, fifty by one hundred feet, for which no fewer than 180 applications were received. No charge was made for the plots. The gardeners supplied their own tools and seeds, and, to minimize failures, were given until May 25th to begin work. If no work was done on a plot by that date, it was given to some one else. In this way several plots changed hands. June 15th was set as a second time limit when at least two-thirds of the plot must have been planted. Again a number of plots changed hands, as several gardeners failed to do sufficient work or showed a lack of interest. Of the one hundred and twenty-eight, only twenty were weeded out for failure to do justice to their plots.

The crops secured from some of these plots were as follows:—

Plot No. 13.—12 bags of potatoes; a liberal supply of corn, pumpkins and squash. One squash measured 80 inches around and weighed 125 lbs.

Plot No. 31.—10 bags of potatoes; 300 ears of corn; 1,200 cucumbers and 300 tomatoes.

Plot No. 20—9 bags of potatoes; a large crop of tomatoes, cucumbers and beets.

Plot No. 119—Potatoes, 6 bushels; carrots, 1 bushel; turnips, 1½ bushels; beets, 2 bushels; cabbage, 30 heads; green beans, 16 gallons; peas, shelled, 10 quarts; onions, 2 gallons; corn, 13 dozen cobs; tomatoes, 314 lb.; 2 bushels, green.

Plot No. 121—For a family of seven, a constant supply of green beans, July 15th to October 1st, potatoes, 6 bags and sufficient carrots, turnips, parsnips, onions and cabbage for the summer, fall and winter supply.

The cost of living continues to soar in Canada, entailing an added hardship on the head of a family in supplying food. The cultivation of the vacant lot garden offers healthful and pleasant recreation and an effective means of augmenting the family income.

Prepare For Clean Up Day

Early Organization Required to Obtain Results—Get the Public Interested

In many Canadian cities "Clean-up Day" has become an established custom, and, without any special effort on the part of those interested, the work is efficiently carried out. In many others, however, practically nothing has been, or is being, done. Due to the inefficiency of those responsible, or to those insidious causes, patronage and indifference, numerous municipalities are in a sadly neglected state, as evidenced on every hand.

Canadian conditions make a clean-up in a spring a necessity. Owing to the cold weather, and the abundance of snow, sanitary conditions are not at their best. Lanes and alley-ways become littered with garbage, ashes and waste-paper; backyards, cellars and attics harbour refuse which is both useless and dangerous. With the melting of the snow this accumulation is exposed to view, the thawing of garbage permits of speedy decay, and a very dangerous condition is at once established.

The success of a "Clean-up Day" depends entirely upon the citizens. Leaders are necessary to initiate the movement, to get the proper officials interested, and to awaken a public interest. In many places the Boy Scouts have been called upon to assist in this work, inspecting premises in outlying and residential sections. For this purpose a small card is supplied. These reports are returned to headquarters and facilitate action to secure improvement.

Municipalities should provide sufficient cartage facilities for removal of the refuse collected, furnish places for its disposal or destruction and give every encouragement for the voluntary efforts of citizens to make their home towns more cleanly, more healthful and more homelike.

Spoken plays will eventually triumph over the movies, because so much of the movies is salacious, says Otis Skinner. So most movie plays like "Peggy," "The Birth of a Nation," and "The Heart of Paula," fall by the wayside to make room for thoroughly refined spoken plays like "A Pair of Silk Stockings," "Twin Beds," and "Fair and Warmer."

Production and Thrift

"CANADA from her abundance can help supply the Empire's needs, and this must be a comforting thought for those upon whom the heavy burden of directing the Empire's affairs has been laid. Gain or no gain the course before the farmers of Canada is as clear as it was last year—they must produce abundantly in order to meet the demands that may be made, and I believe this to be especially true in regard to live stock, the world's supply of which must be particularly affected in this vast struggle. Stress and strain may yet be in store for us all before this tragic conflict is over, but not one of us doubts the issue, and Canadians will do their duty in the highest sense of that great word."—HON. MARTIN BURRELL, Minister of Agriculture.

"MODERN war is made by resources, by money, by foodstuffs, as well as by men and by munitions. While war is our first business, it is the imperative duty of every man in Canada to produce all that he can, to work doubly hard while our soldiers are in the trenches, in order that the resources of the country may not only be conserved, but increased, for the great struggle that lies before us. 'Work and Save' is a good motto for War-time."—SIR THOMAS WHITE, Minister of Finance.

THE CALL OF EMPIRE COMES AGAIN IN 1916
TO CANADIAN FARMERS, DAIRYMEN, FRUIT GROWERS, GARDENERS
WHAT IS NEEDED? THESE IN PARTICULAR—
WHEAT, OATS, HAY,
BEEF, PORK, BACON,
CHEESE, EGGS, BUTTER, POULTRY,
CANNED FRUITS, FRUIT JAMS,
SUGAR, HONEY, WOOL, FLAX FIBRE,
BEANS, PEAS, DRIED VEGETABLES

We must feed ourselves, feed our soldiers, and help feed the Allies. The need is greater in 1916 than it was in 1915. The difficulties are greater, the task is heavier, the need is more urgent, the call to patriotism is louder—therefore be thrifty and produce to the limit.

"THE AGRICULTURAL WAR BOOK FOR 1916" is now in the press. To be had from The Publications Branch, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

PILES OF GERMAN DEAD RESULT IN GENERAL OFFENSIVE

EXTENSIVE PREPARATIONS BY BRITISH IN TIGRIS ATTACK

Farmers Aided by Interned Aliens

Conference at Winnipeg Has Plans To Secure Men on Certain Conditions

WINNIPEG, April 10.—(Special.)—A meeting in connection with the proposal to release a large number of interned aliens from detention camps in order that they may aid farmers in operations of the present year was held yesterday afternoon in the office of the Commissioner of Immigration, J. Bruce Walker. Those present at the conference included Major-General Sir William D. Otter, K.C.B., who is in general charge of the detention camps of the Dominion; officials of the C. P. R., C. N. R., Bankers' Association and Grain Growers' Association.

It was arranged that as the list of available men in the camp at Brandon was exhausted, special trains would be operated from Cochrane west, and if necessary, 2,000 men owuld be brought from the camps near that place to Brandon The cost of this transportation may be borne by the Federal Government.

Farmers using this labor will be required to take each man for a period of seven months, to pay the current rate of wages, and to report once a month to the Commandant of the camp.

SENATOR IS ANXIOUS; LIBRARY IS UNPROTECTED

Only One Man There at Night and He Was Not Carrying a Gun

OTTAWA, April 8.—Senator Cargrain called the attention of the Senate, that when working in the Parliamentary Library on Wednesday, which was the only part of the building that had not been burned, he found himself locked in, not noting that it was after six o'clock.

"I roamed around the place, but found not a living soul. I went back to work and waited I heard steps, and a man came along without badge or uniform to show me he had a right to be there. I do not know whether he was an intruder, possibly a German spy, who might blow up the place or set it on fire. I asked who he was and he replied that he was the caretaker.

"I asked if he was alone to take care of this valuable library, and he said yes. I said: 'Have you any arms?" and he said: 'None whatever. I have my fist." I said: "That would be poor protection; anyone could overpower you' He said there were a couple of constables outside. I said, 'That may be; but it seems after what has happened, there should be at least two guardians, and they should be thoroughly armed.' If this man should be taken ill or something happen him, a fire might start and there would be no one to cope with it."

Senator Casgrain said the basement window and doors should be barred and there should be at least two armed watchmen on duty

Hon. Mr. Lougheed promised to call the attention of the authorities to the condition of the Library at night.

ENEMY SUBMARINE RAMMED IN BLACK SEA

PETROGRAD, April 10.—(Special.)—The torpedo boat destroyer Strogi has rammed an enemy submarine near the spot where the hospital ship Portugal was sunk in the Black Sea, according to an official announcement tonight.

FIRST GERMAN GENERAL OFFENSIVE OF 13 MILES

But the Enemy Have Achieved No Results Commensurate With the Effort—Losses are Evidenced by the Great Piles of German Dead Before Allied Lines

Canadian Press Special

PARIS, April 10.—Afternoon statement: To the west of the River Meuse the bombardment continued violently last night. It was particularly directed against Hill No. 304. An attack delivered by the enemy yesterday evening against Le Mort Homme, "Dead Man's Hill," and which was generally speaking, repulsed with important losses to our adversaries, made it possible for the Germans to penetrate our advanced trenches at Hill No. 295 along the front of about five hundred yards. We took about one hundred prisoners.

To the east of the Meuse there was very spirited figting last night in the little wood of Fontain St. Martin to the east of Bacherauville. We have made progress in the communicating trenches of the enemy to the south of the village of Douaumont. In Woevre district there have been bombardments of villages in the foothills of the Meuse heights. It has been confirmed that the day of April 9th in the region of Verdun was marked by the first general offensive movement in which the forces of the enemy attacked our front of more than twenty kilometers (13 miles). Our adversaries, who have not achieved any result commensurate to their effort, suffered losses to the extent of which are evidenced by the bodies piled up in front of our lines. There has been no occurrence of importance on the remainder of the front

FRENCH CUT OFF AND 714 TAKEN PRISONERS

Canadian Press Special.

BERLIN, April 10.—The War Office announced today that in the fighting near Bethincourt, that town and two fortified points to the southwest were isolated. The French were cut off, losing 714 prisoners, two guns and fifteen machine guns. Their losses in killed were also considerable.

Kingston Soldier Killed In Action

Late Pte. Edward Doolan Has Father in 80th and Brother in 59th Batt.

(Kingston Whig)

Mrs. Edward Doolan, 3 Quebec Street, received word from the Militia Department, on Friday morning that her son, Pte. Edward Doolan, aged 19 years, of the 21st Battalion, had been killed in action on March 26th. Last July he enlisted in the 59th Battalion at Barriefield. His ability as a soldier was soon noticed and he was selected for the first draft from the 59th Battalion to go overseas last September. When he arrived in England he was soon sent to the firing line as reinforcement for the 21st Battalion.

Deceased had been employed by the firm of McKelvey and Birch as a tinsmith for four years, and would have finished his time in another year had he not enlisted.

His father, Pte. Edward Doolan, is a member of the 80th Battalion now in Belleville, while his brother, William, is a sergeant in the 59th Battalion, now on its way to the firing line.

WILL CONSIDER COMPENSATION

VICTORIA, B.C., April 10.—(Special.)—Answering a request for compensation for liquor license holders in the event of prohibition passing, Premier Bowser said there was no doubt a great deal to be said in favor of compensation and the Government would give the matter every consideration.

THOUSANDS OF SHELLS HURLED INTO RHEIMS

PARIS, April 10.—(Special.)—The systematic bombardment of the city of Rheims was resumed three weeks ago and continues with increasing intensity. A thousand shells fell in the town on Friday. The Prefect has sent away all the inmates of homes for the aged and taken other measures to avoid further loss of life.

EXTINCTION OF THE ZULU ELEPHANT

CAPE TOWN, April 7.—There is not a single elephant left in Zululand, once a paradize for the great animals. The last survivor was found dead the other day on a farm on the banks of the Unfilozi River, where he had lived since the early part of the reign of the great chief, Cetewayo.

An immense herd once roamed the Dugugu forest and along the Unfolozi, but it was diminished by incessant hunting, until Cetawayo one day finally drove it away forever. The Chief used to make medicine of certain portions of their bodies. On the occasion referred to he organized a mighty drive in which two elephants were killed and many wounded. One of the latter turned and trampled one of his pursuers to pulp. It was this animal which was captured and whose death is now reported. The remainder of the herd broke away and thereafter none was seen again in Zululand.

Chemists Wanted For Work

TORONTO, April 10.—(Special.)—Chemists are to be conserved, according to an order issued at military headquarters on Saturday. Officers commanding overseas units are asked to report at once the names and qualifications of any chemists enlisted under their command. The order further states that no such men are to be enlisted in future without authority from Militia Headquarters at Ottawa.

Preparations For Attack On Tigris

Canadian Press Special.

LONDON, April 10.—General Lake reports, according to an official announcement today, that General Gorringe's preparations for an attack on the Sannayat position on the Tigris are well advanced. Thousands have curtailed the frontage on which attack can be delivered. The weather is improved, and it has been fine for two days. The river has not risen since Friday.

The Sick Are Left To Die

Brutal Treatment to British Prisoners by German Authorities—Doctors Leave Camp

LONDON, April 10.—Special—The Government committee, on the treatment in Germany of British prisoners of war, of which the Hon. Mr. Justice Younger is Chairman, has issued a report on the conditions prevailing in the Witenberg Camp during the typhus epidemic of last year.

"The report is based on information from repatriated prisoners, and especially from Major Priestley, Captain Vidal and Captain Lauder, who were sent to the camp shortly after the outbreak of the epidemic and who were recently released from Germany. The three officers mentioned are the only survivors of six British doctors sent to the Witenberg Camp by the Germans, 'to take up,' says the report, 'the place of duty abandoned by their own (German) Medical Staff when the presence of typhus manifested itself."

BACK TO PENITENTIARY

Arthur Bonnar Believed to Have Been Feigning Insanity

KINGSTON, April 10.—Special—A. Bonnar, a convict at Portsmouth Penitentiary, but a short time ago removed to the Government insane institution at Guelph, has been brought back to Portsmouth. It is believed that he was merely shamming insanity, and that his idea was to be sent up to Guelph in hope that some day he would be given his freedom or that he would get a chance to escape. He was one of four convicts who made a sensational escape from the penitentiary a few years ago.

TURK MINISTERS SEEKING PEACE.

Milan, April 10.—Special—News is received from Berne that the Turkish Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs and Reshaud Pasha have wired for Osman Effendi, former Turkish Minister of Posts, to join them immediately.

They are said to have already had conversations with unofficial delegates regarding proposals for a separate peace.

FIVE CHILDREN WERE BURNED TO DEATH

Fire Broke Out on Stage of English Theatre During Patriotic Entertainment—As Curtain Fell on Final Scene Cry of Fire Caused a Panic

LONDON, April 10.—Special—Five child performers were burned to death on the stage of the Garrick Theatre at Hereford Friday night. It was a children's entertainment to provide comforts for the soldiers. The curtain fell on the final scene, and the audience was departing when the cry of fire was raised. A panic ensued. Many in the audience were crushed, but none seriously injured. The fire was confined to the stage, where the performers were wearing dresses covered with cotton wool for a snow scene. The flames spread furiously and the children ran frantically about the stage with their garments on fire.

OVERLAND BEATS DOWN PRICE OF GASOLINE

32c Per Gallon From April 12th to Sept. 12th, 1916

To assure prospective buyers who are hesitating about placing their orders for new cars until the price of gasoline goes down, the following plan has been devised: Each purchaser of a new car from the Overland Sales Rooms, Market street Kingston, will be given a ticket entitling him to gasoline at 32c per gallon, between April 12th and Sept 12th, 1916.

Every prospective owner of an automobile will welcome this effort to relieve a serious situation.

Gasoline is already very high, retailing at 32c per gallon, with every indication of its going higher, but the purchasers of Overland cars need not worry, since they will be furnished gasoline during this period at 32c per gallon, no matter how high it may soar.

FOUGHT IN EASTERN WARS

Martin McDonald Lived Past the Century, Died at Kingston

KINGSTON, April 10.—Special—Martin McDonald, aged one hundred and one, an inmate in the Hotel Dieu, is dead. He saw service in Asia Minor as a soldier. During the Indian Mutiny he was in the force that went to the relief of Cawnpore, and during the engagement at Delhi he was accidentally wounded by a bullet from one of his own men.

Vital Statistics

The vital statistics of the city for the first quarter of 1916 ending on March 31st shows that there were 65 births of which 39 were females and 26 males. There were 28 marriages. The death list was a rather heavy one, namely 69, of which 43 were females and 26 males. The ages of those who passed away were as follows::

13 were under 1 year of age.
7 from 1 year to 10 years.
4 from 10 years to 20 years.
9 from 20 years to 40 years.
14 from 40 years to 60 years
5 from 60 years to 75 years
17 from 75 years and over

PATIENT AT ASYLUM KILLED

LONDON, Ont. April 10.—(Special.)—An unfortunate accident occurred at the London Hospital for the Insane this afternoon, when John Taylor, a Wellington county patient slipped from a roof and was killed. The victim was about thirty-five years of age, and was seen by the night-watch about 4.30. Subsequently he had broken a window railing and attempted to escape over a roof. He was found by an attendant at 6 p.m. where he had fallen. Coroner McLaren was notified and ordered an inquest.

FOUR STEAMERS SUNK

Canadian Press Special.

LONDON, April 10.—The British steamers Zafra, 3,600 tons; Silksworth Hall, 1,800 tons; Glenalmond, 2,900 tons, and Youne, formerly the Kastalia, 1,000 tons, have been sunk.

Narrow Escapes At Lindsay Fire

LINDSAY, April 10.—(Special.)—Fire which had apparently been smoldering for several hours broke out at noon to-day in one of the oldest established brick blacks on Kent street, that of Adams Bro., who conducted a large grocery, flour and feed business, as well as a meat market. Dense smoke made it almost impossible to cope with the fire, but good pressure from five streams of hose prevented it from spreading to adjoining stores. The grocery and meat stores were completely gutted and the stories above badly damaged.

Adams Bros., it is understood, will suffer a heavy loss owing to small incurance, but the building was well covered by insurance. The I.O.O.F. Lodge ornaments, reagalia, etc., were saved. Much damage was done to the Frisco fruit market, also to the numerous mirrors, etc., in the adjoining furniture store of Andresan & Nugent.

The origin of the fire is unknown, although it is supposed to have been caused by overheated furnace pipes. Several firemen and soldiers of the 109th Battalion who were fighting the flames had narrow escapes when a huge refrigerator and cold tsorage plant fell through to the cellar.

AGED JURIST DEAD

CHARLOTTETOWN, P.E.I., April 10.—Special—Richard Reddin, aged seventy-nine, Judge of Probate, died here yesterday. He was admitted to the Bar in 1860, and was appointed Judge in 1892.

"EASTERN CITY" SUNK

Canadian Press Special.

LONDON, April 10.—The British steamer, Eastern City, forty-three hundred tons, has been sunk.

DESERTER GETS 8 MONTHS

ST THOMAS, April 10.—(Special.)—Nelson Harrison, who deserted from the 33rd Battalion at London six months ago, was arrested here Saturday and sentenced by Magistrate Maxwell to eight months in the Ontario Reformatory.

CAPT. BIRDSALL TO RETURN

COBOURG, April 10.—Special—Col. Birdsall of Birdsall's, has received word that his son, Capt. Everett Birdsall, who was so seriously wounded, is so far recovered that he is returning to Canada. Capt. Birdsall went to the front with the 1st Canadian expeditionary force.

Greek Lieutenant Arrested As Spy

Expelled From Karasuli by General Sarrail—Athens Press Excited

LONDON, April 8—The Daily Mail's Saloniki correspondent says that the press of Athens is making trouble on account of the arrest of a Greek lieutenant named Advis by the French.

General Sarrail says that Lieut. Advis was commissary at Karasuli and, wishing to follow the operations on the frontier, went to advanced posts in an automobile fitted with grooved wheels which would run on a railway. Not satisfied with this, and wishing to get information of the movement of French troops, he tapped a telephone connecting with general headquarters and installed a French-speaking soldier at the receiver. He was discovered and ordered by General Sarrail to leave the post within 24 hours. He was forced to return to Saloniki under escort. A common soldier caught under such circumstances would have been shot immediately, but General Sarrail, in deference to the Greek army, only expelled him from Karasuli.

The Athens press is distorting facts, and heaps imprecations on the Allies.

Fire Destroys Two Blocks

THREE RIVERS, Que., April 10.—(Special.)—Two three-story blocks on Platon street were totally destroyed by fire at 3 o'clock this morning—one owned and occupied by Mr. P. A. Gouin as a hardware store, and one owned by Mr. George Morissette and occupied by Joseph Lamothe, tobacconist; Wilfrid Letellier, barber; George Morissette, pool-room proprietor, and the upper part by the St. Louis Club. The fire originated in the cellar of the barber shop. The loss is about $75,000, partly covered by insurance.

Mr. Amedes Jacques, aged eighty-one, living with his nephew, Mr. Prime Sarasin, merchant, on Badeau street, where he had a good view of the fire raging on Platon street, fearing a conflagration, died of fright.

SHELDON ARRESTED AGAIN

Held in Baltimore Charged With Fleecing Women

MONTREAL, April 8.—Arrested in Baltimore under the name of Hoyt, Charles D. Sheldon, the Napoleon of Finance, who left St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary last year, after a five-year term for obtaining money by false pretences in Montreal, once more is grasped by the arm of the law on a charge similar to that on which he was committed here.

He was taken into custody in Baltimore specifically charged with defrauding two women out of $700, but it is alleged that many persons have been swindled out of sums ranging from $300 to $400.

ST. ELOI POSITION IS RETAINED BY BRITISH

LONDON, April 10.—Special—The British War Office to-night issued the following communication:—

"A Fokker monoplane descended inside our lines yesterday. The pilot, who was unwounded, was taken prisoner.

"To-day there was artillery activity about Neuville St. Vaast, Souchez, the Hohenzollern redoubt and Wyschaete. The enemy sprang a mine in the Hohenzollern sector.

"At St. Eloi our troops hold a considerable portion of the ground gained March 27, including three out of four of the main line craters."

Gave Delightful Band Concert

The 80th Battalion Band Renders Fine Programme Before Big House at Griffin's

At Griffin's Opera House last evening a concert was given by the 80th Battalion band to an audience that filled the spacious auditorium to its capacity. Many who desired to attend were unable to gain admittance. The programme presented was varied in its nature and was most pleasing. It opened with a march by the band entitled "Thunder," which was well played. Other selections by the band were "William Tell," "Albion," which introduced a number of national airs; "Poet and Peasant" overture; an Italian serenade entitled Lola, and the 10th Regiment March. These were rendered in a manner which brought forth loud applause and encores were rendered. A cornet solo by Band-Sergt. Harold Cumming entitled "O Dry Those Tears," was especially well given and heartily received. Miss Victoria Stares sang two sacred solos in a pleasing manner. They were, "The Lord is My Light," and "The Penitent." For an encore she sang "Annie Laurie." The National Anthem was played at the close. Lieut. Stares, bandmaster, was master of ceremonies.

FIFTEENTH RESERVE

The parade on Friday night last was most encouraging. A number of new members for the Reserve joined. They see the advantage of learning the drill. Remember that if you have never drilled before you are just the one that should get instruction and we have a class ready to take up your instruction. If you have drilled before you are just the man we want to help us out and help those who have not drilled. If you are not quite sure whether you know the drill or not come down and join and be convinced. Now, it is up to you "to do your little bit." Every Tuesday at 8 o'clock sharp at the Armouries, instructional drill, and every Friday night at 8 o'clock at the Armouries, Platoon drill.

SOCIAL and PERSONAL

Mr. Robert Coulter, Reeve of Stirling village, was in the city today.

Mr. Ted Clarke of this city is in Buffalo, N.Y., on a business trip.

Mr. Ernest Pringle of Toronto, spent Sunday with friends in Belleville.

Sergt. Orval Charleton, 80th Battalion, Belleville, is visiting his parents at Brockville before leaving for overseas.

SCHOOL TEACHER

ANAEMIC, RUN-DOWN, NERVOUS—HOW SHE RECOVERED

There are so many cases like this right here in Belleville that we are publishing this interesting letter with the hope that some of our customers will try Vinol and get the same happy result that Miss Baez did.

Key West, Fla.—"I am a teacher and became anaemic, nervous, run-down, no energy or desire to do anything. I could not sleep and had that languid, nervous feeling that made me a burden to myself. I had taken various tonics without benefit. I heard of Vinol and tried it. Soon I had a good appetite, could sleep all night and it built me up so I have the ambition to do any kind of work." Mary L. Baez, Key West, Fla.

The reason Vinol was so successful in this case is because it is a constitutional remedy that goes to the seat of trouble. The peptonate of iron contained in Vinol enriches and revitalizes the blood, while the strengthening, tissue-building properties of the extractives of cods' livers and beef peptone aid in building up the tired, overworked, rundown system. J. S. McKeown, Druggist, Belleville, Ont.

Within the Military Circle

BELLEVILLE

Lt.-Col. Barragar, Commandant of the Kingston School of Infantry, spent Sunday in this city.

The undermentioned N.C.O.'s of the 80th Battalion, qualified for the ranks set opposite their names on the termination of the Provisional School of Infantry at Kingston, Ont., on the 15th of February, 1916; Sergt. H. L. Bradley, 80th Battalion, sergeant; Sergt. S. Harmer, 80th Battalion, sergeant; Sergt. G. Krupnow, 80th Battalion, sergeant; Sergt. F. L. Hyland, 80th Battalion, sergeant; Sergt. A. Humphreys, 80th Battalion, sergeant; Sergt. C. T. Guymer, 80th Battalion, sergeant; Sergt. J. T. Elsmore, 80th Battalion, sergeant; Sergt. G. M. Brett, 80th Battalion, sergeant; Sergt. I. B. Aikenbrack, 80th Battalion, sergeant; Sergt. R. Fielding, 80th Battalion, sergeant.

Twelve clerks from the Bank of Montreal recently marched down to the recruiting offices of the first section of the 4th Divisional Ammunition Column, under Lt.-Col. Costigan, at the Craig street drill hall, Montreal. They were all good men, and everyone of them passed the medical examination and was sworn in. Their places at the bank have been taken by thirty girls.

Capt. R. Layfield of the 80th Battalion, paid a visit to the armouries at Peterboro on Saturday morning.

Lt.-Col. Adams on behalf of the 155th Battalion, wishes to thank Mr. J. F. Wills, K.C., for a donation of $100 for the Battalion fund. This is another instance of the active interest that Mr. Wills takes in military affairs.

During last week twenty-three men were taken on the strength of the 155th Battalion.

Lieut. McGee and Lieut. Ferguson of the 155th Battalion have returned from Kingston after taking a course of instruction at the Machine Gun School.

The machine gun section of the 155th Battalion is now being organized by Lieut. McGee.

Lt.-Col. Adams, O.C., of the 155th Battalion, left for Trenton this afternoon to inspect the platoon stationed there.

KINGSTON

Lt.-Col. E. W. Rathbun, who left here in command of an artillery brigade, has been made inspector of canteens at Shorncliffe camp.

The officers of the machine gun class presented Sergt. Murray with a fine travelling bag Saturday. The presentation address was delivered by Lieut. Mackenzie, and Sergt. Murray responded in his usual quiet way.

Sergt.-Major Peppiatt, the inveterate recruiting officer of the R. C. H. A., is in Toronto after recruits. If there are any with military inclinations around the big city, "Pep" will find them and land them in Kingston.

It is published for the information of all concerned that many complaints are being received by the Militia Department to the effect that proper supervision is not being given to the fitting of clothing, etc., for troops. From England comes a report that in a large number of cases the jacket is so tight that the sweater coat cannot be worn beneath—consequently a new jacket has to be provided. It is pointed out that Officers Commanding C.E.F. units should take greater care and exercise greater supervision to the fitting of jackets and to see that they are large enough to permit of the sweater jacket being worn underneath in comfort. Unless this supervision is actively carried out Commanding Officers may find this clothing charged back against their units.

The building erected last summer at Barriefield Camp for the combined use of the field hospital and dental corps will be used exclusively this year by Captain Wilson, A.D.D.S., for dental work alone.

Colonel G. Hunter Ogilvie, A.A.G., G.M. No. 3 will proceed on a tour of inspection this date, visiting Brockville, Cornwall and other Eastern points.

Attention has been directed to the fact that when proceeding to ports of embarkation, troops are in the habit of displaying banners outside the trains. This practice must cease and the utmost secrecy maintained in regard to the movement of troops.

IN And ABOUT THE CITY

REMAINS ARRIVED HERE

The remains of the late Mrs. John A. Holgate, who died at Bowmanville, arrived in this city at noon today and were taken to Foxboro, her former home, for interment.

RUNAWAY HORSE

A horse belonging to Mr. W. R. Vallance, and attached to a delivery waggon, ran away on Bridge and Pinnacle streets this morning, but fortunately was stopped before any damage resulted.

A PLEASING ENTERTAINMENT

At Napanee on Saturday night the 80th Battalion gave a concert and were greeted by an audience which filled the Opera House. The program presented was most pleasing in its nature to all present, and encores had to be responded to the numbers rendered. The solos rendered by Misses Victoria and Gertrude Stares were much appreciated.

MORE BELLEVILLE BOYS

The two sons of Mr. and Mrs. William Cochrane of Orillia are both serving. Their grandfather Rev. Dr. Cochrane of Brantford, was of the good old Church Militant fighting stock, and their father will long be remembered by the public spirited interest he took in everything here from education to baseball. Archie Cochrane was one of the young barristers who joined the 34th Battery C.F.A. and is now in the Signal Corps at the front. Willie Cochrane was teller in the Bank of Montreal when he joined the Royal Mounted Rifles at Kamloops, B.C. Both were High School boys here.

RODE WITHOUT A TICKET

Private John Hillan, who belongs to Kingston, was at an early hour on Sunday morning apprehended at the G.T.R. station in this city, by Constable J. M. Tomash, the G.T.R. constable, on a charge of riding upon a passenger train without the necessary ticket. This morning he appeared before Police Magistrate Masson and was allowed to return to Kingston after he had paid all costs incurred in his detention.

CHURCH PARADES OF BATTS.

Under command of Col. Ketcheson, the members of the 80th Battalion yesterday morning attended divine service at St. Andrew's church. The fine battalion band was present and during the service rendered appropriate selections. Rev. Prof. Dall of Queen's College, preached, and his discourse was in keeping with the occasion.

The members of the 155th Battalion, under the command of Col. Adams, attended service at Christ Church. There was a good turnout and the band, under the capable leadership of Bandmaster Hinchey, discoursed most appropriate selections. Rev. Dr. Blagrave, rector, preached, and his discourse was an inspiration to all present.

INTERFERED WITH DEALS MADE BY SIR SAM HUGHES

NEW YORK, April 8.—Major General Sir Sam Hughes has an ardent admirer in New York in Colonel Morgan, former officer of the British army, who claims to have frequently been consulted by the Canadian Minister of Militia upon prices for material required for Canadian overseas forces.

Colonel Morgan, who has offices at 45 Broadway, is a man under fifty years of age of the muscular type of British officer seasoned by many campaigns. He claims to have organized field force canteens during the South African war, and to have been created a "C. B." in recognition of his services. He also claims to have served in the Soudan war, and has twenty years of service to his credit, most of these connected with the army supply branch of the British army.

Worked For Nothing

Colonel Morgan told a newspaper man that he could not be described as the personal agent of the Minister of Militia. His services, he said, were offered and given gratuitously, and although he had made frequent visits to Ottawa and spent over $5,000 of his own money, he had declined to accept anything to cover his expenses despite the fact that Major General Hughes had frequently invited him to state what his expenses were.

Square All The Way

"I met Major General Hughes shortly after the war started," said Col. Morgan, "and at once sized him up to be a great, big, whole-souled, natural born soldier, one with no frills about him, and a man fearless and honest. The impression I gained of him then has been carried out to a finish. I have never known him to be dishonest, or to suggest a dishonest act. He has been square all the way through."

Colonel Morgan proceeded to explain why he offered his services:—"You see I am an old hand at the army supply game. I met Major General Hughes shortly before the war started and as he knew me to be an army supply man he asked me many questions about supplies. He first asked me in 1914 to get prices for harness, etc. These I secured for him from the Studebaker Company and others. He then asked me to gather up all information I could as to prices for uniforms and supplies to troops.

Story of Army Shoes

"One day while I was in his office at Ottawa he asked me to examine some shoes. First he showed me a shoe which he said was a sample of a shoe which the manufacturers were to manufacture. It was a dandy shoe and I told him so. Then he said, 'Now look at this shoe, Morgan. That's the shoe I got.' It was a much inferior shoe, the Minister agreed with me. 'What should we get it for?' asked Maj. Gen. Hughes. "I told him $1.90. 'Preposterous,' was his reply. 'I'll show you,' I said, 'that that shoe can be supplied for $1.90.'

"I wired to a man in Boston and he came up and showed a sample of shoe, and a better shoe, he was prepared to furnish at $1.90.

"Whenever there was a contract to give out Hughes asked me to investigate. I received nothing whatever in the way of remuneration. I did it all out of friendship for the man. Hughes often asked me what my expenses were, and I always said they were nil."

Colonel Morgan then told of a trip to England, from which he returned to New York in the spring of 1915. He again saw Hughes in Ottawa. During that call upon the minister, Sir Sam showed him, he says, a shirt of British army design, which was being manufactured for the British and Canadian forces.

It Was Robbery.

"Do you think that shirt is worth $16 to $18 a dozen?" asked the minister. "No," was my prompt reply. "That's robbery."

"Take it down to New York with you, and see what you can get a shirt like that for," said the minister. I had a man in New York put in a tender to supply as good a shirt at $8 a dozen.

Gasoline From Gas The Latest Profit Source

Columbia Co. Finds That at Present Prices It Pays to Compress Natural Vapor—Midwest Co. To Enter Field

Stockholders of the Columbia Gas & Electric Company were informed in the annual statement yesterday that three plants were being erected in the concern's natural gas fields for the manufacture of gasoline direct from gas. The company plans to add materially to its income from this source, according to President A. B. Leach, and two other plants will shortly be started. By Dec. 1 it is expected that the gasoline output will exceed 20,000 gallons a day.

The company last year produced 16,-598,000,000 cubic feet of gas, of which the Cincinnati district consumed 16,-611,119,000 cubic feet. Mr. Leach said the gas was not injured by the extraction of gasoline, and could be used afterward for fuel and lighting as well as though it had been allowed to flow directly from the wells to the consumer.

Inquiry suggested by the Columbia's plans resulted in statements by oil men that the process was not new, but that it had been used heretofore only to a small extent. It was said that other companies with natural gas lands were preparing to produce "casing head" gasoline from gas. The Midwest Refining Company, one of the leading independent oil corporations, with wells and refineries in the Wyoming fields, was mentioned as one which is planning extensive additions to its facilities for utilizing its gas output in that way.

In the making of gasoline from gas the gas is put under great pressure and reduced to a liquid state. The liquid, according to an oil man yesterday, is highly volatile and of especial value for automobile fuel. Production runs at the rate of about 5 gallons of gasoline to 1,000 cubic feet of gas, which sells at a substantially higher figure than the ordinary distilled product. At the present time, it was said, casing head gasoline sells in the oil fields at about 25 cents a gallon, which is from 5 to 8 cents higher than the refineries get for gasoline produced from petroleum. Automobile users in the natural gas belt who desire a high-grade product fill their tanks at the natural gas plants, paying the higher price willingly.

One reason more use has not been made of the gas-reduction process, it was said, is its relatively greater cost than to make gasoline from crude petroleum. In times past, when gasoline prices were low, the natural gas producers were able to make a greater profit by selling gas than by manufacturing motor fuel, but the great demand and rising price has changed this situation.

BRIGHTER CHILDREN

Children are probably brighter to-day than a generation ago—but are they stronger? That's a grave question. So many pinched faces, dulled eyes and languid feeling make us wonder if they will ever grow into robust, healthy men and women.

If your children catch colds easily, are tired when rising, lack healthy color, or find studies difficult, give them Scott's Emulsion for one month to enrich their blood and restore the body forces to healthy action.

Scott's Emulsion is used in private schools. It is not a "patent medicine", simply a highly concentrated oil-food, free from harmful drugs. It cannot harm; it improves blood; it benefits lungs and strengthens the system. Your druggist has it—refuse substitutes.

NEW RESOLUTION ON THE SHELL INQUIRY

It Will be Introduced by the Liberals in Parliament

OTTAWA, April 8.—All hope of Easter adjournment of Parliament, has now been abandoned, much to the disgust of the members of the House from the far West. The House will run at least to the end of the first week of May and, according to the plans of some of the belligerent members of the Opposition, there may not be adjournment until May 24th. The Carvell-Pugsley wing of the Liberal Party, is now completely dominant. They believe in fighting all the time and on everything.

Although the Government has now appointed a Royal Commission, composed of two of the most eminent judges in Canada, who will start work on the inquiry next week, and the scope of their inquiry has been made broad enough to include any possible new charges, yet the Liberals, it is now intimated, intend to introduce a new shell resolution and endeavor again to embarrass the Government. This resolution will suggest the Royal Commission be given authority to investigate all the operations of the Shell Committee, and that it be appointed by an Act of Parliament instead of under the Inquiries Act. It will not likely be moved until General Sir Sam Hughes returns to Ottawa.

THE MESSAGE OF THE CROSS TODAY

In his fifth sermon in the Lenten series, yesterday morning, Mr. Hubly dealt with the doctrines of the cross, as warning man against the wrong use of his volitional powers, and also proclaiming salvation from the consequences of such misuse. "While to some in the conceit of human wisdom the preaching of the Cross is foolishness, to others it has a message founded upon the deepest thought of the Almighty. All great events have previous preparation. God's purposes unfold as a panorama, and some of the divinest come forth from dense darkness, and mystery fringes the most exalted truths.

"That which can be seen at a glance and known in a moment is only the shadow of something greater, or stepping-stone to something higher. Although the idea of the Cross comes from Calvary, yet it originated in Eden. Here is 'the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world'—slain to meet the ends of both justice and mercy. The stamp of the divine upon man endued him with great powers. He can so obey natural law as to command nature, and apply her forces to the most diabolical purposes. He can, with two bits of sticks, kindle a fire that may destroy the homes, schools, churches, stores, factories and strongholds of the world's great metropolis. He can poison springs and pollute rivers; he can destroy ships of commerce with floating mines of explosives; he can throw bombs from the clouds upon peaceful citizens and hamlets, killing innocent men, women and children; he can plunge nations into the 'hell of war'; he can torture animals, lacerate his neighbors, and blow out his own brains. All these things he can do, he has done, and will do!

"God has produced this volitional being. What shall He do with the work of His own hands when He sees it destroying itself? Shall He take away those volitional powers? To do so would destroy man, and leave but an animal. Shall He put bonds to this creature's excesses, and prevent him working out by noble effort and righteous choice, a destiny of glorious fellowship with his Creator? Or shall He force this rebellious and terrible being to Divine wisdom and goodness.

"God will not do either of these things. Neither will He abandon the rebel to his ruin; this would be a crime against His own creation.

By the cross is provided a full and free salvation, the rebel pardoned, justice vindicated, the prodigal returned to his father's heart, and to the old home with all the privileges of reinstatement."

Alcoholic Statistics Are Asked For

At the last session of the Quebec Legislature, a question was put to the government by Mr. Armand Lavergne which remained unanswered. He asked if the Government had statistics showing the percentage of alcohol contained in Chartreuse, sherry, port, champagne, Bordeaux, Burgundy and beer.

His aim was to induce the Government to levy light duties for license for the sale of beer and light wines, but his question went unanswered. We shall therefore furnish this information, believing that to do so will further the ends of temperance. It is as follows:

	Av. p.c. of Alcohol
Bordeau (Claret)	10.3
Sherry	17.5
Madeira	15.4
Champagne	10.[illegible]
Lager	3.8
German Lager	4.8
Beers and Porters	5
Apple Cider	5
Cognac (Brandy)	17
Whisky (Scotch and Irish)	40
Gin	30
Chartreuse	32
Absinthe	51
Rum	69

This list is not a full one, but the figures are indisputable, and it might include a number of generally received temperance drinks such as ginger wine and beer, which also contain a certain proportion of alcohol, the cause, no doubt, of their savor and taste.

Also this list contains no mention of certain well-known patent medicines, which contain a stronger proportion of alcohol than either Bordeaux wine or beer. Even the famous Grape Juice, so dear to prohibitionists, gives as the result of government analysis a content of 18 to 31 per cent. of proof alcohol. It is therefore plain to be seen that it is not the name under which they are classified that makes drink alcoholic, but the amount of alcohol which they contain.

These are the facts which temperance advocates often overlook, but they cannot be ignored by fair-minded men. Real temperance does not forbid the consumption of all stimulants, but makes a distinction between alcoholic liquors and those drinks which contain only a small quantity of alcohol.

It is to be hoped that once the Quebec Government is in full possession of the facts it will proceed to legislate along the true lines of temperance and not in accordance with the sweeping and dangerous plans of the fanatics. —The Weekly Tattler.

CANADA'S BACON MARKET.

Hog Raising is Again a Promising Section of Farm Industry.

Probably hog raisers have had more ups and downs during the past fifteen years than any other class of producers. The rapidity with which the production can be increased or reduced makes it difficult to keep the supply uniform, hence the periods of depression and high prices have followed each other with unfailing regularity. This ebb and flow of production has been a retarding factor of the business in Canada.

At the present time, however, hog raising is on a firmer footing and has a more promising outlook than at any time in the past. The producer has now a market which will ever be his if he will but study its demands and cater to it, and he has the foundation stock to supply that market.

About fifteen years ago Canadian production was in excess of local demand and the producer not being able to compete with the United States hog raiser in the production of fat pork he turned to Great Britain where a special bacon type of hog was in demand. Appreciating the possibilities in this trade he developed a bacon type and was so successful that by 1903 the bacon exported was worth well over $15,000,000. Following this, however, the rapid increase in population necessitated the keeping of this pork at home, and it was not until several years later that the production again exceeded the demand. Turning again to Great Britain a market was found for the surplus bacon, but by 1913 it amounted to only 6.09 per cent. of Great Britain's total supply of bacon, hams, and pork. In 1915 this had increased to 12.20 per cent., or for the ten months ending October 31 last over $16,000,000 worth of bacon alone was exported.

Denmark has been Canada's greatest competitor in the British market, but even in times of peace, close as she is to the market, we were able to compete successfully with her. The United States is a great hog producing country and exports considerable bacon, but since it does not command the price of Canadian bacon due to the fact that it will not produce the Wiltshire sides which the British public demands, we need not fear competition from that quarter. An illustration of Canada's position lies in the price quoted for the different types of bacon on the British market. Danish is bringing 95 to 99 shillings per cwt.; Canadian between 85 and 88; while United States bacon is quoted at only 72 to 76.

At present the supply of Danish bacon on the British market is very limited and will continue so for some time, perhaps for all time if we grasp the golden opportunity. Germany is getting practically all of Denmark's surplus; more than that, Danish production is decreasing and Danish herds are being depleted. Ireland can only supply a fraction of the hogs required so Great Britain is looking to us to make up the shortage in the bacon supply. Both for financial and patriotic reasons we should put forth a special effort and supply this demand. If we rise to the occasion we should be firmly entrenched and able to hold the market by the time Denmark is again in a position to compete with us.

In addition the French supply has run out, so here is another market which will continue for some years at least.

Our local and home trade demands some fat hogs, but this market is limited and prices so variable that it cannot be depended upon. Most of the hogs for this trade come on the market at one season of the year—late in the fall when the prices are low.

Canada's Meat Export.

Australia and New Zealand are practically the only regular and reliable sources of supply within the Empire, and they together furnished only 284,056 tons of meat in 1915, out of the 664,508 tons imported into the United Kingdom. In addition, there was a small import from Canada, and a still smaller import from South Africa. Although, as yet, the capabilities of these two new sources do not afford any grounds for hoping that they can become important in the immediate future, it should be in the interests of the Empire that everything possible should be done to foster their development. In the states of the Union of South Africa there are probably 6,000,000 cattle and 36,000,000 sheep, but these are not yet suitable to a large extent for exportation to European markets, and will require to be greatly improved in the mass before that source of supply can become really valuable in any emergency such as this country is now passing through. In Canada, the number of cattle is about 6,000,000, besides 2,000,000 sheep—a total which, having regard to the population of the Dominion and the severity of the winter, does not leave a very large margin for export under present conditions of farming.—Trade and Commerce Bulletin."

Year's Work in Northern Ontario.

Commissioner J. G. Whitson in his report on the year's work in Northern Ontario states that 597 miles of new roads have been laid in that country. In addition to this nearly 300 miles of grading and surfacing was done on new and old roads and 113 miles of old roads were partly graded or improved. A dam was also built across the Frederickhouse River, which was 450 feet in length.

An enormous amount of work has been done, but in spite of this the expenditure was only $689,910 as compared with a total of $2,076,833 in the two previous years.

Canada's Quota to Date.

Latest recruiting figures show that about 280,000 men have enlisted in Canada. Nearly 118,000 are from Ontario, 55,000 from Manitoba and Saskatchewan combined, 30,000 from Quebec, and 25,000 each from British Columbia, Alberta, and the Maritime Provinces.

THIS IS THE 616TH DAY THE BRITISH EMPIRE HAS BEEN AT WAR WITH GERMANY.

ONTARIO'S PREMIER AND PROHIBITION.

Without a formal division, and in a most unostentatious manner, the Ontario Legislature has accepted the principle of the Government's bill for suppression, within the province, of the sale of alcoholic beverages until after the war. The occasion was made memorable by a speech of the Premier, Hon. W. H. Hearst, that for faithfulness to convictions and fearlessness of action might well go down in history as marking an epoch in legislation based upon patriotic principle, in that the motive was with a view, independent of party, to benefitting the province as a whole.

"He has not been carried away by the drummed-up demonstrations of professional prohibitionists into the belief that there will be any political profit to his party in the course he has deemed it wise to follow. He has few political friends among those who were prominent in the Committee of One Hundred which did what it could to precipitate the crisis. He took the ground that in the situation in which the Empire finds itself—a situation of almost daily increasing gravity—he was called upon to take every action that in his judgment was calculated to conserve the strength and power and manhood of his province for service in the struggle for the maintenance of British power. He foresaw the consequences of the policy he was pursuing. He knew that it would involve loss to individuals and even to communities, which would injuriously affect the fortunes of his party. He knew that many in his party thought his course was politically unwise. Because of his sense of duty, however, he went forward. In this, also, his course is consistent with the determination of his Government to take upon itself the responsibility of putting the law into operation. The record of past Ontario Governments in dealing with the prohibition issue has been marked by cowardice and humbug unsurpassed anywhere. Under Mowat and Ross the people were invited to express their views in regard to the prohibition of intoxicants, and when the majority declared in favor of the province being made dry, the judgments were quietly ignored. The measure now before the Legislature will go into force after its passage in the same manner as any other act. The Government takes the responsibility for making it operative as well as for making it law. As Mr. Hearst foresaw, he will lose some electoral support in the province, with no prospects that what goes to his opponents will be made good from any other quarter."

Viewed from an impartial standpoint, Premier Hearst's speech was worthy of the position he holds as the head of the Provincial Government, and when considered at leisure by the electorate, the personal losses may not be so great as would at present appear. Wherever there are men who admire courage, Mr. Hearst will be looked upon with the highest respect.

Mr. George P. Graham has focused his intellect upon the bilingual question and burned all its difficulties away, says The Toronto News. What is needed, he says, is the spirit of compromise. But if Mr. Graham is honest he knows that bi-lingualism had no legal status whatever while he was in the Ontario Legislature. The adoption of Regulation 17 was an official admission of certain schools to legal status. The Regulation itself was a compromise. How did the agitators receive it? They would not even try it, not because it was manifestly unfair, but because they knew it could be operated with satisfaction to both races. Such satisfaction would kill the possibility of rousing race hatreds against the Conservative Government. Mr. Graham was chosen by Sir Wilfrid Laurier as his successor in the leadership of the Liberal party. He is copying the Laurier method of pretending that the Conservatives have injured some class of the community and assuming that Liberal government is the only remedy.

Hamilton Herald: Sir Robert Borden's intervention in the matter of the bills extending the charters of the two C.N.R. railway companies is a cheering sign. When the bills came up in Parliament the Premier suggested that they be held over, and of course this was done. Evidently the government has in contemplation some plan of compromise between the conflicting interests of the C.N.R. and the Ontario Hydro-Radial project in the matter of railway construction. It is well known that Sir Robert Borden is in full sympathy with the Hydro movement in this Province, and even if he were not he would not care to alienate sentiment in a Province from which his government draws its chief support.

Some persons are wondering what the result will be when several hundred thousand soldiers return to civil life in Canada after the war is ended. It may be the disorganization will be unnoticed. The Dominion is broad and the men who have done their duty will be spread all over it. Most of them will have friends and relatives in their home towns and all should be in a position to look after themselves until they settle into their old grooves. Also, there is likely to be a demand for their service as workers. The country needs men today and the condition is not likely to change for a long time to come.

Hamilton Spectator: The British Government has lately taken every opportunity to indicate that the several Dominions will be fully consulted in the making of the terms of peace—especially in matters concerning them, as in the enlargement of the South African Union. It has also been more than hinted that hereafter the outlying parts of the Empire, which have shown themselves so ready to contribute men and means in the cause of the Empire, will be allowed to have something to say in the shaping of that diplomacy whereby wars are avoided or decreed.

Hon. A. E. Kemp at the opening of the House on Thursday corrected an error in an answer given to a question in the House on Wednesday. In that reply it was stated that Sir Sam Hughes left Canada for England in 1915 on June 3 and Thursday it was pointed out that the Minister of Militia had, on behalf of the British Government, ratified fuse contracts on June 19. The Acting Minister of Militia explained that the date upon which Sir Sam departed for Europe last year was really July 3.

The Hamburg paper which asks who in Germany cares whether the steamers Sussex and Englishman were torpedoed by submarines or not, probably voices public opinion in the matter much more faithfully than official denials and side-steppings in reply to protests. In Germany, judging by the press comment, there is joy whenever an enemy merchantman is sent to the bottom.

Correspondents writing in behalf of the Hamilton bakers labor to show that bread cannot be made and sold at a profit for six cents the small loaf. The answer is that in Toronto, Brantford and other nearby places bread is sold at that price, and it is reasonable to infer that it would not be sold at that price were it not profitable to do so. If in other places, why not in Hamilton, asks The Herald.

Teacher of Hygiene: "Why must we always be careful to keep our homes clean and neat?"

Little Girl: "Because company may walk in at any moment"

Current Comment

Should Roosevelt receive the Republican nomination, next fall's election in the United States would prove the most dramatic since the days of Abe Lincoln.

Judging by the amount of correspondence on the bilingual question, J. A. Pinard wants the government to produce, he is going to supply the letter writers in the controversy with enough material to keep them going for a long time.

The only aegis that Canada is under is the Union Jack, and when we send troops to Europe or anywhere else to fight alongside the armies of Britain we don't give the slightest consideration to the Monroe doctrine or any other doctrine that is not British.

Holland is not at all likely to go to war with Germany. She is merely taking the precautionary step that all nations will take who have dealing with Germany in the future—loosening her revolver in the holster, as it were.—Montreal Star.

A German officer quartered in Brussels was explaining to an old lady that Germany was many times larger than Belgium. "How is it, then," she inquired, "that you can travel through Germany in a week or so, whereas you have taken over a year to get through Belgium—and you are not through yet?"—Boston Transcript.

Should the man who is able to fight for his country, who ought to fight for his country, but who refuses to fight for his country when his country needs him and calls upon him to fight, be allowed to exircise all the rights and privileges of citizenship? Should such a man be permitted to vote?—Hamilton Herald. This is a deep question.

The match manufacturers of Great Britain and Ireland have decided to suspend sales and deliveries. They claim that the government has taken for fixing the match tax, which became effective last Wednesday, a basis which makes it impracticable to fix prices. The Government taxes matches by the thousand, whereas matches are sold by the box.

One may pass over the fact that Canada is not participating in a war of aggression but helping to give the kind of protection to a weak country against a strong and voracious one which the Monroe Doctrine aims to provide for American nations; and the further fact which materially affects the point at issue that the Monroe Doctrine exists more than anything else for the protection of the United States.—Ottawa Free Press.

The Poets' Corner

BRIGANDS

I used to think a brigand was a person picturesque,
Like what an artist draws when he is sittin' at a desk,
A-breathin' grim defiance while a-threatenin' the health
Of them who put on airs because of their ill-gotten wealth,
I pictured him in fancy like an operatic star,
Who robbed with grace and ease while he was plunking a guitar,
A man who scorned oppression and to humble folks was kind,
But I've had some information an' I've sort o' changed my mind.

The last I heard of any brigand hangin' round the place
Was of a man who didn't shave or even wash his face,
A man who was a grafter, but didn't have the sand
To graft except when he was armed an' had the upper hand,
He was fat an' his expression was suggestive of the mood
In which a pampered porker moves toward his breakfast food.
O' once I thought a brigand bold and dashing, but refined,
But since readin' up about 'em, I have sort 'o changed my mind.

FOR BETTER WOOL.

Clip Last Year Was Just 4,410,935 Pounds Short of Needs.

During the fiscal year of 1914 Canada imported 7,252,119 lbs. of raw wool. Against this, the Canadian exports for the same period were 2,841,184 pounds. Thus, Canada imported 4,410,935 pounds of raw wool more than she exported. Or in other words the Canadian farmers' wool-clip was just that much short of what her manufacturers required, says a writer in The Family Herald.

Surely Canadian farmers can sell good quality wool to their manufacturers as cheaply as they can import it. And why not? The men who grew these four million pounds of foreign wool have no greater advantages than have the Canadian sheepman. For Canada is credited by all competent authorities as being an ideal sheep country. Added to the grower's price of foreign wool are the two great items of freight and middlemen's profits and expense.

Why then are Canadian manufacturers compelled to pay high prices for imported wool? There are a number of reasons advanced in reply to the above question. First Canadian farmers do not grow enough wool. Second, a large percentage of Canadian wool is of very poor quality. This is due to a number of causes. There are a vast number of scrub sheep kept on Canadian farms and the wool is not properly cared for either before or after shearing.

The sheep are allowed to lose flesh in winter, this causes a weak spot in the fibre of the wool. Again, during the period of winter feeding a large amount of dirt, dust, and straw is allowed to get into the wool. At shearing time the sheep are sheared on dirty platforms and the fleeces tied with twine or put into jute sacks, the fibre of which gets into the wool and lowers its value from the manufacturers' standpoint.

Can these conditions be remedied? Most certainly. It is true that there are a number of districts and a large number of individuals who handle their wool in the most modern way and receive a correspondingly higher price. But on the majority of farms there is room for improvement.

The first step in the direction of better wool and more of it is to improve the breeding stock. This can best be accomplished through the medium of the farmer's club and live stock associations. Just now the Dominion Government through the live stock branch of the Department of Agriculture will loan to any group of ten farmers in a district where there is no farmers' club, a male animal of any one of the more important breeds. This is a chance that should not be overlooked by any one who is desirous of improving his flock.

Australian and New Zealand farmers are notable as producers of wool and mutton. And these men have found it a paying proposition to give from $500 to $3,000 for a pure bred ram. In Argentina, another great sheep country, there are instances of $5,000 being paid for a pure bred male. Why then should Canadian farmers hesitate to give a few dollars more than the butcher would give for a pure bred ram.

The breeds found most suitable for Canadian farmers, according to local conditions and the character of the land includes the following: For hilly and rolling sections the Cheviot and Cotswold. For level and intervale land the Shropshire, Oxford, Suffolk, Southdown, and Dorsets. For lowlands, the Leicester, Lincoln and Border-Lincoln. Classed according to their wools, the British breeders, and they are most suitable to Canadian conditions, are as follows: Longwooled-Lincoln, Cotswold, Leicester, and Border-Leicester. Medium-wooled-Cheviot. Down-wools-Shropshire, Oxford, Hampshire, Suffolk, Southdown, and Dorsets.

Reindeer in Canada.

Efforts of the Dominion Government to propagate reindeer in the Peace River and the Great Slave Lake district in north-western Canada, have proved unsuccessful, according to a recent report on the subject. Of the original herd of 50 which were sent from Labrador in 1911, there is now but one survivor. The chief difficulty was the bull flies of the north which drove the reindeer frantic in the summer. The result was that they stampeded through the strongest enclosures their keepers could build, and were lost, or shot by the Indians. Reindeer have thrived in Alaska, but apparently the Peace River country and the Valley of the Mackenzie were not suitable for them. Later an effort may be made to introduce them in the Yukon, where there seems to be no reason why they should not succeed.

Dental Corps Provided For.

It is announced that the army dental corps of the Canadian expeditionary force will be under a director-general, with the rank of lieutenant-colonel, and there will be a lieutenant-colonel and a major in charge of the work of each division. There will be seven officers on the headquarters staff of the army dental corps and 14 dental surgeons. In each division there will be 30 dental surgeons with 32 orderlies and 32 batmen.

The organization for service in Canada in the various military divisions includes 111 surgeons and corps officers and 212 orderlies and batmen.

Letter Accepted as Will.

Pierre Jean Marie Charles, a French reservist, who left Montreal for the front shortly after the war began, and died from wounds received in France on May 24, 1915, wrote a letter shortly before his death to Mr. P. Beauvais, Manager of the City & District Savings Bank, Montreal, asking Mr. Beauvais, in case of the death of the writer, to hand over to a cousin, Marcelle Charles, money he had on deposit in the bank in question. This letter was accepted a few days ago by the court as a valid holograph will.

PRECIOUS POSTAGE STAMPS.

Issues That Bring Joy to the Heart of the Philatelist.

One of the questions asked us most frequently is, Which is the rarest of all the stamps? There are not a few claimants for this honor, all of which are exceedingly rare, stamps of which but a single copy is known to exist. Indeed, there is evidence which leads us to believe that some stamps were printed and used of which no copies at all are known to be in existence.

Of those stamps of which only one copy is known, the first is a postmaster's provisional issued at Boscawen, N. H. Another is a stamp from British Guiana. Only one copy of this is known and is in a celebrated collection in Paris, probably the largest collection in the world.

In 1893 the Niger Coast Protectorate issued a series of surcharged stamps, all of which are scarce, and some of them are in the ranks of the world's greatest rarities. This refers especially to the twenty shilling values. Of the 20 shillings, surcharged in violet, only five copies were ever printed; of the vermilion surcharge, only two copies, and of the black surcharge, only one copy.

As there is and can be only one copy of this last stamp, it is justly entitled to be considered the rarest of all stamps. It probably would not sell so high as the better known and more popular "postoffice" stamps of Mauritius. Yet of these there are known fourteen copies of the penny and twelve of the twopenny.—St. Nicholas.

The Eternal Lover

by Edgar Rice Burroughs

Copyright, 1914, by W. G. Chapman

In the open moonlight before the rose thicket Victoria Custer paced back and forth. A dozen times she reached the determination to seek the first opportunity upon the morrow to give Billy Curtiss an affirmative answer to the question he had asked her the night before—the night of the earthquake—but each time that she thought she had disposed of the matter definitely she found herself involuntarily comparing him with the heroic figure of her dream man, and again she must need rewage her battle.

As she walked in the moonlight two pairs of eyes watched her every movement—one pair, clear and black, from the rose thicket; the other, flaming yellow green, hidden in a little clump of bushes at the point where she turned in her pacing to retrace her steps at the point farthest from the watcher among the roses.

Twenty times Nu was on the point of leaping from his concealment and taking the girl in his arms, for to him she was Nat-ul, daughter of Tha, and it had not been a hundred thousand years, but only yesterday, the day before, that he had last seen her.

Yet each time something deterred him—a strange, vague, indefinable fear of this wondrous creature who was Nat-ul and yet who was not Nat-ul, but another made in Nat-ul's image.

The strange things that covered her fair figure seemed to have raised a barrier between them—the last time that he had walked hand in hand with her upon the beach naught but the soft skin of a red doe had clothed her.

Her familiar association, too, with these strange people, coupled with the fact that she spoke and understood their language, only tended to remove her further from him.

Nu was very sad and very lonely, and the sight of Nat-ul seemed to accentuate rather than relieve his depression. Slowly there was born within him the conviction that Nat-ul was no longer for Nu, the son of Nu. Why he could not guess, but the bitter fact seemed inevitable.

The girl had turned quite close to him now and was retracing her steps toward the bushes twenty yards away.

Behind their screening verdure Old Raffles, the sheep stealer, twitched his tufted tail and drew his steel thewed legs beneath him for the spring, and as he waited just the faintest of purrs escaped his slavering jowls.

Too faint the sound to pierce the dull senses of the twentieth century maiden, but to the man hiding in the rose thicket twenty paces farther from the lion it fell sinister upon his unspoiled ear.

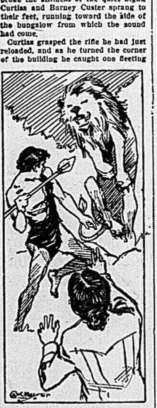
Like a bolt of lightning—so quickly his muscles responded to his will—the cave man hurtled the intervening rose bushes with a single bound, and, raised spear in hand, bounded after the unconscious girl.

The great lion saw him coming, and, less he be cheated of his prey, leaped into the moonlight before his intended victim was quite within the radius of his spring.

The beast emitted a horrid roar that froze the girl with terror, and then in the face of his terrific charge the figure of a naked giant leaped past her. She saw a great arm, wielding a mighty spear, hurl the weapon at the infuriated beast—and then she swooned.

As the savage note of the lion's roar broke the stillness of the quiet night, Curtiss and Barney Custer sprang to their feet, running toward the side of the bungalow from which the sound had come.

Curtiss grasped the rifle he had just reloaded, and as he turned the corner of the building he caught one fleeting glimpse of something moving near the bushes fifty yards away. Raising his weapon, he fired.



She Saw a Great Arm Wielding a Mighty Spear.

The whole household had been roused by the lion's deep voice and the answering boom of the big rifle, so that scarcely a minute after Barney and Curtiss reached the side of the prostrate girl a score of white men and black were gathered about them.

The dead body of a huge lion lay scarce twenty feet from Victoria Custer, but a hurried examination of the girl brought unutterable relief to them all, for she was uninjured.

Barney lifted her in his arms and carried her to her room, while the others examined the dead beast. From the center of the breast a wooden shaft protruded, and when they had drawn this out—and it required the united efforts of four strong men to do it—they found that a stone tipped spear had passed straight through the savage beast's heart.

"The zebra killer," said Brown to Greystoke.

The latter nodded his head.

"We must find him," he said. "He has rendered us a great service. But for him Miss Custer would not be alive now."

But though twenty men scoured the grounds and the plain beyond for several hours, no trace of the killer of Old Raffles could be found, and the reason that they did not find him abroad was because he lay directly beneath their noses in a little clump of low, flowering shrubs, with a bullet wound in his head.

The next morning the men were examining the stone headed spear upon the veranda just outside the breakfast room.

"It's the oddest thing of its kind I ever saw," said Greystoke. "I can almost swear that it was never made by any of the tribesmen of present day Africa. I once saw similar heads, though, in the British museum. They had been taken from the debris of a prehistoric cave dwelling."

From the window of the breakfast room just behind them a wide eyed girl was staring in breathless wonderment at the rude weapon, which to her presented concrete evidence of the reality of the thing she had thought but another hallucination—the leaping figure of the naked man that had sprung past her into the face of the charging lion an instant before she had swooned.

One of them turned and saw her standing there.

"Ah, Miss Custer!" he exclaimed. "No worse this morning, I see, for your little adventure of last night. Here's a memento that your rescuer left behind him in the heart of Old Raffles. Would you like it?"

The girl stepped forward, hiding her true emotions behind the mask of a gay smile. She took the spear of Nu, the son of Nu, in her hands, and her heart leaped in half savage pride as she felt the weight of the great missile.

"What a man he must be who wields such a mighty weapon!" she exclaimed.

Barney Custer was watching his sister closely, for with the discovery of the spear in the lion's body had come the sudden recollection of Victoria's description of her dream man: "He carries a great spear, stone tipped. I should know it the moment that I saw it."

The young man stepped to his sister's side, putting an arm about her shoulders. She looked up into his face, and then in a low voice that was not audible to the others she whispered: "It is his, Barney. I knew that I should know it."

For some time the young man had been harassed by fears as to his sister's sanity. Now he was forced to entertain fears of an even more sinister nature or else admit that he, too, had gone mad.

If he were sane then it was the truth that somewhere in this savage land a savage white man roamed in search of Victoria. Now that he had found her would he not claim her?

Barney Custer shuddered at the thought. He must do something to avert a tragedy, and he must act at once. He drew Lord Greystoke to one side.

"Victoria and I must leave at once," he said. "The nervous strain of the earthquake and this last adventure have told upon her to such an extent that I fear we may have a very sick girl upon our hands, if I do not get her back to civilization and home as quickly as possible."

Greystoke did not attempt to offer any remonstrances. He, too, felt that it would be best for Miss Custer to go home. He had noted her growing nervousness with increasing apprehension.

It was decided that they should leave on the morrow. There were fifty black carriers anxious to return to the coast, and Butzow and Curtiss readily signified their willingness to accompany the Nebraskan and his sister.

As he was explaining his decision to Victoria a black servant came excitedly to Lord Greystoke. He told of the finding of a dead ewe in the compound.

The animal's neck had been broken, the man said, and several strips of meat cut from its haunches with a knife. Beside it in the soft mud of the inclosure the prints of an unshod human foot were plainly in evidence.

Greystoke smiled.

"The zebra killer again!" he said. "Well, he is welcome to all he can eat."

Before he had finished speaking Brown, who had been nosing round in the garden, called to him from a little clump of bushes beside the spot where the lion's body had lain.

"Look here, Clayton," he called; "here's something we overlooked in the darkness last night."

The men upon the veranda followed Greystoke to the garden. Behind them came Victoria Custer, drawn as though by a magnet to the spot where they had gathered.

CHAPTER VI.

The Ancient Trail.

In the bushes was a little pool of dried blood, and where the earth near the roots was free from sod there were several impressions of a bare foot.

"He must have been wounded," explained Brown, "by Curtiss' shot. I doubt if the lion touched him. The beast must have died instantly the spear entered its heart. But where can he have disappeared to?"

Victoria Custer was examining the grass a little distance beyond the bushes. She saw what the others failed to see—a drop of blood now and then leading away in the direction of the mountains to the south.

At the sight of it a great compassion welled in her heart for the lonely, wounded man who had saved her life and then staggered, bleeding, toward the savage wilderness from which he had come. It seemed to her that somewhere out there he was calling to her now and that she must go.

She did not call the attention of the others to her discovery, and presently they all returned to the veranda, where Barney again took up the discussion of their plans for the morrow's departure. The girl interposed no objections. Barney was delighted to see that she was apparently as anxious to return home as he was to have her; he had feared a flat refusal.

Barney had wanted to get a buffalo bull before he left, and when one of the Waziri warriors brought word that morning that there was a splendid herd a few miles north of the ranch Victoria urged him to accompany the other men upon the hunt.

"I'll attend to the balance of the packing," she said. "There's not the slightest reason in the world why you shouldn't go."

And so he went, and Victoria busied herself in the gathering together of the odds and ends of their personal belongings.

All morning the household was alive with its numerous duties, but after luncheon, while the heat of the day was greatest, the bungalow might have been entirely deserted for any sign of life that there was about it. Lady Greystoke was taking her siesta, as were practically all of the servants.

Victoria Custer had paused in her work to gaze out of her window toward the distant hills far to the south. At her side, nosing his muzzle into her palm, stood one of Lord Greystoke's great wolf hounds, Terkoz. He had taken a great fancy to Victoria Custer from the first and whenever permitted to do so remained close beside her.

The girl's heart filled with a great longing as she looked wistfully out toward the hills that she had so feared before. She feared them still, yet something there called to her.

She tried to fight against the mad desire with every ounce of her reason, but she was fighting against an unreasoning instinct that was far stronger than any argument she could bring to bear against it.

Presently the hound's cold muzzle brought forth an idea in her mind, and with it she cast aside the last semblance of attempted restraint upon her mad desire. Seizing her rifle and ammunition belt, she moved noiselessly into the veranda.

There she found a number of leashes hanging from a peg. One of these she snapped to the hound's collar. Unseen she crossed the garden to the little patch of bushes where the dried blood was. Here she gathered up some of the brown stained earth and held it close to Terkoz's nose; then she put her finger to the ground where the trail of blood led toward the south.

"Here, Terkoz!" she whispered.

The beast gave a low growl as the scent of the new blood filled his nostrils and, with nose close to the ground, started off, tugging upon the leash, in the direction of the mountains upon the opposite side of the plain.

Beside him walked the girl. Across her shoulder was slung a modern big game rifle, and in her left hand swung the stone tipped spear of the savage mate she sought.

What motive prompted her act she did not even pause to consider. The results she gave not the slightest thought. It seemed the most natural thing in the world that she should be seeking this lonely, wounded man. Her place was at his side. He needed her—that was enough for her to know.

She was no longer the pampered, petted child of an effete civilization. That any metamorphosis had taken place within her she did not dream, nor is it certain that any change had occurred, for who may say that it is such a far step from one incarnation to another, however many countless years of man measured time may have intervened?

Darkness had fallen upon the plain and the jungle and the mountain, and still Terkoz forged ahead, nose to the ground, and beside him moved the slender figure of the graceful girl.

Now the roar of a distant lion came faintly to her ears, answered, quite close, by the moaning of another—a sound that is infinitely more weird and terrifying than the deeper throated challenge. The cough of the leopard and the uncanny laughter of hyenas added their evidence that the night prowling carnivora were abroad.

DOUBLE MEANING OF AN ENGLISH WORD

By EDITH F. BAKER.

[Copyright, 1909, by American Press Association.]

It was a sad day for Emery Blatchford when Fannie Ellsmere told him that she was engaged to Tom Edwards. And the girl who had chosen between these two young men did not choose wisely. Edwards never got on, while Blatchford, having one of those cheery dispositions that win people continually, found friends to drop plums into his mouth. And so it happened that while the former was spending what little his wife had when he married her the latter was prospering.

One year when the fall elections came round the managers of the party in power, fearing they would lose the fight, looked about for candidates who would be especially acceptable to the people. Among those they selected was Emery Blatchford, who was put up for sheriff and elected by an overwhelming majority.

Now, it happened that a year before this election Edwards had died, leaving his widow not only penniless, but with a chattel mortgage on her household effects, for the payment of even the interest on which there were no funds. One of the first duties devolving upon the newly elected sheriff was the serving of a writ upon Mrs. Edwards, which would deprive her of her only remaining possession, her furniture. When Blatchford came across this paper he sighed, put it in a pigeonhole, where, if he had had the power to keep it there, it would have remained till the crack of doom. Indeed he paid no further attention to it till the plaintiff in the case made such an ado about the delay that the sheriff was obliged to serve the writ.

He gave the paper to a deputy, but before the man had reached the door called him back. He couldn't bear that the unwelcome process should be enacted without being softened so far as possible. And to whom could he trust such softening but himself? Putting the document into his pocket, he waited till after office hours—indeed, till a proper hour for calling in the evening, then went to the widow's cottage. He was received with some surprise. When he had last visited Mrs. Edwards she was Miss Ellsmere and had told him that she was engaged to his rival. Blatchford beat about the bush for an hour before he could bring himself to mention the all important subject. Then he said:

"I presume you know that judgment has been entered against you in the matter of the notes secured by chattel mortgage on your furniture?"

"Yes; I had no money with which to even try to save what I have left," she replied, wiping a tear from her eye.

"And you may know," the sheriff proceeded, "of the attachment I have for you."

A sudden checking of tears, a movement indicating that something important had caught the widow's attention followed the sheriff's remark.

"I knew," she replied hesitatingly, "that you had an attachment for me, but—but I was not aware that it had endured."

"The attachment I have for you," he said gently, sympathetically, "is different from the one which you mention. It is a more practically important one. An attachment that"—

He was stalled. The widow essayed to help him.

"I can understand," she said, "the difference between the—the feeling one might have for a girl and that same feeling after all that has intervened between then and now. I, too, have come to understand myself better."

The sheriff, instead of opening his legal document, opened his ears, to say nothing of his eyes. This, however, the widow did not see since her own eyes were bent on the floor, while her ears were strained to hear the expected declaration. Blatchford could not feel any certainty that he was either understood to be entering upon a proposal or that, if so, he was encouraged. He resolved upon one more effort to make clear the business on which he had come.

"This word attachment," he began—"this word attachment has different meanings. It is at once a legal term and"— "I know," she sighed.

"I mean, too, a condition of the heart. My attachment for you is as warm, as deep, as unalterable as it ever was. Give me the right to stand as your protector."

Blatchford took her unresisting form into his arms, where she rested in happy contentment for some time without speaking. Finally she looked up into his face and said:

"Do you know that when you began to talk about the word attachment having a legal meaning, for a moment I was seized with an idea that you, being sheriff"—

"I being sheriff?"

"You having spoken about the horrid suit."

"Well?"

"That you were talking about that."

"How could you suppose," he replied, drawing her closer to him, "that I would have anything to do with that matter unless, perhaps, to bring you some good news concerning it?"

"What good news?"

"W-why, the plaintiff will renew the note."

"For what reason?

"It will be indorsed."

"What's that?"

"It's the result of the 'attachment' I was speaking to you about."

THE DEACONS' SITES

By M. QUAD.

[Copyright, 1909, by Associated Literary Press.]

When it had been finally decided to erect a church building for a certain sect at Charlestown there came the question of the site. It was a scattered village, and there were many old people that wanted the building as close to them as possible. There were others that thought the site that would show off the church to the greatest advantage and that at the same time could be bought the cheapest, was the one to be selected. It wasn't to be anything grand, but if located right it would make up for that in a measure. It took six months to settle the question of the site. One faction wanted it on the crest of a hill and the other at the end of the bridge over the river. Deacon Henderson owned one site and Deacon Frazer the other, and each wanted $200 for the land. Each became the leader of a faction.

At first all the talk was in a good natured way, as becomes such a subject, but as time went on acrimony crept in and argument became dispute. The pastor was anxious to see the building under way, but he could not favor either faction. He could simply counsel brotherly love, and when brotherly love is stretched too far it gets pretty thin and weak. Deacon Henderson, who owned the hill site, went about saying:

"You can put a cooper shop most anywhere, but when it comes to a meeting house there's only one place for it, and that's on a hill, if there are any hills around. I most think that's what the Lord created hills for."

"Oh, Deacon Henderson may talk that way," Deacon Frazer would reply, "but he's all wrong. You put a meeting house on a hill and you make a circus of it."

The dispute finally resulted in the hilltop being offered at half price, and the congregation accepted the offer. The minister went to bed that night with thankful heart, and a great sigh of relief passed over the town. Everything seemed to be settled at last, and men began preparing the foundations of the building. But there are wheels within wheels. Deacon Frazer had been defeated on the site, but he had a shot in reserve. When the frame of the building was up and roofed over he brought out statistics to show that nine-tenths of the church buildings struck by lightning were buildings standing on hills. There was every chance that this one would be struck. He wanted it understood that he would never enter it of a Sunday when there seemed the slightest chance of a thunderstorm. His faction followed him in his argument, and there was another wrangle on hand. If his site had been chosen there was a big walnut tree that would have deflected and received any thunderbolt on its way to destroy the church.

"Yes, we know that a building on a hill is more exposed to lightning than a building in a hollow," Deacon Henderson would reply, "but we are going to prepare for that. We shall put up a lightning rod. It'll catch all the thunderbolts that come along and run 'em into the ground. We don't care how much ground they tear up, so's they let the church alone."

It was the era when men pinned their faith to lightning rods and defied old Jove to do his worst. It was settled that a rod on the church would do the business, and now all disputes seemed to be ended. The truce lasted just four weeks. The building was more than half finished when Deacon Frazer came to the front to stir up things again. He had given the matter of that lightning rod much thought, and he had come to the conclusion that it was flying in the face of Providence to put one up. It was saying to the Lord that they couldn't trust him.

Deacon Henderson was hard put to answer these arguments. They were a sort of defi to the other faction. If the church had been built in the hollow the Frazer faction would have depended on Providence. Now that it was being built on a hill the Henderson faction was going to give Providence the shake and go to the expense of $90 to put up a lightning rod. Were they whole Christians or half Christians? If they believed that man was greater than Providence, then Satan would be glad to see the building finished and dedicated. Here was a yawning pit and but one way to bridge it. The lightning rod faction took that way by announcing that there would be no rod. Everything would be left to Providence. This really ended all dispute. Deacon Frazer tried hard to think of some other point, but nothing would occur. Only when he and the other deacon would meet he would shake his head and say:

"I dunno about that church, deacon. Gimme a church in a holler, with a big walnut tree five rods away, and I'll trust Providence for the rest."

"There she is, right up on the hill," Deacon Henderson would reply, "and we're asking Providence to protect her without the help of any trees."

The church had been dedicated a month when there came a terrible storm one night. First the wind blew with fury, and then there came rain and thunder and lightning, and all of a sudden a crash that lifted half the town out of bed. When the storm ceased it was found that the walnut tree in the hollow had been struck and shivered and that the church on the hill had been blown from its foundations and rolled down the hillside into the creek. Then at once arose the question, "Which did Providence hit first?" And today, after a lapse of five years, it is still an undecided question.

Groom: "The first time you deceive me I'll kill myself."

Bride: "And what will you do the second time?"

Is It Merely Indigestion?

It's queer about life. We like to talk about its large issues. But most of them, when reduced to their lowest terms, are extremely simple.

An old minister's wife never used to hear her husband preach an especially accusing or intolerant sermon without wondering what she had been giving him to eat that did not agree with him. For she had learned by experience that even the color of his theology was affected by his digestion.

A prominent citizen admits that for years life looked like a dreary desert and a barren waste to him until one day a doctor exclaimed, "Why, man, do you realize that you are going about this earth without a particle of hydrochloric acid in your system?"

The full significance of this highly important fact had never before pierced the outer rim of his consciousness, but he learned then that to most humans a certain proportion of this acid is essential to digestion. "And," he went on to say, "after a few weeks I felt like going around preaching the gospel of ten drops of dilute hydrochloric acid in a glass of water after meals to all of suffering humanity." It was all so perfectly simple and so almost ridiculous to know that so much of the value of life itself could turn on so small a matter as ten little drops of fluid with your food.

It's the old story of the horseshoe nail. For the want of a nail a kingdom was lost, and there are more trifling little nails missing in every day life than we imagine. And this is not by way of urging us to brood over our ills, but to examine them sufficiently to find out how simple some of them are.

Perhaps it isn't a matter of ten drops of anything that will make this world a fairer place for you. Perhaps it is a simple little pair of reading glasses that will remove your eye strain and eliminate your headaches and sweeten your disposition. Perhaps it is nothing but a foolish little corn that is pressing on a nerve and making you think you are going to be laid up for life with rheumatism or paralysis or what not. But if it is a small thing on which much of comfort and health depends, how foolish not to take the trouble to set it right.

For, after all, it takes more than sentiment to live well and happily. It takes common sense and as much decent interest in the care of the machine you live with, which is your own body, as you would bestow upon your dollar watch or your typewriter, not to mention your sewing machine or your automobile.

The Brown Thrasher.

The brown thrasher is one of our most useful birds. He measures eleven and one-half inches in length. Perched upon the very top of a tree, which usually is not a very tall one, with head up and tail down, he pours out a flood of music—high notes and low notes, smooth notes and rough notes, all jumbled together as if the singer were really beside himself.

Following are a few marks by which he can be distinguished from all the other thrushlike birds: The two white wing bars, the extraordinarily long tail, which is a bright reddish brown, and the long continued, bright and cheerful carol which is heard in the morning (this favorite time for singing), consisting of all sorts of musical sounds. While the farmer is planting the seed he cries, "Drop it, drop it—cover it up, cover it up—pull it up, pull it up, pull it up." His call is a clear whistled "wheuu."

Game of Cities.

In this game the players sit in a circle around a table, and each one is provided with a piece of paper and a pencil. The leader asks them to write at the head of the paper the name of a city, each being different. They are allowed five minutes to make up a sentence, each word of which must begin with the letters composing the name of the city. For example:

City—Chicago.

Sentence—Came home in carriage after going out.

If any one fails to have a correct sentence at the end of five minutes he must pay a forfeit.

Jumping Letters.

1. Jump a piece of marsh land and find part of Great Britain.
2. Jump able to endure hardship and find yourself held in moral obligation.
3. Jump to clean with a brush and find yourself in tears.
4. Jump articles of household furniture and find the most competent of men.
5. Jump a marsh plant and find borders.

Answers.—1, Swale—Wales; 2, tough—ought; 3, sweep—weeps; 4, tables—ablest; 5, sedge—edges.

Ideas About the Sun.

In ancient times the philosophers held very erroneous notions concerning the size of the sun. Anaximander thought that it might be nearly as large as the then known earth, including southern Europe, northern Africa and western Asia. Anaxagoras declared it could be no larger than Greece and her islands. Heraclitus convinced his hearers that it was about the size of a man's head.

I'll bind myself to that which, once being right, will not be less right when I shrink from it.—Kingsley.

THE GRURING VILLA

By F. A. MITCHEL.

[Copyright, 1909, by American Press Association.]

"Whose is that villa?" asked a tourist, pointing to a residence on the Lake of Como. The person questioned replied by a story. And this is the story:

Two men stood on the steamboat landing at Menaggio, on the northern shore of the lake. Herman Trupp, the elder, said to the other, a youngster of twenty:

"Martin, I have something to say to you. You know how near us is the boundary line of Switzerland. Well, for years I have been smuggling goods over the border to the lake and once across it have had no trouble in selling them in Italy. But the government revenue boat which they have recently put on the lake turned its searchlight on me last night while pulling a boat load from shore to shore. I was stopped and arrested. I will be tried, fined and imprisoned. I made a mistake. I should have divided my profits with the revenue officers."

"Well?" said the other.

"You wish to marry Sophie Reisser, but you and she are both too poor to marry. I will enable you to wed. I have bribed the officers to give me but six months' imprisonment and to accept a substitute. If you will serve my term for me I will give you 5,000 francs."

Martin Gruring was thoughtful for a time, then said, "I will talk with Sophie about it."

"That I must forbid," said Trupp. "I would not trust a woman with such an important secret."

"But what will she think?"

"Oh, you can tell her you are going away for a short time to earn the wherewithal to set up housekeeping."

The result of this proposal was that Martin acted as Trupp's substitute in prison, first telling Sophie the story that had been suggested. He had no sooner been imprisoned than Trupp told Sophie that her lover was deceiving her—that he had committed a crime for which he was being punished. To prove what he said he took her to the prison where Martin was confined and showed her her lover behind bars. Then he held his wealth, 500,000 francs, up before her as a bait and succeeded in catching her for his wife. Soon after the marriage the couple disappeared from the Como region.

One summer an elderly American gentleman and his wife rode up in their automobile to a hotel in Interlaken, Switzerland, and called for a guide. One was introduced, and the American engaged him to conduct himself and wife to the summit of the Jungfrau. Then the landlord said that he had been a mountaineer in his youth and only one guide was needed. He would himself act as such. The party after proceeding on the mountain railway to the snow line started from there to make the ascent of the peak, the guide in front, the lady next, and the husband in the rear, all bound together by a rope.

At one place in the ascent their path led along the edge of a rock that sloped nearly straight downward on both sides. Suddenly beneath the American's feet the ice gave way and he went down. His wife fell on her face, and the guide, realizing that she would be pulled down by her husband, let himself over the other side for a balance. Suspended thus he at once set about cutting steps and soon secured a foothold. But the American was a heavy man and the rope was greatly strained. At one point it crossed a sharp rock and the efforts of the man hanging over the chasm to save himself gradually wore it thin, and at last it broke. He slid down thousands of feet below to his death.

Meanwhile the guide, foreseeing what must eventually happen, and knowing that when the rope broke the shock might dislodge the lady, had been hacking the ice with his ax and climbing until he had secured a firm position. When the rope parted she fell toward him, and, catching her, he lifted her again into position. Then, when she was sufficiently recovered to stand, he cut his way up to the edge of the rock and the two began to descend. Reaching a point of safety, the lady fell in a faint. The guide caught her in his arms. Placing his flask—all guides carry flasks—to her lips, she revived and met the two eyes of the guide looking down into hers. But she saw only the horror of her husband suspended over that awful abyss. She shuddered and moaned.

"Sophie," said the guide with a world of sympathy.

There was something in the voice that, striking a familiar chord, served to turn her vision from the horror so recently experienced. She saw a young face grown to middle age. Then the expression of pain returned, but this time from a different cause. She saw the lover of her youth as she had seen him in a felon's prison. He divined her thought.

"Do you know," he said, "that I went to prison voluntarily to serve the term of another?"

"No. Whose term?"

"Never mind that. To take the place of a smuggler I was paid a sum of money which would have enabled us to marry."

Another look of infinite pain passed over her face. Instinctively she knew the story as it has been told. The guide took her by the hand to lead her down; but, seeing that she was unequal to the task, he took her in his arms and carried her to the railway station. Then, after a brief rest, they proceeded to Interlaken.

Later, as husband and wife, with the Trupp fortune they built the Gruring villa.

WITH FLYING COLORS.

The Incident That Ended His Period of Probation.

By CLARICE ENGLE.

[Copyright, 19[illegible] by Associated Literary Press.]

A man picked his way slowly along the sun baked trail that led westward to Taggart across the desert. It was high noon and the day had been hot and dry and the man's throat was parched with thirst. This did not tend to lessen his ferocious aspect nor to soften the anger that glowed in his eyes. It was all due to his visit that morning to the little ranch a few miles behind, for there he had met with the first failure in his life. He had proposed and been rejected.

It was not Bill Warren's nature to be balked by anything. He usually carried matters his own way and with a high hand, as a result of which he was looked upon as a sort of local "bad man." But this cognomen was applied to him only by people who did not know Bill. In reality no better nor kinder natured man than he ever rode into Taggart.

But Sue Patterson was one of those who were not intimately acquainted with Warren, and this assertiveness she looked upon as something evil. Therefore, although otherwise she liked Warren better than any other of her admirers, she felt that she was acting quite right when she rejected his offer of marriage.

All the consolation that she had given him in answer to his earnest pleading was that she would put him on an indefinite probation and if he came through it with flying colors why —she would think about it.

All of which Warren took too literally, and he thought that she had spoken thus only to soften her refusal. He became angry at the thought of it.

She don't care nothin' fer me," he muttered savagely, "an' I know why. It's all along of that sneakin' coyote, Ralph Henderson. Been to Frisco an' seen a few things an' comes out here to lord it over us. I know the brand. She's plumb loco over the cuss, too, an' he ain't no man. No," he finished spitefully, "he ain't no man."

He rode on across the desert in a sort of dulled consciousness, with his hat pulled well down over his eyes. At length, toward the middle of the afternoon, he came into the foothills. Before him lay the Tooth of Time, the largest mountain in that vicinity. Beyond it, ten miles to the westward, was Taggart. This necessitated his taking the trail that wound round the slope of the mountain. This trail was hardly more than a well trodden footpath and was only wide enough to permit a single rider upon it. One side of it sloped up at an angle of almost eighty degrees. The other formed the side of a precipice that dropped a sheer 200 feet to the sandy ravine below.

As he rode over the trail, lost in thought, Warren was dead to external sounds. He did not notice the fidgeting of his horse nor his frightened whinnies. He had no intimation whatever that any one was approaching along the trail from the opposite direction. And yet not a hundred feet ahead of him a horse and rider were rounding the curve of the mountain. Neither noticed the other until they were fifty feet apart. Then by some strange intuition both raised their heads. Recognition was mutual and instantaneous, for the man ahead of Warren was Ralph Henderson.

The faces of both men paled with fear. Not in years had two men met on that narrow trail, and it seemed some strange intervention of destiny that it should be Warren and Henderson. While the face of the cattleman grew anxious, that of Henderson became quickly overshot with a crafty cunning.

"Hello!" he drawled pleasantly.

"Hello!" muttered Warren nervously.

"Well, what are we going to do about it?" the city man continued. "It looks as if you'd have to go back."

"Not by a —— sight!" snapped Warren. "There's no turning about for either of us. We'll have to manage to pass each other. The place seems pretty wide here."

"Flip a coin for the inner side," suggested the other, suddenly reaching a hand into his pocket.

"Right," agreed Warren, "but let's have a look at it first."

Henderson's face turned scarlet and he stayed his hand. "I declare, I'm all out of coin," he rattled sheepishly.

"Here's an eagle," replied Warren, with narrow eyes. "Heave her up! Heads I pass on the inside, tails I pass on the outside."

He tossed the coin to Henderson as he spoke who, pale faced and hesitating, fumbled with it a moment and let it fly up into the air with a twirl of a veteran trickster. It fell down on the trail at their feet, ringing out clear and cold.

"Tails!" cried the city man, overcome with excitement. His face resumed something of its natural color and the old craftiness stole into his eyes.

Warren accepted his fate nonchalantly, although he knew that it might mean death for him. There was one thing about it, however, that galled him. He well knew that Henderson was on his way to the Patterson ranch, and it came to him as a rather bitter thought that he might have to play the martyr and sacrifice his own life in order that the man could do so. But without a word he pressed his pony's ribs with his heels and rode forward.

Henderson had drawn his horse as close as he could against the side of the mountain but he seemed overtaken by fits of nervousness, for the reins shook in his hands and the color came and went in his dark cheeks.

The ledge where Warren would have to pass Henderson was somewhat wider than the rest of the trail, and he rode forward light hearted and confident that he would easily accomplish it. But just as he brushed against the side of Henderson the latter suddenly drove his spurs with great force against his horse's ribs. With a snort of terror the animal plunged madly forward, dislodging the other horse and rider and sending them hurtling down and over the edge of the precipice. Then he went careening down the slope.

The breath went out of Warren as soon as he felt himself falling, and under the sickening sensation that ensued he lost consciousness. A stinging pain in his leg finally awoke him. Bruised and bleeding, he now sat up and gazed about him. He had landed in the branches of a tree that jutted out from the slope of the mountain. Down below on the sand he could see the form of his horse, dead as a stone.

The first thing Warren did was to swear. Then he looked to his leg. It had been broken just below the knee. As he started to wrap his handkerchief about it he heard a sound from above. Over the rim of the precipice a bushy head was peering.

"Hello!" it called. "Kin ye manage ef I send down a rope?"

"Sure," Warren yelled back.

A minute later the end of a lariat came whirling down through space. Warren caught it, made it fast about his body, and then, clinging to it with both hands, ordered the man above to hoist away. A few moments later he crawled up over the ledge and lay panting for breath at old Jem Patterson's feet.

"I seen the hull thing, Bill," began the latter as he undid the rope about the man's body. "Henderson will swing for this or I'll shoot him on sight. I was comin' along a mile behind him an' I seen him jab the buckskin and then scoot." But Warren was unconscious before the man finished speaking, and Patterson lifted him up on his pony after great difficulty and started down the trail for home.

When Warren next regained consciousness he was lying on a bed in a dimly lighted room. Soft hands were bandaging his head and soothing words fell from the lips of their owner. Warren opened his eyes and took in the situation at a glance.

"Sue," he demanded fiercely, "has that skunk been here?"

"Sh!" she murmured, touching a finger to his lips. "He has not been here. Evidently he has skipped the country. Father has told me all about it—the honorable way in which you acted and Henderson's treachery. You have indeed behaved splendidly."

"Sue!" cried the man eagerly, starting up.

"Be quiet," she admonished smilingly. Then she added, "Your probation is over, and you have come through it nobly."

And then Warren claimed his own.

Builder of the Great Wall of China.

To superstitious notions Chin added the lust of luxury, his life being a blaze of oriental magnificence. He built a wonderful palace, which has been described in the Imperial History as having certain gorgeous annexes attached at intervals, the whole extending over a distance of a hundred miles. In consequence of his life of luxury perhaps he became more and more a prey to superstition, and it may be that because of this he completed the Great wall. At any rate, history records that he was informed by prophecy that in time he would be overwhelmed and destroyed by outside enemies. So he mobilized an army of 300,000 men to work on the Great wall and if necessary to fight in its behalf. Chin's design evidently was to inclose his massive empire in a rampart which should have the shape of a horseshoe, with the heel calks at the ocean shore. He did not plan to parallel the coast with a wall, doubtless considering that seaside an ample protection to a country vast and densely populated. The wall is not for modern use. It is an ancient fossil, the largest fossil on the earth. But fossils are useful and truthful. It is a dividing line between two civilizations and between two eras. In space it cut off the herdsmen of the north from the tillers of the south.—William Edgar Geil in Harper's.

Why She Was Glad.

A young Louisville man who was out west not long ago has returned, telling a yarn which he admits is not at his own expense, but which he declares to be about one of the most interesting experiences of even his checkered career.

"I was walking along the street in a western town," he said, "when suddenly across the way I saw a Louisville girl whom I recognized immediately. She saw me, too, and I expected her to bow rather coolly and distantly, as had been her wont back home. I was considerably astonished, therefore, when she dashed across the street, seized me with both hands and fairly bubbled over in her delight. I was so surprised, in fact, that I commented on it.

"'I'm glad to see you, too,' I said when I had managed to extricate myself from her exuberant greeting; 'but, to tell you the truth, I hadn't expected to see you so excited over my appearance. You always treated me rather a la iceberg at home, you know. What has caused your change of heart?'

"She was nonplused for only a moment and then explained. 'Mr. Smith, I've been away from home so long that I'd be glad to see even a dog if he came from Kentucky!'

"I let it go at that."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

A VIRGINIA EPISODE.

By HARRIET CAMBEY.

[Copyright, 190, by American Press Association.]

During that period when the armies of the Confederacy and of the north were swaying back and forth in Virginia, while in command of the —th New York volunteer infantry, I was advanced one evening into territory that had been previously held by the enemy. Near me was a house, and from the inmates I received an invitation to supper. I accepted and found a lady and her daughter, the rest of the family, consisting of two sons, being in the Confederate army. I will call them Mrs. and Miss Bates. Considering that the blockade had deprived them of all table supplies except such as could be raised in the south, they gave me a very fair meal, made up of the only chicken left by the "Johnnies" and the delicious hot bread that southern women know so well how to make.

I was then twenty-eight years old and considered myself passably attractive to women. There can be no immodesty in my now saying so, since the wrinkled, white headed old man of today is not the same bodily person as the young soldier of 1863. I had seen those southern girls fall precipitately in love on sight with our Yankee boys and was not especially taken aback when Clara Bates showed a sudden admiration for me.

The young lady confined the expression of her attraction for me to her eyes and her speech. She would not permit me even to touch her hand. She seemed troubled at the proximity of two hostile armies, declaring that, though her sympathies were with the Confederates, she hoped they would retreat farther south. I set myself to work to draw from her any information she might possess of the enemy's intentions, and she told me that a southern general whom she spoke of familiarly as Bob and who had left her only that morning had expressed an opinion that it would be some time before he would see her again. Considering this to indicate a further retreat, I was about to take my leave for the purpose of reporting it at once to my general when I heard from the next room the words, spoken in Mrs. Bates' own voice:

"Kiss me again, Bob."

Darting a glance at my companion, I saw the blood rushing into her face. Then she started up to leave the room; but, grasping her wrist, I detained her. Immediately from the same room as before came a succession of smacks. Miss Bates made another effort to free herself, but I laughingly held her, saying:

"This is far too interesting to lose. Please sit still."

"Clara! Sweetheart!" came another voice, this time a man's, but sounding rather as if it issued from a phonograph than a human being, followed by a lot of unintelligible croaking.

Miss Bates writhed, but by this time I had both her wrists in my grasp, and she could not get away. I held her for perhaps five minutes, waiting for something more from the adjoining room. Presently it came in a masculine voice:

"All together! Surprise 'em! Two o'clock!"

At this the heightened color left my prisoner's face, and she turned pale. I would not now let her go on any account. It must have been five minutes before more came. Then it was:

"Goodby, sweetheart! Goodby! Goodby!"

There was a long wait after this, and I was beginning to fear there would be no more when I received another installment, still in the masculine:

Releasing my prisoner, I left her with a derisive "Goodby, Clara!" and, directing that a guard be immediately thrown around the house that there might be no communication from it with the enemy, I rode at once to the corps commander.

"General," I said, "I have just passed through an experience which I interpret as follows: I have been entertained by a southern girl who purposely gave me false information that the enemy in our front would again retreat. There I learned, doubtless from a parrot in an adjoining room, which had been used either for a council of war or from which orders were issued, that we will be attacked before daylight in the morning; though what morning I can't inform you. Tomorrow seems most likely."

"Thanks, colonel," replied the general. "We'll take the precaution to be under arms every morning."

It was half past 2 the very next morning that an attack was made on our right, re-enforced by artillery, followed by infantry, all along the line. But as soon as the enemy saw that we were under arms and ready for them they ceased firing and gradually withdrew. We followed and gained a substantial advantage.

What interested me after the fight was to learn the name of the Confederate general who attempted to turn our right. This I had no difficulty in doing from prisoners captured on the field. From them I learned that the general was one of the youngest and most attractive in the Confederate service, that he commanded a division in a corps commanded by his uncle and that his first name was Robert.

Ten years after the war ended, having occasion to visit Virginia, I sought out the house in which the episode had occurred. Miss Bates had married General "Bob." I wrote a note asking permission to call and was entertained hospitably by the couple.

THE CARD THAT TOOK THE TRICK.

By RUSSELL THORNE.

[Copyright, 190, by American Press Association.]

"The trouble with you, Jim," said Tom Darby to his friend James Terry, "so far as women are concerned, is that you don't understand them."

"I wish some fellow who knows all about them would establish a school where men could be taught to manage women. I'd enter for instruction. You might give me some points if you would."

"Oh, I don't pretend to know the subject thoroughly. I merely keep in mind a few general feminine characteristics. I don't think much of learning theoretically without practice. I'll tell you what I'll do. There's Maggie Worth, a friend of mine, whom I think I know pretty well. I'll introduce you to her and from time to time coach you on how you shall act toward her. How would you like that?"

"First rate."

The introduction was made after a few preliminary general instructions, such as not to miss an opportunity to pay a compliment, never to engage in argument and always be deferential. Terry did not have much confidence in being able to learn the subject, but was anxious to get rid of a certain faculty he had discerned in himself for antagonizing the sex. He put his mind on the subject, reported all that was going on between himself and the girl on whom he was practicing to his friend Darby, and received minute instructions as to how to act in each and every case. But whether he was especially obnoxious to this particular girl or he was incapable of being taught how to make a lady's man of himself, he seemed to fare worse with Miss Worth than with any woman he had ever met. Darby kept suggesting acts and words unimportant in themselves, but well calculated to gratify a woman. They all appeared to irritate rather than please the person on whom they were practiced.

"Just hold on a bit," said Darby after Terry had reported the failure of one of the "attentions" the coach had suggested. "You keep off for awhile, and I'll step in and see if I can find out what's the matter. From what you tell me, you carry out my instructions to the letter, and yet they don't seem to work. I'll get Maggie to tell me wherein you fail."

A few days later Darby told his friend that he had better choose another subject. Maggie had taken an especial dislike to him. There was Darby's own sister Ruth. Better try her. Terry seemed quite relieved at the change and entered upon sharpening his abilities to please the sex by whetting them on the new subject. One day Terry said to his pupil:

"Somehow, ever since I introduced you to Ruth, Maggie has seemed displeased not only with you, but with me. She says you are a weak, vacillating sort of fellow, and my being a friend of yours shows conclusively that—well, she puts it 'birds of a feather flock together.'"

"Why don't you try some of the devices on her you recommended to me?"

"I will. I'll send her the prettiest basket of flowers I can buy and write her a note. I know exactly how to put it. Just you wait."

A few days later Terry met Miss Worth walking in the park. She smiled at him and asked him if he would show her the way to the grotto. In his ignorance of how to please a woman he replied that he hadn't time, whereupon the girl angrily told him that he hadn't a single gentlemanly instinct. He gave way at once and walked humbly beside her. Before parting with him she told him to come to see her that evening; she had a present for him. He called, and, taking the most beautiful flowers from those sent her by Darby, she gave them to him. He took them to Darby, and with wonder in his eyes asked him what it all meant.

"Well, I'll be jinged!" exclaimed the teacher in woman's management.

"I'll tell you what, Jim," he said presently. "While I have a general knowledge of the characteristics of women, there's something in this case that puzzles me. I prefer that you should work the rest of it out by yourself."

"I don't know how," said Terry lugubriously.

There was an estrangement from this time between teacher and pupil, between Terry and Ruth Darby and between Ruth Darby and Maggie Worth. Darby's efforts to make a lady's man of his friend had apparently borne thistles instead of fruit. One day Darby went to his friend and said:

"Jim, I've just had a talk with Ruth. What do you suppose she says?"

"What?"

"That Maggie Worth is dead in love with you."

"With me!"

"Yes. And so is Ruth in love with you."

"Great Scott! What makes you think that?"

"She's so bitter against Maggie."

"Heavens! What am I to do?"

"I've instructed you how to win the girl I expected to marry. At any rate, you've done it."

There was a solemn pause between the friends, at the end of which the pupil said, "Tom, can you show me how to undo it?"

"Jim," said Darby, extending his hand after another pause, "women are sharper than men to see some things. I didn't know what an honorable numskull you are."

"I don't mind your being a suffragist, Estelle, but I don't see any reason why you should talk about it all the time."

"But, father, if I didn't we should both have to listen to mother."

Made in Canada.

The Late Captain the Hon. A. T. Shaughnessy

A severe shock was caused through the Dominion of Canada, especially in military circles, when it became known the other day that Capt. the Hon. A.T. ("Fred") Shaughnessy, of the 60th Battalion, had been killed in action. Capt. Shaughnessy's period of service at the front was very brief, as it is hardly a month since the 60th went to France, and only about ten days since they joined the forces in the trenches. No details have yet been received as to how Capt. Shaughnessy met his death, save that he was instantly killed by shrapnel on Saturday morning, that he passed peacefully away and died like a man. It is not thought that any general action was taking place. A cable was received on Saturday afternoon by Mr. A. D. MacTier, of the C. P. R., from Mr. George McLaren Brown, the European manager of the company, stating that he had just received a cable from Lieut.-Col. Gascoigne, of the 60th, announcing the death of Capt. Shaughnessy, and asking Mr. MacTier to give the information to his father, Lord Shaughnessy.

We Grieve for the Hero

(Dedicated to the late Captain Fred Shaughnessy)

The fairest field lily lies withered and dead,
But the hosts of its seed blossom forth in its stead;
And each drop from the heart of this flower of our race
Will spring up in a soldier to stand in his place,

—M. A. Hargadon.

Montreal, April 3, 1916.

A further message was received by Lord Shaughnessy, with the brief statement that Capt. the Hon. Fred Shaughnessy had been instantly killed by shrapnel in action. Captain Shaughnessy was buried immediately, following the custom in war of burying officers and men near the place where they fell. Widespread sympathy is felt for Lord Shaughnessy, and especially for Lady Shaughnessy, in their bereavement, which came with sudden shock, since Capt. Shaughnessy had been so short a time at the front, while their only other son, Capt. the Hon. W. J. Shaughnessy, heir to the barony, is also training for active service with the 199th Irish-Canadian Rangers.

The death of Capt. the Hon. Alfred Thomas Shaughnessy will cause a pang of grief to many friends, both military and civil, in Montreal. He was a very gallant Canadian gentleman in the truest sense of such a phrase, an honorable citizen, and a brave and capable officer, full of enthusiasm in his work, and full of the spirit that makes officers beloved by their men. This was especially shown during the long weeks of training while the 60th was at Valcartier, where Capt. Shaughnessy was one of the most popular officers in the camp, always of a sunny disposition, always interested in his work and his men and invariably ready to do whatever he could to advance their interests as well as his own knowledge of work. He had little spare time there, but that little he generally devoted to study and to practicing signalling, so as to increase his efficiency. He was a splendid officer, and his loss will be severely felt by the 60th.

The late Capt. the Hon. Alfred Thomas Shaughnessy was born in Montreal on October 18, 1887, he being the second son of (then) Sir Thomas and Lady Shaughnessy. He was educated at Bishop's College and Abingdon Schools, and McGill University. While at McGill he was a member of the Zeta Psi fraternity.

On leaving McGill he entered the service of the Canadian Pacific Railway Co., in order to learn business methods. He started at the bottom, first in a subordinate position in the office of Sir Thomas Shaughnessy, and later in the Steamships Department, under Vice-President G. M. Bosworth, where he made himself liked on all sides, and won promotion on his merits, working through a number of departments. In 1906 he had the unusual experience of travelling around the world, from Montreal to Montreal, on the trains and steamships of the C. P. R. Four years ago he left the service of the C. P. R. and joined the brokerage firm of Charles Meredith & Co., as a member of the firm.

He had been for a number of years an active officer of the 3rd Victoria Rifles, joining that battalion as a subaltern in October of 1910. He was regarded as one of the most promising young officers of that battalion. When Lieut.-Col. Gascoigne undertook the organization of the 60th Battalion for overseas service, Lieut. Shaughnessy joined with rank as captain, for which he, with his brother, the Hon. W. J. Shaughnessy, qualified at Halifax. He took a keen interest in recruiting and other work for the battalion went to Valcartier with them, thence to England, and finally to France for the service at the front which was to end so speedily for him. His brother-in-law, Capt. Rene Redmond, is second in command of his company—"A" of the 60th Battalion. He was married in April, 1911, to Miss Sarah Polk Bradford, daughter of Judge Bradford, of Nashville, Tenn., and a descendant of President Polk, of the United States, the ceremony taking place at Nashville. Two children were born of the marriage, Elizabeth, three years old, and Thomas Bradford, one and one-half years. Mrs. Shaughnessy is now in London, having accompanied her husband to England when the regiment crossed.

LORD SHAUGHNESSY'S WORDS.

"To his mother, myself and the family, the sacrifice is indeed cruel and almost overwhelming. But after all, we are only passing through the same sad experience as thousands of others in every portion of the Empire. He had a sweet wife and two little children, and everything in the world to live for, but he recognized his duty and the attendant risk. If his example arouses a feeling of patriotism and responsiveness in those hundreds amongst us of military age, many of whom are without his family cares, who thus far through indifference or because of bad leadership or petty local issues have failed to assume their responsibilities as citizens and subjects, we shall feel that there is additional compensation for the sacrifice."

SYNOPSIS OF COAL MINING REGULATIONS.

Coal mining rights of the Dominion, in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Yukon Territories, the North-West Territories and in a portion of the Province of British Columbia, may be leased for a term of twenty-one years at an annual rental of $1 an acre. Not more than 2,560 acres will be leased to one applicant.

Applications for a lease must be made by the applicant in person to the Agent or Sub-Agent of the district in which the rights applied for are situated.

In surveyed territory the land must be described by sections or legal sub-divisions of sections and in unsurveyed territory the tract applied for shall be staked by the applicant himself.

Each application must be accompanied by a fee of $5 which will be refunded if the rights applied for are not available, but not otherwise. A royalty shall be paid on the merchantable output of the mine at the rate of five cents per ton.

The person operating the mine shall furnish the Agent with sworn returns accounting for the full quantity of merchantable coal mined and pay the royalty thereon. If the coal mining rights are not being operated, such returns should be furnished at least once a year.

The lease will include the coal mining rights only, but the lessee may be permitted to purchase whatever available surface rights may be considered necessary for the working of the mine at the rate of $10.00 an acre.

For full information application should be made to the Secretary of the Department of the Interior, Ottawa, or to any Agent or Sub-Agent of Dominion Lands.

W. W. CORY,
Deputy Minister of the Interior.

Literary Notes

ROD AND GUN

Fishing is given first place in the April issue of Rod and Gun, the majority of the stories in this early spring number dealing with a subject which at this time of the year makes a special appeal to the out-of-door man. Besides the stories in which fishing plays a prominent part, and other stories in which fishing does not occur, the department edited by Robert Page Lincoln under the heading "Fishing Notes," contains much that is of practical value to the angler, among the articles being one on "The Trail of the Angling Canoeist." Guns and Ammunition, edited by A. B. Geike, is replete with information for the gun crank or enthusiast. "The Trap" contains the largest records of trap-shooting events and some reminiscences of a well known Toronto shooter, "Johnny Townson," while under the heading of the Kennel there is much to interest dog lovers, the Airedale being the subject under discussion this month. Rod and Gun is published at Woodstock by W. J. Taylor, Limited.

Presented With Address And Ring

Pleasing Event at Foxboro Orange Society Gathering

At a recent meeting of Mizpah Royal Preceptory No. 382, Foxboro, a branch of the Orange Order, the following address accompanied by a signet ring was presented to Bro. Sir Knight Miller Carl, who is connected with the Signal Corps of the 80th Battalion. The address was as follows:

Foxboro, March 25, 1916.

Mr. Miller Carl,

Dear Bro. Sir Knight:—We, the members of Mizpah Royal Black Preceptory, No. 382, have said many goodbyes to soldier boys within the past year and a half, yet we cannot feel satisfied to let you, our first and only Sir Knight go without placing ourselves on record in some way.

We are reminded that from the first send off which was given down to the present one, we have cherished fond hopes that possibly our soldiers might not have to enter into the fearful experiences of modern trench warfare, but that the war might come to a favorable end before they reached the front.

Hope springs eternal in the human breast, and so we are yet hopeful, but the grim facts are before us, and the letters coming to us daily from our brave fellows show that there is some stern and stirring business for some time yet.

We are glad that you have been so manly as to respond to the call of duty and to don the uniform for King and country and for liberty, and we will trust and pray that you, like those who have gone, will wear it well.

You will be inspired and encouraged to often think that he who makes sacrifices truly for right and duty may through faith in God hear His well beloved Son say: "Greater love hath no man than this that he lay down his life for his friends."

As we ask you to wear this signet ring we hope it may oft remind you of the many pleasant evenings spent with us, and of the many Sir Knights and friends who pray for your daily safe keeping and a Christian soldier's honor, being kept in trust by you.

Signed on behalf of, Mizpah Royal Black Preceptor No. 382.

Sir Knight Bert Cook.

MUSIC AND DRAMA

HERBERT KELCEY & EFFIE SHANNON

An all star cast of seasoned players from the speaking stage is featured in The Sphinx, a 5 part Universal Red Feather Feature filmplay, which is being offered at the Palace Theatre tonight and Tuesday matinee and night. The cast is headed by the famous dramatic stars, Herbert Kelcey and Effie Shannon, whose portrayal of intellectual roles is without peer. The supporting cast consists of Miss Helen Wolcott, one of the most beautiful and accomplished actresses in pictures; Jos. Flores, Hart Hoxie and Mrs. Lydia Yeamens complete the roster of as sterling a cast of character actors and actresses as was ever assembled in one photodrama. A programme of amusing comedies will also be exhibited.

"POTASH AND PERLMUTTER"

"Abe" Potash and "Mawruss" Perlmutter come to Griffin's Opera House tomorrow night, when they will display the latest designs in cloaks, suits and laughs. They come direct from New York, where for two seasons they did a rushing business at the Cohan Theatre, and on their staff are some of the finest artists ever seen here.

"Abe" and Mawruss", you know, are the fellers that Montague Glass who writes pieces for the Saturday Evening Post, made so famous.

The story of "Potash and Perlmutter" revolves about the efforts of the two lovable partners to save their new book-keeper, Boris Andrieff, from the clutches of the Russian Government. They really know little about Boris, except that as a book-keeper he is a great musician, and they quarrel incessantly about him, but when there is danger that the young man is to be sent back to Russia and perhaps a Siberian prison, they risk every cent to save him.

Jane Fearnley, the famous moving picture actress, is leading lady with Potash and Perlmutter, and a special film entitled "The Marble Heart" featuring Miss Fearnley will be exhibited to-morrow night at 8.10. After its exhibition Miss Fearnley will appear on the stage and relate many interesting incidents about her 4 years in moving picture work.

THE ETERNAL CITY

No summary of bare facts can adequately describe the astounding power and charm of "The Eternal City", the Famous Players 8 part photo spectacle, featuring the talented dramatic star, Pauline Frederick, which is to be exhibited at Griffin's Opera House next Wednesday and Thursday evening. The pictorial version of Hall Cain's thrilling romance presents the stirring incidents and climaxes, the nobility and tragedy, the elements of love and betrayal, and the beautiful ideals and humanities of the original plot, with a wider range, in truer colors with bolder strokes than were possible in the novel or play, and will therefore render the inspiring story its greatest measure of immortality.

SOLDIERS FRIENDS

One of the largest and most faithful organizations in connection with the needs of the soldiers in the city is the Women's Patriotic and Red Cross Association. There is no membership fee required, all that is required is a faithful heart, willingness to work and a little enthusiasm.

This organization has been splendidly maintained. Mrs. Col. Lazier has been at the head of the association. Mrs. O'Flynn has been convener of the supply committee and Mrs. Yeomans the convener of the circles, Miss Hurley is the secretary and Miss Clara Yeomans the treasurer. There are 30 circles in the city all having some color as their badge. One connected with the Y.M.C.A. is called the "Green and White Circle", and Mrs. Mark Sprague is the convener of this circle. There is a healthy rivalry between these circles and the magnificent work they have been doing can be appreciated when people know it costs about $100.00 a week for wool used for socks, and they have already delivered to the soldiers 8,000 pairs. The funds are getting low and they need the support of the citizens. One of the ways in which they have raised funds is by holding teas under the auspices of the different circles. On Thursday last Mrs. O'Flynn, Bridge St. East, threw open her home for the use of the "Green & White Circle" and not only was an enjoyable time spent by the ladies and gentlemen who were present, but a nice sum was donated in assistance of this work. The house was tastefully decorated with green and white flowers throughout. At the door, under the charge of Miss Davis and Miss Dillingham, on an oak stand stood a plate, which commemorated the Jubilee of Queen Victoria, and which had been presented to Mrs. O'Flynn at that time. It was quite appropriate and the guests deposited their donations on this plate. The net returns of the tea were $15.00. Mrs. O'Flynn and Mrs. (Dr.) Yeomans received the guests in the drawing room. Miss Clara Yeomans, daughter of Dr. Yeomans, attended the door; Mrs. Van Buskard took charge of the guests and ushered them into the refreshment room. At the tea table Mrs. Mark Sprague, convener of the Circle, and Mrs. D. V. Sinclair, president of the Ladies' Y.M.C.A., presided. Mrs. Boyes had charge of the refreshment rooms and was assisted by Mrs. Thomas Gardiner, Mrs. B. Frederick, Mrs. C. French, Mrs. B. D. Harns, Mrs. T. C. Lapp and Miss Sinclair. All enthusiastically assisted.

The 155th Batt., through the kindness of Col. Adams, dispensed beautiful music throughout the afternoon from four to seven o'clock. A large number were present and the scene was not only an interesting one but enlivened by the charming presence of a large number of Belleville's ladies with a sprinkling of gentlemen, and these with the flags, green and white, and the oak panellings of the reception room, enlivened by the lighting, made the scene one of the prettiest that could be found throughout the country.

The ladies are preparing socks for all of the Belleville boys who are leaving with the 80th Battalion. They have already procured a list. They sent socks to the Belleville boys who were in the 59th, which were taken charge of by Lieut. Hyman, and when the 155th are ordered to the front socks will be ready for the boys to take with them. Besides this they are shipping continually large shipments to the front. Those who have a knowledge state that the question of a proper supply of socks is one of the most important questions in connection with the success of our armies, next to ammunition, and that the condition of the feet of the Canadians have been good because of the plentiful supply of socks which have been sent.

It is to be hoped that the people in the city will see to it that the ladies are not restricted in their splendid work for want of funds, and we mention this believing an intimation of this kind to the public will find a ready response. We congratulate the ladies on their splendid work.

HANDY HUSBAND
Knew How to Get Part of the Breakfast.

"'I know one dish I can prepare for breakfast as well as any cook on earth,' said my husband one morning when the cook was ill and he had volunteered to help get breakfast. He appeared with his dish and I discovered it was Grape-Nuts which, of course, was easy to prepare for it was perfectly cooked at the factory, but it was a good illustration of the convenience of having Grape-Nuts about.

"We took up Grape-Nuts immediately after returning from a five years' sojourn in a hot country. Our stomachs were in bad condition and we were in poor health generally.

"In a day or two we liked Grape-Nuts better than any other kind of food on the table. We both gained steadily in health and strength, and this was caused by Grape-Nuts and Postum.

"A friend of ours had a similar experience. She was seriously ill with indigestion and could find nothing to eat that would not give her heartburn and palpitation, especially at night.

"She found that a small dish of Grape-Nuts with cream made her a satisfactory supper and gave her a comfortable night's rest. In a short time she gained several pounds in weight."

"There's a Reason." Name given by Canadian Postum Co., Windsor, Ont.

OBSEQUIES

MRS. (REV.) J. E. HOWELL

On Saturday afternoon many relatives and friends were in attendance at the obsequies of the late Mrs. (Rev.) J. E. Howell of Belleville. At the family residence, corner of George and Queen Streets, an impressive and appropriate service was conducted by Rev. Dr. Baker, Principal of Albert College, assisted by Rev. H. S. Osborne, pastor of Bridge street church. The latter officiated at the interment at Belleville cemetery. The floral tributes were numerous and beautiful in design. The bearers were Messrs. W. C. Mikel, K.C., D. Price, J. Taylor, E. P. Frederick, H. Holton and H. A. Morgan.

MRS. T. P. NETTERVILLE

The funeral of the late Mrs. T. P. Netterville, of this city, took place this morning and was largely attended. The cortege proceeded from the family residence, Victoria Avenue, to St. Michael's church, where requiem mass was celebrated by Rev. Father Hyland, who also officiated at the interment at St. James cemetery. Many mass cards were contributed by relatives and friends. The bearers were Messrs. F. Dolan, F. P. Carney, S. Daley, T. Hurley, W. H. Day and P. J. Wims.

The Big Minstrel Show At Griffins Tonight

Standing Room Only should be the order at Griffin's tonight when our own 155th Quinte Battalion Minstrels hold forth. We have had many fine amateur attractions in Belleville, in fact, the very best in Canada. But from present indications tonight's Minstrel show, given by our lads in khaki, should surpass all others for many reasons. Principally because the citizens of Belleville have put their shoulder to the wheel and have made every effort to help along the indefatigable members of our own Quinte Battalion, which we are all so proud of. From the rise of the first curtain on the grand opening overture to the fall of the last on the screamingly funny burlesque, "The Capture of The U. B. Dam" the show savors of the Professional. Therefore, gentle reader, when you are sitting by your fireside perusing these lines, that is, if you have a fire side to sit beside, think of this prophecy: Tomorrow you will be asked by everyone you meet 'Did you go to the Minstrel Show?' Then: 'It was the best I've ever seen.' What will your answer be? So kick off your slippers and put up your pipe, and join the majority of the good citizens of Belleville at Griffin's Opera House in spending the most enjoyable evening of many moons. Bring along the wife. She'll enjoy it as much as yourself. If the reserve seats are all gone. There'll be 400 rush seats at 25c, so don't miss it on any account.

CALLED BY DEATH

ALBERT WICKETT.

Mr. Albert Wickett, a well-known and respected resident of Belleville, passed away at an early hour this morning after a brief attack of pneumonia. Deceased had been for some time engaged as engineer at the G. T. R. pump house here. He was taken seriously ill on Friday last, and despite every medical assistance death resulted. Mr. Wickett was in his 69th year and was born in Thurlow Township. For a number of years he had resided in this city. He was a member of the Methodist Church and belonged to the C.O.O.F. society. In addition to the widow, one son, William, of Lindsay, and one daughter, Mrs. James St. Louis, of Belleville, survive.

TAKING PRECAUTIONS

A young wife said to her husband one night:

"My dear, there is a gentleman in the study. He wants to speak to you."

"Who is it? Do you know?" the husband asked.

"Dear," said the wife, "you must forgive me, but that cough has bothered you so much of late, and it still clings to you, and oh, if you knew how worried I've been about you!" And she threw her arms around his neck. "What would I do if I were to lose you?" she moaned.

"Come, come,' said the young husband, patting her shoulder tenderly, "men don't die of a slight cold. So you've called in the doctor, eh? Well, I will see him gladly if it will make you feel easier. Which one is it?"

"It isn't the doctor, dear," was the answer; it's the insurance agent."

Heart's Action Was Weak And Circulation Poor

He Was Always Tired and Nervous and Had Pains in Feet and Legs—Dr. Chase's Nerve Food Cured

The heart is a wonderful worker plodding away year in and year out, forever pumping the blood through the body. So long as the blood is rich and nourishing it renews its own waste and keeps up a vigorous circulation of the blood through the arteries and veins of the human system.

But when the blood gets thin the nerves are starved, motive power is lacking, the heart's action weakens and the circulation is slow. The hands and feet feel cold, there are cramps and pains in the legs and through the body, digestion fails, you become nervous and irritable and do not rest or sleep well.

This letter will give you some idea how admirably Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is suited to overcome derangements of this nature. It is, above all, a creator of new, rich blood, and with the blood in good condition the nerves are soon restored and bodily organs resume their natural functions.

Mrs. E. A. Hutchings, "Prairie View," Elva, Man., writes: "Before using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food my husband had tried almost every remedy recommended as a tonic. He suffered with cold feet, poor circulation of the blood and was always tired. He had pains in his feet and legs, and could get no rest or sleep at night. After the first box of the Nerve Food we could see an improvement, and now after using it for six months, he is an entirely different man. He eats and sleeps well and has no pains in his feet and legs. It has built up his health wonderfully, and we can recommend it as a splendid nerve tonic."

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, 50 cents a box, 6 for $2.50, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

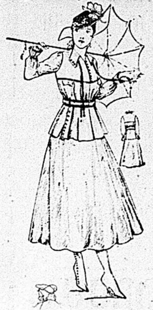
RITCHIE'S

SILK SUITS

In a Strictly New Showing For Easter, Priced $20, $25, $30, $32, $35 Up To $45

CLOTH SUITS $15 to $45

The New Suits for Easter are really beautiful to view—unquestionably the smartest garments presented for several seasons. Of course we haven't the space to tell you about the different models in detail, so we want you to come in personally and see them. Come in at your earliest opportunity, as every day now means a heavy day's selling, which tends to deplete the showing, even though new models are arriving daily. As for prices the range is broader than ever before, and furthermore the values are exceptionally good. See our special value at $15.00.



Perhaps that wide range of prices will convey to you some idea of our present display of New Silk Suits for Easter—and it is truly a fresh new showing as the majority of the garments were only placed in stock Saturday. They are in the most wanted fabrics, such as Taffetas, Silk Poplins, Silk Crepe Poplins and Taffeta and Serge combinations. Various new style effects are introduced and the shades are what Fashion smiles most favorably upon just now. If it is to be a Silk Suit, be sure and see these.

Our Leading Silk Suit Values At $20.00

All stunning garments in Silk Poplin materials, featuring such new shades are Russian Green, Copenhagen, Navy and Black. Suit Coat has fancy girdle, two patch pockets, large collar and reveres, fancy sleeve and bell cuff; collar, cuffs and pockets stitched with white silk, also silk lined throughout; fancy buttons on coat and skirt, the latter being a plain flared style. They are indeed extra value at $20.00. The higher priced models are equally as good values. See windows.

SEPARATE COATS For Every Occasion

Whatever your taste or fancy may be, you are sure to find just the coat you like best in our superb collection and at a price to exactly suit you. There are coats to put on for every occasion with, of course, the Sport Coats largely in evidence. These we are showing in all the latest New York styles and fabrics, in checks, plaids, stripes and tweed mixtures, with a range of prices from $5.00 to $18.50.

MEN, CHOOSE YOUR NEW HAT AT RITCHIE'S

Production and Thrift

"CANADA from her abundance can help supply the Empire's needs, and this must be a comforting thought for those upon whom the heavy burden of directing the Empire's affairs has been laid. Gain or no gain the course before the farmers of Canada is as clear as it was last year—they must produce abundantly in order to meet the demands that may be made, and I believe this to be especially true in regard to live stock, the world's supply of which must be particularly affected in this vast struggle. Stress and strain may yet be in store for us all before this tragic conflict is over, but not one of us doubts the issue, and Canadians will do their duty in the highest sense of that great word."—HON. MARTIN BURRELL, Minister of Agriculture.

"MODERN war is made by resources, by money, by foodstuffs, as well as by men and by munitions. While war is our first business, it is the imperative duty of every man in Canada to produce all that he can, to work doubly hard while our soldiers are in the trenches, in order that the resources of the country may not only be conserved, but increased, for the great struggle that lies before us. 'Work and Save' is a good motto for War-time."—SIR THOMAS WHITE, Minister of Finance.

Rulers Of Canada Will Be Soldiers

Dr. Thornton Says Men in Khaki Will Get Recompensed After The War

MONTREAL, April 10.—"It is not for a good time that the boys don khaki," said Dr. Thornton last night in the course of an illustrated lecture in Douglas Methodist Church. "Go for a tramp with them through Montreal, live as they live, work as they work, and you will soon come to the conclusion that it is not an easy time they are looking for when they join for active service.

"Is it for money? Many stay at home for money. The soldiers get enough to keep body and soul together, that is all."

After saying that it was an ideal which took men across the seas, the speaker asked. "What is the compensation for the sacrifice this country is making? We do not see it yet, but the compensation is coming. The soldiers will govern Canada by their votes when they come back, and the men who led them at the front will lead them when they come back. Having lived and served and suffered and sacrificed for the Empire these men will stand shoulder to shoulder to see that the sacrifice is not made in vain."

Dr. Thornton then showed excellent pictures of the young men of Douglas Methodist Church, who had gone to the front, and gave pictures of the Canadians as seen in various parts of England. One fine picture showed 37,000 Canadians being reviewed by the King with General Kitchener in the foreground, talking to General Turner. Most of the pictures shown were taken by Dr. Thornton when he was in England last summer.

FORESTRY BATTALION IS NOW 1,525 STRONG

OTTAWA, April 11.—Special—The 221th (Forestry) Battalion, under command of Lieut.-Col. Alexander McDougall, has now mobilized 1,525 men at Quebec, and will proceed overseas as soon as transports are available. A new record in recruiting and mobilization has been established by the battalion. The 1,500 men have been recruited and mobilized within three weeks from the day recruiting started in response to the hurry-up call from the War Office. By next month the battalion will be actively engaged cutting forests in England and Scotland and providing lumber needed at the front. As soon as the work in England is finished the battalion will go to France to engage in similar work there.

VERDUN SIEGE REACHES ITS FIFTIETH DAY

Yet the French Withstand the Terrible Strain—Their Lines Are Unbroken by most Fierce Assaults in History—Crown Prince Uses Two Hundred Thousand Picked Men

PARIS, April 11.—(Special)—Yesterday was the 50th day of the battle of Verdun and the French troops are withstanding the fiercest and most persistent onslaught made by the Germans since the war began.

The latest assault was delivered by some 200,000 men. Still, the French line is not only unbroken, but unchanged; still the Germans are battering the outer line of defences and still are as far as ever from the only French positions protecting Verdun that are really essential.

Without pause the German Crown Prince, taking advantage of the evacuation of the Bethincourt salient by the French and the occupation of that position by the Germans, has thrown several divisions against the new French line, but so far has been unable to break that line at any point.

The bombardment on the whole front west of the Meuse is of increasing intensity on both sides. Germans moving down along the Haucourt-Bethincourt line, attacked the French positions south of the Forges Brook. Here they had to face the full fury of the French guns, which cost them heavy losses.

The French front along the strategic sector extending from Le Mort Homme to Cumieres remained unmoved, and further attempts to assault were arrested by the French curtain of fire.

The French still hold their positions in the Caillette Wood, which has been the scene of heavy fighting, and against which German attacks are being directed daily.

Boys Fractured Skulls By Falls

Falls Down Stairs and from Third Storey Balcony May Prove Fatal—Found Lying in Yard

MONTREAL, April 10.—Two boys sustained fractured skulls and are in danger of death as a result of falls sustained on Saturday. One fell down a flight of steps, while the other fell from the railing of a third-storey balcony. Several other persons were taken to hospitals suffering from more or less serious injuries resulting from working and street incidents.

The first of the most serious accidents occurred at 5 p.m., when Louis Ginitski, aged 5 years, whose parents live at 242 Clarke Street, fell down a flight of steps while playing with other children near his home. He was unconscious when carried into his home and was removed to the General Hospital. His skull was found to be fractured and his condition was so serious that his name was placed on the danger list.

Benny Gitlitz, aged 10 years, of 1121 St. Dominique street, lost his balance while playing on the rear balcony of his home at 7 p.m. and fell three storeys to the yard below. He was found lying unconscious in the yard by the tenants of the ground flat and was taken to the Royal Victoria Hospital. Besides a fractured skull, he received other injuries which render his case very critical.

While working at C.P.R. shed No. 3 on Saturday morning, Andruch Kleban, aged 26 years, of 999 Sanguinet street, had his right foot badly crushed by a falling piece of iron. He was taken to the Notre Dame Hospital.

Falling from a rig at the corner of Restler and Guilford streets on Saturday afternoon, M. Goulet, of 585 Cadieux street, sustained severe head injuries. He was taken to the Notre Dame Hospital in a semi-conscious condition.

Catching his leg in a freight elevator while working in the east end plant of the Dominion Textile Company Saturday afternoon, Noel Gauthier, aged 15 years, of 148 Desery street, received injuries which may result in the loss of the member. The flesh was terribly torn and lacerated and the bone is feared to have been crushed. He was taken to the Royal Victoria Hospital.

Allies ~~Protest~~ Over Flour Supply

Thirty-Seven Thousand Sacks are Said to Have Been Handed Over to Bulgaria by Greece

PARIS, April 10.—The Temps publishes a despatch from Athens quoting the Patris of that city to the effect that the ministers of the Entente Powers have complained to the Greek government that 37,000 flour sacks belonging to Russia have been handed over by Greek authorities to Bulgaria. These sacks were requisitioned by the Greek commissary department for the army, but are said to have been transported clandestinely to Bulgaria. Details of the transaction are given in the following telegram from G. Passarow, Bulgarian Minister at Athens to Premier Radoslavoff, of Bulgaria:

Nedkof (Bulgarian consul at Saloniki) informs me there are canvas sacks at Saloniki. I have talked with Gounaris (Greek Minister of the Interior) about this question, and he tells me: "I will verify the matter and if there are really sacks at Saloniki I will recommend to the Greek National Bank to buy them and send them to the Bank of Bulgaria, on the pretext that they are sent for flour, in order to avoid the attention of British spies at Saloniki. If your merchants bought these sacks and the British were informed of it, we would draw disagreeable consequences upon ourselves. After using the sacks during the military operations, the National Bank of Bulgaria will sell them to us with flour. All that will be done to justify the shipping in the eyes of the British. The Minister of the Interior will communicate to me in a few days how many sacks they will give us."

SWITZERLAND AND SPAIN WILL ACT

Spain is Determined to See that Her Rights are not Interfered With

PARIS, April 10.—The Petit Parisien understands that Spain has promised Switzerland to take common action with the latter regarding Germany's treatment of neutrals.

The semi-official Diario Universel of Madrid defines the government's attitude on the recent torpedoing of vessels carrying Spanish subjects as follows:

"The Spanish flag ought to offer sufficient guarantee of the life and interests of Spanish subjects and the government will see that such is the case, not because Spain loyally observes her neutrality, but because international law give us that right absolutely."

Greece With Allies Heart And Soul

Greek Colony in Montreal Celebrated Anniversary of National Independence

MONTREAL, April 10.—"All talk of Greece not being heart and soul with the Allies fighting for civilization is idle talk," declared Mr. F. N. Papamanolis, a Greek advocate and representative of the Greek press in Canada, in delivering a speech at the Greek Church yesterday morning in celebration of Grecian independence from Turkish tyranny. The edifice was filled with a large crowd.

"No Greek can possibly forget what the immortal Lord Byron did for Greece, and what he said and sang about Greece in immortal poetry," said the speaker.

Mr Papamanolis pictured the [illegible] years of Turkish rule before the Grecian people rose in rebellion and for seven years fought for their freedom During that time deeds of valor were accomplished which rank second to none in the history of the world.

"The battle of Navarino gave the coup de grace to the Turkish domination, for it was then that the allied fleets of England, France and Russia defeated the Turko-Egyptian fleet and freed Greece from Turkish slavery. No Greek can possibly forget this."

Greece could not join the Allies at the beginning of the war without courting disaster, said the speaker, but the day was soon coming when Greece, allied with the Entente Powers, would share the sacrifice and the glory of the new restoration, the resurrection of the Byzantine Empire, with King Constantine as its legitimate heir, the liberation of Thrace and Asia Minor, and the triumph of right and justice in Oriental Europe.

Turkish Army Is Reinforced

Force is Believed to Amount to Eighty or Ninety Battalions

LONDON, April 10.—A special to The Daily Telegraph from Rome says:

According to information at the Russian Embassy the Turks have succeeded in getting important reinforcements to Trebizond and Sivas, said to number eighty or ninety battalions with artillery. The Germans supplied thousands of motor cars for the purpose of carrying them from the rail head.

The arrival of these reinforcements explains the resistance of the Turks on the Asiatic front.

The feeding of the Turkish army continues a problem. Constant attempts are made to send food and material by sea, but few of the ships arrive, being sunk by Russian submarines and destroyers.

Since the beginning of March, the Russians have destroyed a hundred or more Turkish vessels.

According to the belief here, the Turkish situation in Asia Minor is improved only for the moment, and the Russian advance soon will move irresistibly on.

THEY SMUGGLED CHINESE

Hamilton Man and American Arrested in Albany

ALBANY, N.Y., April 10.—Federal agents in eastern New York tonight were searching for the drivers of two automobiles, which it was believed were used in smuggling 12 Chinese into this country from Canada. Two men, who said they were William Carpenter, of Lewiston, N.Y., and Chas. Baker, of Hamilton, Ont., were arrested here yesterday, and under sacks in the bottom of their automobile were found four Chinese, believed to have been brought from Canada.

Albert B. Wiley, a federal Chinese inspector, and Wm. Scott, a deputy revenue collector, who made the arrests yesterday, today found two Chinese at a country hotel near here. They told the officers that they were members of a party of 12 Chinese brought from Canada. The Chinese said three automobiles had left Buffafflo for New York, each carrying four of their countrymen. They refused to say how they came to be in the hotel, but the officers said they believed the driver of the car in which the Chinese were driven became frightened and left the men on the country road.

SPEEDY PROROGATION IS PLAN OF GOVERNMENT

Rogers Said Railway Legislature Could be Given Proper Consideration in Time Allowed—Opposition Shows Disposition to Play for Delay

OTTAWA, April 11.—Special—The House of Commons received a surprise tonight when, just before adjournment, Hon. Robert Rogers, who was leading the House, announced that the Government desired to prorogue Parliament next week.

Hon. George P. Graham said in reply it was generally understood that the Government intended at this session to deal with the railway situation. Financial aid, he understood, was to be extended to the Quebec and Saguenay, the Canadian Northern and the Grand Trunk Pacific.

Measures of such importance, he argued, should not be "jammed through the House without discussion." Moreover, he took it for granted that the Minister of Militia desired to be heard in his own defence before the end of the session.

Mr. Rogers said that unless the boat was late, General Hughes would be in his seat on Friday. The railway legislation to be brought down was not of so important a character that it could not be adequately considered and disposed of in time to permit the House to prorogue on the 21st inst.

Little progress, however, was made today toward winding up the business of the session. The afternoon was devoted to a desultory discussion of the Doherty bill, which still remains in committee. The entire evening was taken up with the estimates of the post office department and Opposition members were evidently playing for delay, both this afternoon and evening.

Killed Under Auto Truck

Unknowned to Driver Victim Had Been Riding on Running Board —Fell When Alighting

MONTREAL, April 10.—Jean Baptiste Bougle, 35 years of age, who resided at 553 Albert street, Ste. Cunegonde, was crushed to death on Saturday afternoon on the crossing of Fulford and Notre Dame streets, under the wheels of an automobile truck of the Imperial Tobacco Company of Canada, Limited. Bougle had been riding on the running board of the truck, unknown to the chauffeur or his assistant who were sitting up in front. When he stepped off at the corner of Notre Dame and Fulford streets he stumbled and fell under the truck, the rear wheels crushing his head and chest, killing him instantly.

The accident happened at 4.30 o'clock, but the chauffeur of the truck, Euclid Danberry, residing at 147 Mullarkey avenue, Verdun, was not aware of what had happened until he heard the screams of a woman on the sidewalk, and a man shouted to him that one of his men had fallen off the truck and gone under the wheels. Danberry knew that it was not one of his men, as the only assistant he had was beside him on the front seat, but on looking back he saw the body of a man lying on the roadway behind his truck. Danberry and his assistant, with the aid of a couple of others, picked up the unconscious form and carried it into a store. The man was still breathing, but it could be seen from the manner in which his head was crushed that death was only a question of a few minutes. A hurry call was sent to the General Hospital for an ambulance, but long before it arrived the man was dead.

BERLIN, ONT., CITIZENS WILL RENEW DEMAND

BERLIN, Ont., April 11.—(Special)—At an enthusiastic meeting tonight it was decided to form an organization to be known as the British League to press anew before the private bills committee of the legislature the demand that power be given to change the name of the city. The suggestion was made that members of the 118th Battalion be invited to accompany the fresh deputation to be sent before the committee.

At a special meeting of the city council details will be arranged.

The following gentlemen were named a committee to arrange details of this organization: Dr. J. E. Honsberger, H. W. Brown, S. J. Williams, W. G. Cleghorn and Col. W. M. O. Lochead.

SOLDIER FINED FOR DISORDERLY CONDUCT

Private Arthur Sisson, a member of the 155th Battalion was a week ago placed under arrest on a charge of being intoxicated and threatening to do grievous bodily harm. Since his arrest he has been confined in the county jail. This morning he was brought up before Police Magistrate Masson and the charge preferred against him was interfering with a police officer in the discharge of his duties. Considerable evidence was submitted and it was shown that Sisson, at his boarding house, had in his hand a razor at the time he was placed under arrest, but it was not clearly established that he actually attempted to use the dangerous weapon. The result of the investigation was that Sisson was acquitted of the charge preferred against him, but he pleaded guilty to a charge of being drunk and disorderly. In giving judgment the Magistrate stated that the accused might before a judge have been found guilty of sedition, owing to the language he used when he was intoxicated, but he had not been charged of such a serious offence. For being intoxicated and disorderly a fine of $25 and costs, or in default 2 months in jail was imposed. As Sisson was at present unable to pay the fine he was taken to jail. Mr. Payne represented the Crown in the absence of County Attorney Carnew, who was engaged in a county case. The accused was undefended.

SAN ANTONIO, Texas, April 10.—Continuing their drive toward Parral, American troops to-day are believed to be almost on the heels of Villa. The bandit chieftain's whereabouts are not definitely known, but officers at Expeditionary Headquarters say they would not be surprised to learn of Americans reaching Parral to-day. Parral is Villa's reported objective in the fight from San Geronimo through Sateve.

ADVANCE BY BRITISH IN REGION OF ST. ELOI

LONDON, April 11.—Special—The British official communication issued tonight says:

"Last night at St. Eloi our troops attacked and captured the mine crater remaining in German hands, and by a further attack succeeded in establishing themselves in German trenches running southwest from the above crater.

"Today there has been artillery activity about La Boisselle, Angres, Vierstraat, St. Eloi and Ypres. There was some mining activity about La Boisselle, Roclincourt and Givenchy."

DRIVES BY THE ENEMY WERE GENERALLY CHECKED

Canadian Press Special

PARIS, April 11.—Afternoon statement: On the left bank of the Meuse the Germans, Monday evening, delivered an attack against our positions at Le Mort Homme. This activity was accompanied by the use of flaming liquids. The attack was made from Corbeaux wood, and was checked by our curtains of fire, and fire of our infantry, excepting on the east, where the enemy secured footing in a few small elements of trenches.

On the right bank of the Meuse the Germans endeavored, last night to expel us from trenches taken by us during the past few days to the south of the village of Douaumont. This endeavor also saw Germans making use of jets of flaming liquids. It was met with sanguinary checks.

There has been violent bombarding in the region of Douaumont and Vaux, and in Woevre district there have been some outbursts of artillery fire. Night passed quietly on the remainder of the front.

This morning a French air pilot vanquished a German aeroplane, which fell within our lines near Badenviller. Two of the enemy aviators were killed.

Within the Military Circle

BELLEVILLE

Maj. Wilson, D. A. D., and Q. M. G., Kingston, spent the week-end in this city.

Recruiting among most of the units in the 3rd district has been somewhat slow during the last week.

Lieut. Weller, of the 155th Battalion spent the week-end in Brockville.

Lieut.-Col. Adams, O.C. of the 155th Battalion, left this afternoon for Picton.

The meeting of all the commanding officers and adjutants of the different units in the Third Military District, which was to have taken place today at Kingston, has been postponed till further notice.

Capt. Harper, of Madoc, M.O. of the 155th Battalion, was in the city today.

Th 80th Battalion, accompanied by the brass and bugle bands, had a route march throughout the city this afternoon.

Lieut. Schuster, of the 224th (Forestry) Battalion, is home from Ottawa and will shortly leave to join his battalion, which has been mobilized at Quebec.

KINGSTON

It is hardly probable that there will be many changes in the composition of the headquarters staff at Barriefield from what it was last year. There may be a few conditions to the staff because of the larger camp, but the officers of the 3rd district will no doubt be members of the camp staff and all the work of the district done in Barriefield, just as it was done last summer.

Mr. Bews, physical director of Queen's University, left for Montreal yesterday to take a course in school of physical drill and bayonet fighting. Mr. Bews has been granted the rank of lieutenant, and will on his return have charge of the physical drill and bayonet fighting work of the 3rd military district.

The Machine Gun School started a class Monday morning at the Armouries for non-commissioned officers of the C.E.F., of the 3rd Military District.

Lieut.-Col. Brown, G.S.O., returned to the city from Ottawa and other points on Saturday.

A Single Application Banishes Every Hair

(The Modern Beauty)

Here is how any woman can easily and quickly remove objectionable, hairy growths without possible injury to the skin: Make a paste with some powdered delatone and water, apply to hairy surface and after 2 or 3 minutes rub off, wash the skin and the hairs are gone. This is a painless, inexpensive method and, excepting where the growth is unusually thick, a single application is enough. You should, however, be careful to get genuine delatone.

A BOY FROM BELLEVILLE

In the victorious fight at St. Eloi were the Canadians were so successful in the battles of the last couple of days as reported in yesterday's paper, four bombers drove back the Germans fifty yards. One of these bombers was Pte. Joe Nicholson, one of the old Albert College boys who left the College for the Front the first year of the war.

USED INSULTING LANGUAGE

Wallace Schreder, an Austrian, who has resided in this vicinity for some years was today before Magistrate Masson charged with using insulting language towards John W. Douglas, a resident of Thurlow Township. The result of the investigation was that Schreder was found guilty and a fine of $2 and costs was imposed. It was alleged that the accued had been tormented by some parties which led him to use the language he did. He claims Austria as his birthplace, but says he is a British subject and not at all in sympathy with the Austrians in the present war.

CASE DISPOSED OF

Before His Honor Judge Deroche this morning, Mrs. Jennie Hanna was arranged and tried on a charge of theft. It appears that the accused mother, Mrs. Taugher, is the executrix of an estate and at the bank in Stirling deposited some money jointly in her name, and her daughter, Mrs. Hanna. The latter it was alleged, drew some money unknown to her mother, and used it, hence the charge. The affair was, however, today satisfactorily arranged, and the money used will be restored. The criminal prosecution was under the circumstances allowed to be dropped, and the accused was acquitted. Mr. Carnew, County Attorney, for Crown and Mr. W. D. M. Shorey for the accused.

STORIES OF ARMY'S MORMONISM

Several Applications for Separate Allowance Most Fraudulent —Women Misrepresent Themselves as Soldiers' Wives

OTTAWA, April 8.—Requirements of the common and moral laws that one wife is enough for any man at one time, are doubtless observed about as rigorously among the rank and file of the Canadian soldiery as anywhere else.

If the Government, however, listening to the importunities of numerous women in Canada and without investigation conceded their claims, the number of "wives" drawing separation allowances would be considerably out of proportion to the "husbands" toiling in the trenches and qualifying for the remuneration in question.

Some stories have been published regarding this plurality of wives business, which are not true. There is a wide difference between the woman who claims to be married to a soldier and thus entitled to his support, and the one who is able to establish such a claim by producing a marriage certificate.

One report has it that a well developed case of Mormonism has been discovered in the ranks at the front owing to five wives claiming the separation allowance of one man. Inquiry shows the facts to be exaggerated.

DO NOT RELY ON SAY SO.

There have been cases where three or four women laid claim to the allowance of an individual soldier, whose affections were broadly disseminated, but the Department does not go on the say-so of the claimants. The certificate of marriage must be produced when any doubt arises. It is this safeguard which prevents the treasury being mulcted by women who, learning of the enlistment of men friends, forthwith to the separation allowance.

According to the terms of the Order-in-Council respecting separation allowances the legal wife is "it" in regard to payments. The others, no matter what their claims or the degree of their intimacy, are not allowed a look-in. Each case is investigated on its merits.

The separation allowance branch as well as the Patriotic Fund, have discovered numerous attempts at deception and a plurality of women claiming the material substance of one individual. There are a number of cases, but not hundreds as reported, wherein prima facie evidence was established of one man having two wives.

BIGAMY EXPOSED.

Often it is through these applications that the bigamist is exposed. The first wife, learning that her husband has enlisted, takes a chance and puts in a claim without the knowledge of the second marriage, while wife number two, with whom he would have been living at the time of enlistment, does so as a matter of course.

There have been cases where the wives first learned of their mutual predicament when confronted with the evidence of contradictory claims. The husband in such instances is assured a warm welcome home when the war is over. The legal wife, that is to say, number one, regardless of whether she was living with her husband or not, gets the allowance.

Cases are quite numerous where four or five applications have been been made for the pay of one soldier, but it does not follow that all claimed to be wives. Some were mothers, sisters, daughters or other kin, but, as stated, in a number of cases it has been established that two wives actually existed with or without knowledge of their husband's bigamous conduct.

While the attempted illegal raids may be numerous, few "get away with it." The investigation made into each individual case and the substantial proofs called for preclude any extensive fraud or deception being perpetrated.

THE HORRORS OF WAR

Of 30,000 Boys Who Started From Serbia Only 7,000 Reached Vido And They Arrived only to Die—But Few are Now Alive and their Death is a Question of Few Days—Nothing of Human Left of the Survivors But their Eyes

ROME, April 10.—In a grove of orange and olive trees close to the sea on the small Island of Vido, near Corfu, thousands of tents were pitched about two months ago to shelter wounded Serbian soldiers, the youngest and most exhausted of the Serbian army after the retreat across Albania to the Adriatic.

The encampment, however, proved too large, as the number of soldiers for whom accommodation had been provided was greatly over-estimated. In fact, only 7,000 soldiers arrived, and they only arrived to die. They were so utterly exhausted that "nothing human was left of them but their eyes." Hundreds of them died as soon as they were landed; many are dying every day. Only a few are still alive, but their death is only a question of weeks, perhaps of days, and before long the encampment will be empty and not a single soldier will be left on the small Island of Vido.

When Serbia was invaded by the Germans, Austrians and Bulgarians and the retreat of the Serbian army across Albania to the Adriatic became necessary, in every town and village all the young men who had not joined the colors, boys who had not reached military age (under 18 years, some much younger, barely 15, in fact) were ordered in all haste to serve their country. They followed the drummer boys sent to summon them in every town and village, and marched to the depots, where they received a cap, an overcoat and a bread-bag, and thus became soldiers.

More than 30,000 new soldiers were collected and a column of "boys" was formed and placed in charge of a mounted gendarme, whose orders were to lead them in safety to the frontier.

When the frontier between Serbia and Albania was reached the gendarme told the boys to march straight ahead, and, pointing to the west, he added that there they would find the sea and ships and then left them.

ONE-HALF PERISHED.

Without a leader or a guide, the boys crossed the frontier and marched through Albania in search of the sea and the ships which they hoped to find within a couple of days at the utmost. They were overtaken and passed by columns of old soldiers, armed, equipped and officered, who gave them all the bread they had and encouraged them to follow. No one has described how long it took these boys to reach the sea and how much they suffered from hunger, exposure and fatigue. They ate roots and the bark of trees and yet they marched on toward the sea. At night they huddled together for warmth and slept on the snow, but many never awoke in the morning, and every day the number decreased until when the column reached Avlona only 15,000 were left out of the 30,000 that crossed the frontier.

The Italians at Avlona had no hospital accommodation for 15,000. They could not possibly allow these Serbian boys, covered with vermin and decimated by contagious diseases to enter the town. They had them encamped in the open country close to a river and gave them all the food they could spare, army biscuits and bully beef. The water of the river had unfortunately contaminated as corpses in an advanced stage of decomposition had been thrown in, but the Serbian boys drank all the same.

By the time the ships to convey them to Corfu arrived, the 15,000 had been reduced to 9,000. About 2,000 more boys died during the 21 hours' journey between Avlona and Vido and thus only 7,000 reached the encampment in the grove of orange and olive trees by the sea on the Island of Vido.

The French and Serbian doctors attached to the encampment said that if it were possible to have a bed for each boy, an unlimited supply of milk and a large staff of nurses, perhaps out of the 7,000 boys landed at Vido about two-thirds could have been saved. There are no beds, no nurses and no milk at Vido, however, and despite the hard work of the doctors and their efforts to improvise a suitable diet during the last month more than 100 boys have died every day.

ARE BURIED AT SEA.

As it is impossible to bury them on the island, a ship, the St. Francis d'Assisi, steams into the small port of Vido every morning and takes the hundred or more corpses out to sea for burial. The allied war vessels at Corfu lower their flags at half-mast, their crews are mustered on deck with caps off, and their pickets present arms as the St. Francis d'Assisi steams by with her cargo of dead for burial in that sea toward which the boys were ordered to march.

And the survivors lying on the straw, waiting for their turn to die "with nothing human left of them but their eyes," must wonder as they look at the sea and the ship with the bodies of their dead comrades on board, whether this is the sea and the ship that the only leader they had, the Serbian gendarme that saw them safely to the frontier, alluded to when he raised his arm and pointed to the west and told them to march in that direction.

Roman Meal is Granulated For a Purpose.

This purpose is defeated if it is stirred while cooking porridge. Roman Meal is cut into little granules, so that it will mix thoroughly and at once with the digestive juices. It cannot then ferment and become "acid" or produce indigestion, and it will not pack in the bowel and cause constipation. If cooked properly, without stirring, in a double boiler, or a boiler set in a basin of water, it is the most delicious porridge known. It's cooling, strengthening and positively relieves constipation. Ask your doctor. Try also the ready-cooked form known as Roman Meal Nuggets.

LETTERS FROM OVERSEAS

FROM JOHN S. POPE

France, March 18th, 1916.

Dear Mother and all:

Just a few lines, for now, for it may be some time before I can write again. However, I will always try and get away a postcard just to say I am well.

The weather made a big change about ten days ago, and really now it is just like summer. The dust on the roads is flying, and the trees and grass are nice and green.

Well, mother, I suppose you know what this nice weather means. We have been waiting for it for some time. Things are starting to move lively now, and before many days I am quite sure we will be into it, tooth and nail.

We have been trained so long now and worked so hard that I am sure we will see and be in the thickest of it.

Now mother, do not worry. Just hope for the best. I am going to do the very best I can, and if I fall why, you can say that you have given your only son for a just and noble cause.

I am proud to be here, and further, am proud to be able to go in the front line, stand by my comrades and fight.

I am well, and feel just fine. This nice weather makes one feel good. Surely will pity those Germans when we once get them moving.

Now, I have some work which I must do, for I have to march a long, long, distance to-morrow, with a very heavy load.

Now, with the very best of love and all the rest.

Hurry and write.

Loving son,
JOHN.

Note:—Following the receipt of the above, Mr. Samuel Pope (of Corbyville) received a telegram announcing the wounding of his son, to what extent was not ascertained.

OBSEQUIES

SUSANNA SILLS

At Belleville cemetery yesterday afternoon the remains of the late Mrs. Susanna Sills relict of the late Mr. Samuel Sills of Sidney township, were laid at rest. Many relatives and friends were in attendance at the obsequies. At the family residence, Avondale, services were conducted by Rev. S. C. Moore, pastor of the Tabernacle Church, who also officiated at the grave. Favorite hymns of the deceased were suitably rendered. A number of beautiful floral tributes were placed upon the casket. The bearers were, Messrs. R. Vandervoort, C. M. Farley, G. Bell, J. Ketcheson, G. W. Bates and F. Graham.

MRS. J. A. HOLGATE

The remains of the late Mrs. John A. Holgate, who died at Bowmanville, were yesterday afternoon interred in Foxboro cemetery. At Foxboro Methodist Church an impressive service was held, at which Rev. Mr. Jones, Rev. Dr. Clarke and Rev. Dr. Baker, Principal of Albert College, took part. The sacred edifice was filled to overcrowding with relatives and friends from near and far. Upon the casket were placed a number of floral designs. The bearers were, Messrs. J. Bryant, Geo. Wicket, N. Bird, Ben. Faulkner.

In Making
Grape-Nuts

honest whole wheat flour and malted barley are blended, made into dough, moulded into loaves and baked. The loaves are then sliced and baked a second time—in all about twenty hours of thorough baking.

Grape-Nuts possesses all the rich, nourishing elements of the grains, including the vital mineral salts so necessary for vigorous mental and physical activity. Many foods lack these essential elements—especially is this true of white bread and white flour products, because in making flour white most of the energizing mineral salts of the grain are thrown out in the milling process.

With Grape-Nuts it is different, for all the nutriment of the grain is retained. Then the long baking renders the food easily and quickly digestible,

Always ready to serve direct from its sanitary, tight-sealed carton, Grape-Nuts is in the form of granules of tender crispness that have a delicious nut-like flavour. Four teaspoonfuls of Grape-Nuts with a little cream alongside is a splendid, well-balanced part of any meal and gives a wonderful return in sturdy brain, nerve and muscle.

"There's a Reason."

THIS IS THE 617TH DAY THE BRITISH EMPIRE HAS BEEN AT WAR WITH GERMANY.

HIS EFFORTS A FAILURE.

Many reasons have been put forward to explain the retirement from the command of the German navy of Grand Admiral Von Tirpitz. One that is palpably absurd is that the passing of Von Tirpitz means that Germany has experienced a change of heart and that the policy of frightfulness has been abandoned.

Admiral Von Tirpitz has been retired, obviously, because his methods were embarrassing to the Imperial Chancellor and to the Chancellor's Imperial master. If Germany had experienced a change of heart, it would have come some time ago. There has been no campaign of frightfulness of late to compare with the campaign that was in evidence at this time last year. It is ridiculous to say that the nation which made the barbarous sinking of the Lusitania an occasion for national rejoicing under official auspices has been shocked by anything that has happened on the seas since that time.

In so far as Von Tirptiz was barbaric, says The Montreal Mail, he was acceptable to Germany from the Kaiser down; his reputation as a national hero rested upon his policy of maritime frightfulness. What made him impossible, obviously was his inability or unwillingness to co-operate with the Imperial Chancellor and the Kaiser in their diplomatic schemes to pull the wool over the eyes of the neutral world.

Admiral von Tirpitz was the creator of the modern German navy and his retirement marks the failure of the navy. The world has laughed at Germany's attempts to advertise the presence of her ships in the Kiel canal as a naval victory. Germany, by retiring Von Tirptiz, admits what the rest of the world realized long ago. But, in the matter of frightfulness, Germany will be more dangerous without Von Tirpitz than she was with him. Diplomacy will now go hand in hand with piracy. Awkward situations, in which the real Hun impulse is revealed, will come seldom or not at all. Barbarism from now on will be directed with intelligent co-operation between the civil and the war lords.

Admiral Von Tirpitz has retired, but the influences in Germany which created and condoned Von Tirpitz are still in evidence. Those who imagine that the Huns have experienced a change of heart, rather than a change of mind, are due for a rude awakening.

WHEN THE TEST CAME.

If Sir Wilfrid Laurier had not already regretted his indiscreet display of temper on the Government's announcement of investigation by commission, the Finance Minister's accurate analysis of the motives behind such action brought home to him his unwisdom. In his speech following he had shifted his ground. "I prefer a parliamentary committee," was the announcement, "but I am not wedded to it. The one thing that I am insistent upon is that the inquiry shall not be limited." The Opposition leader quoted British precedent of investigation during war time and went on to use stronger language in regard to the Shell Committee than has, perhaps, yet been heard in the House. He declared that it had "misappropriated people's money and that General Bertram, in signing the contracts he did, must undoubtedly have been under the spell of a "sinister influence." In a crisis like this those who had failed to do their duty had been guilty of crime and the House, if it shielded them, would share that crime, concluded Sir Wilfrid.

Then came the vote. In view of reports of Government disunion so freely circulated in a large section of the press, it was awaited, as intimated, with unusual interest.

Sir Robert said nay to the Laurier resolution, and eighty-one followers, after endorsing their leader's vote with a full-throated cheer, which must have sounded discouragingly in the ears of those who hoped and predicted only mutterings of discontent, rose and did likewise. The tidal wave had receded and left the rock of Government firm. The shell debate was over.

◆

The return of Col. Allison, if such takes place according to his expressed intention, will have a decided political effect. In the first place, the Opposition has been consistently maintaining that the Colonel would never, never be seen again, not merely because he would not think it wise that this should be, but also for the reason that he would not be encouraged to do so. "The Government knews he is a thousand miles away and hopes he'll stay there," was the way Mr. F. F. Pardee put it, and Mr. F. B. Carvell almost shrieked it. Mr. E. M. Macdonald went a step further and maintained that all the Government's professions would be a hollow mockery until J. Wesley Allison came back. And now Mr. Allison says he's coming back. And Mr. Pardee and Mr. Carvell and Mr. Macdonald are saying nothing.

London Chronicle: In our dealings with alcohol we are far behind, France, and have not shown the same wisdom in protecting the health of our soldiers as they have in protecting theirs. In Paris and other French towns officers and soldiers are not allowed to enter cafes where drink is sold, between the hours of 10 and 5, and the closing hours are much earlier than in England. Between 12 and 2 French soldiers can enter restaurants for food and drink, but are not supplied with spirits. The retail sale of spirits in Marseilles and in most French towns is prohibited to men of all ranks, including men not yet mobilized, and the prohibition extends to men employed in munition factories.

Kingston Standard: There is a point in the British Chancellor's speech regarding excessive war profits which is worth consideration in Canada. He says that firms carrying on large businesses accepted great risks and responsibilities, and needed to build up large reserves of capital, as after the war they would be called upon to meet strong competition abroad. There is also the point, we might mention, that many of them will have to alter their manufactures after the war.

With Colonel Roosevelt's hat in the ring once more and the Republicans of Indiana supporting Mr. Charles W. Fairbanks for the presidential nomination, it begins to look like old times in the United States, says the Montreal Gazette. Perhaps even Mr. Bryan's supporters will soon be making themselves heard.

From Columbus, N.M., comes the information that the American troops seeking Bandit Villa have entrenched themselves. The fact is of a nature to annoy the public of the United States, who are hoping for a quick capture and the ending of the little unpleasantness. When soldiers entrench these days they usually do so to stop a while.

$40=NO CURE
$1 SPENT IN ZAM BUK CURED

This was the experience of Pte. C. Oakley of the 96th Highlanders, Saskatoon. He writes:

"While employed in a stone yard, I cut my leg very badly. I immediately went to a doctor who sewed up the wound and attended me for five weeks, during which time I was obliged to give up my work. At the end of that time the wound had not healed, and the doctor advised me to go to hospital. As the doctor's charge was $40, and he had done me absolutely no good, I determined to try something on my own account, and hearing Zam-Buk highly recommended, I commenced using it. In two weeks the wound had so healed that I was able to return to my work and perseverance resulted in a complete cure. One dollar's worth of Zam-Buk did what a forty-dollar treatment had failed to do! I shall never be without Zam-Buk again—Am taking a supply with me to the front, and think every other soldier should do the same."

Profit by others' experience, and when you sustain an injury, apply Zam-Buk in the first place, and save yourself needless suffering and expense.

Zam-Buk is equally good for burns, bruises, and all other injuries; also for eczema, ulcers, abscesses, eruptions, boils, piles, running sores and blood-poisoning. Best for children's sores. All druggists 50c. box, 3 for $1.25, or direct from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto. Send 1c. stamp and trial box will be mailed you.

THE RIVER MOIRA

Crash! Crash! Crash! like booming cannons—
'Tis the Moira giving way.
The stern reign of Winter's ended,
Summer now doth hold full sway.

Boom! Boom! Boom! the ice is piling
O'er the island at the south,
Crackling like to bursts of thunder,
Foams the water's passions, wroth.

And the stately tress seem smiling,
Sentinels they've stood their ground,
When the heights of Moira's Spring tide
Swirled their riven branches 'round.

A stretch of water, gleaming, rushing,
Gallantly a boat sails by,
No more hand of man shall guide her,
Gleefully she seems to ply.

Then the ice packs crush around her,
Rush and boom—she rears on high,
I can see her outline plainly,
Then the ice jam flings her by.

Grinding with a rush of fury,
Or, mayhap, 'tis but in play;
(Sorry jest—like reasoning manhoods)
See the wreckage strew the way.

By the bridge the ice is jamming,
But dauntless on its piers it stands,
Unshaken by the mighty heaving,
Sheltered by the isle's headland.

O'er the road a pool is forming,
By the week's end 'twill be gone,
To the waters of the Quinte
Will the seething Moira run.

Birds are singing, squirrels are chattering,
Green the wheat upon the field,
Bright the sunshine and the glamour,
What shall be the harvest's yield?

Peep the chickens—time to feed them,
Work doth plead, my pen I cast;
Muse's call must yield to Duty—
A half hour's wasted, forever past.

I regret my time spent scribbling,
I would that I did not indite;
So with breaking of the river,
I've resolved: I'll cease to write.

Somehow I'll keep a-rhyming thoughts
From poetic verse a-winging;
But when my fancies rhyming go,
How can I keep from singing?

Church Union In The West

Rev. Dr. Geo. Bryce Discusses Conditions There

WINNIPEG, April 10.—Rev. Dr. Bryce, probably the best known Presbyterian minister in Western Canada, left here last night for Toronto to attend a meeting of the committee of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church dealing with church union. Several older western representatives are expected to meet the committee in Toronto and take part in the deliberations.

Dr. Bryce states that sentiment in the East is undergoing considerable change on the question of the union of the Presbyterian, Methodist, and Congregational churches. This is largely due, he says, to the fact that the problem which the churches must solve is in the west, and this section of the country is very strong for the change. He points out that of thirty-seven western presbyteries, not one is opposed to the new move, while the vote of the people in the west is overwhelmingly in favor of it.

Dr. Bryce points out that certain difficulties of a practical kind have arisen owing to the steps in this direction that have already been taken. As a result of the decision reached at the meeting of the assembly in Edmonton twenty-three union churches have been formed and the ministers in these congregations have no formal identification with any organization. Presbyterian ministers who serve a portion of them lose their standing in their own church and the same is true of Methodist ministers. Dr. Bryce will move at the meeting of the assembly here in June that church union in the west may be allowed to become effective at once, and that arrangements may be made for the general union in 1918.

There is widespread sentiment in the west generally that if the east refuses church union for the entire church, it will not be permitted to fail in this country, whatever the outcome or result may be.

Doctors Restore Life To Drowned

BALTIMORE, April 10.—Some time ago physicians at the Johns Hopkins hospital investigated a machine to restore to life those apparently dead from drowning. The machine proved successful on animals that could be put under treatment immediately after the accident.

With the idea of restoring life some time after the accident the physicians began to search for the desired serum. This has been found. It has been tried on animals in the laboratories and in a number of cases has proved successful.

However, in most of the cases there have been after effects, such as high blood pressure or hardening of the arteries.

According to the physicians, if the serum can be injected in the person several hours after the accident it will restore the person to life.

In one case of an animal the serum was injected four hours after the drowning and the animal was brought back to life, but died later of a high blood pressure.

The Eternal Lover

by Edgar Rice Burroughs

Copyright, 1914, by W. G. Chapman

The hair along the wolf hound's spine stiffened in a little ridge of bristling rage. The girl unslung her rifle, shifting the leash to the hand that carried the heavy spear of the troglodyte, but she was unafraid.

Suddenly, just before her, a little band of antelope sprung from the grass in startled terror, there was a hideous roar and a great body hurtled through the air to alight upon the rump of the hindmost of the herd.

A single scream of pain and terror from the stricken animal, a succession of low growls and the sound of huge jaws crunching through flesh and bone, and then silence.

The girl made a slight detour to avoid the beast and its kill, passing a few yards above them. In the moonlight the lion saw her and the hound.

Standing across his fallen prey, his flaming eyes glaring at the intruders, he rumbled his deep warning to them, but Victoria, dragging the growling Terkoz after her, passed on, and the king of beasts turned to his feast.

It was fifteen minutes before Terkoz could relocate the trail, and then the two took up their lonely way once more.

Into the foothills past the tortured strata of an ancient age it wound. At sight of the naked rock the girl shuddered, yet on and up she went until Terkoz halted, bristling and growling before the inky entrance to a gloomy cave.

Holding the beast back, Victoria peered within. Her eyes could not penetrate the darkness.

Here evidently the trail ended, but of a sudden it occurred to her that she had only surmised that the bloody spoor they had been following was that of the man she sought.

It was almost equally as probable that Curtiss' shot had struck Old Raffles' mate and that, after all, she had followed the blood of a wounded lioness to the creature's rocky lair.

Bending low, she listened, and at last there came to her ears a sound as of a body moving, and then heavy breathing and a sigh.

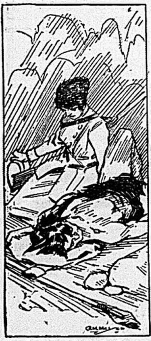
"Nu," she whispered, "is it you? I have come!" Nor did it seem strange to her that she spoke in a strange tongue, no word of which she had ever heard in all her life before.

For a moment there was silence, and then, weakly from the depths of the cave, a voice replied:

"Nat-ul!"

It was barely a whisper.

Quickly the girl groped her way into the cavern, feeling before her with her hands until she came to the prostrate form of a man lying upon the cold, hard rock. With difficulty she kept the growling wolfhound from his throat.



Victoria Kneeled Beside the Prostrate Form of Nu.

Terkoz had found the prey that he had tracked, and he could not understand why he should not now be allowed to make the kill. But he was a well trained beast, and at last at the girl's command he took up a position at the cave's mouth on guard.

Victoria kneeled beside the prostrate form of Nu, the son of Nu, but she was no longer Victoria Custer. It was Nat-ul, the daughter of Tha, who kneeled there beside the man she loved.

Gently she passed her slim fingers across his forehead. It was burning with a raging fever. She felt the wound along the side of his head and shuddered. Then she raised him in her arms so that his head was pillowed in her lap and kissed his cheek.

Halfway down the mountainside, she recalled, there was a little spring of fresh cold water. Removing her hunting jacket, she rolled it into a pillow for the unconscious man and then, with Terkoz at her side, clambered down the rocky way.

Filling her hat with water, she returned to the cave.

All night she bathed the fevered head and washed the ugly wound, at times squeezing a few refreshing drops between the hot lips.

At last the restless tossing of the wounded man ceased, and the girl saw that he had fallen into a natural sleep and that the fever had abated.

When the first rays of the rising sun relieved the gloom within the cavern Terkoz, rising to stretch himself, looked backward into the interior.

He saw a black haired giant sleeping quietly, his head pillowed upon khaki hunting coat, and beside him sat the girl, her loosened hair tumbled about her shoulders and over the breast of the sleeping man, upon which her own tired head had drooped in the sleep of utter exhaustion.

Terkoz yawned and lay down again.

* * * * * * * *

After a time the girl awoke. For a few minutes she could not assure herself of the reality of her surroundings. She thought that this was but another of her dreams.

Gently she put out her hand and touched the face of the sleeper. It was very real; also she noted that the fever had left.

She sat in silence for a few minutes, attempting to adjust herself to the new and strange conditions which surrounded her. She seemed to be two people—the American girl, Victoria Custer and Nat-ul. But who or from where was Nat-ul she could not fathom other than that she was beloved by Nu and that she returned his love.

She wondered that she did not regret the life of ease she had abandoned and which she knew that she could never again return to. She was still sufficiently of the twentieth century to realize that the step she had taken must cut her off forever from her past life, yet she was very happy.

Bending low over the man, she kissed his lips and then, rising, went outside and, taking Terkoz with her, descended to the spring, for she was thirsty.

Neither the girl nor the hound saw the white robed figure that withdrew suddenly behind a huge bowlder as the two emerged from the cave's mouth.

Nor did they see him signal to others behind him who had not yet rounded the shoulder of the cliff at the base of which they had been marching.

CHAPTER VII.

The Lonely Man.

VICTORIA stooped to fill her hat at the spring. First she leaned far down to quench her own thirst.

A sudden, warning growl from Terkoz brought her head up, and there, not ten paces from her, she saw a dozen white robed Arabs and behind them half a hundred blacks. All were armed; evil looking fellows they were, and one of the Arabs had covered her with his long gun.

Now he spoke to her, but in a tongue she did not understand, though she knew that his message was unfriendly, and imagined that it warned her not to attempt to use her own rifle which lay beside her. Next he spoke to those behind him, and two of them approached the girl, one from either side, while the leader continued to keep his piece leveled at her.

As the two came toward her she heard a menacing growl from the wolfhound and then saw him leap for the nearest Arab. The fellow clubbed his gun and swung it full upon Terkoz's skull, so that the faithful hound collapsed in a silent heap at their feet.

Then the two rushed in and seized Victoria's rifle. A moment later she was roughly dragged toward the leader of the ill favored gang.

Through one of the blacks, a west coast negro who had picked up a smattering of pidgin English, the leader questioned the girl, and when he found that she was a guest of Lord Greystoke an ugly grin crossed his evil face, for the fellow recalled what had befallen another Arab slave and ivory caravan at the hands of the Englishman and his Waziri warriors. Here was an opportunity for partial revenge.

He motioned for his followers to bring her along. There was no time to tarry in this country of their enemies, into which they had accidentally stumbled after being lost in the jungle for the better part of a month.

Victoria asked what their intentions toward her were, but all that she could learn was that they would take her north with them. She offered to arrange the payment of a suitable ransom if they would return her to her friends unharmed, but the Arab only laughed at her.

"You will bring a good price," he said, "at the court of the sultan of Fulad, north of Tagwara, and for the rest I shall have partly settled the score which I have against the Englishman."

So Victoria Custer disappeared from the sight of men at the border of the land of the Waziri, nor was there any other than her captors to know the devious route that they followed to gain the country north of Uziri.

When at last Nu, the son of Nu, opened his eyes from the deep slumber that had refreshed and invigorated him he looked up expectantly for the face that had been hovering above his, and as he realized that the cave was tenantless except for himself a sigh that was half sob broke from the depths of his lonely heart, for he knew that Nat-ul had been with him only in his dreams.

Yet it had been so real! Even now he could feel the touch of her cool hand upon his forehead and her slim fingers running through his hair. His cheek glowed to her hot kisses, and in his nostrils was the sweet aroma of her dear presence.

The disillusionment of his waking brought with it bitter disappointment and a return of the fever. Again Nu lapsed into semiconsciousness and delirium, so that he was not aware of the khaki clad white man that crept warily into the half darkness of his lair shortly after noon.

It was Barney Custer, and behind him came Curtiss, Butzow and a half dozen others of the searching party. They had stumbled upon the half dead Terkoz beside the spring; and there also they had found Victoria Custer's hat, and plainly in the soft earth between the bowlders of the hillside they had seen the new made path to the cave higher up.

When Barney saw that the prostrate figure within the cavern did not stir at his entrance a stifling fear rose in his throat, for he was sure that he had found the dead body of his sister, but as his eyes became more accustomed to the dim light of the interior he realized his mistake—at first with a sense of infinite relief and later with misgivings that amounted almost to a wish that it had been Victoria, safe in death; for among the savage men of savage Africa there are fates worse than death for women.

The others had crowded in beside him, and one had lighted a torch of dry twigs, which for a few seconds illuminated the interior of the cave brightly. In that time they saw that the man was the only occupant and that he was helpless from fever.

Beside him lay the stone spear that had slain Old Raffles. Each of them recognized it. How could it have been brought to him?

"The zebra killer," said Brown. "What's that beneath his head? Looks like a khaki coat."

Barney drew it out and held it up.

"God!" cried Curtiss. "It's hers!"

"He must have come down there after we left, got his spear and stolen your sister," said Brown.

Curtiss drew his revolver and pushed closer toward the unconscious Nu.

"The beast!" he growled. "Shooting's too good for him. Get out of the way, Barney; I'm going to give him all six chambers."

"No," said Barney quietly.

"Why?" demanded Curtiss, trying to push past Custer.

"Because I don't believe that he harmed Victoria," replied Barney. "That's sufficient reason for waiting until we know the truth. Then I won't stand for the killing of an unconscious man, anyway."

"He's nothing but a beast—a mad dog," insisted Curtiss. "He should be killed for what he is. I'd never have thought to see you defending the man who killed your sister."

"Don't be a fool, Curtiss," snapped Barney. "We don't know that Victoria's dead. The chances are that this man has been helpless from fever for a long time. There's a wound in his head that was probably made by your shot last night.

"If he recovers from that he may be able to throw some light on Victoria's disappearance. If it develops that he has harmed her I'm the one to demand an accounting—not you. As I said before, I do not believe that this man would have harmed a hair of my sister's head."

"What do you know about him?" demanded Curtiss.

"I never saw him before," replied Barney. "I don't know who he is or where he came from, but I know—Well, never mind what I know, except that there isn't anybody going to kill him other than Barney Custer."

"Custer's right," broke in Brown. "It would be murder to kill this fellow in cold blood. You have jumped to the conclusion, Curtiss, that Miss Custer is dead. If we let you kill this man we might be destroying our best chance to locate and rescue her."

As they talked the gaunt figure of the wolfhound, Terkoz, crept into the cave. He had not been killed by the Arab's blow, and a liberal dose of cold water poured over his head had helped to hasten returning consciousness.

He nosed, whining, about the cavern as though in search of Victoria.

The men watched him in silence after Brown had said: "If this man harmed Miss Custer and laid out Terkoz the beast 'll be keen for revenge. Watch him, and if Curtiss is right there won't any of us have to avenge your sister. Terkoz 'll take care of that. I know him."

"We'll leave it to Terkoz," said Barney.

After the animal had made the complete rounds of the cave, sniffing at every crack and crevice, he came to each of the watching men, nosing them carefully.

Then he walked directly to the side of the unconscious Nu, licked his cheek and, lying down beside him, rested his head upon the man's breast so that his fierce, wolfish eyes were pointed straight and watchful at the group of men opposite him.

"There," said Barney, leaning down and stroking the beast's head.

The hound whined up into his face, but when Curtiss approached he rose, bristling, and, standing across the body of Nu, growled ominously at him.

"You'd better keep away from him, Curtiss," warned Brown. "He always has had a strange way with him in his likes and dislikes, and he's a mighty ugly customer to deal with when he's crossed. He's killed one man already—a big Wamboli spearman who was stalking Greystoke up in the north country last fall. Let's see if he's got it in for the rest of us."

One by one Terkoz suffered the others to approach Nu. Only Curtiss seemed to rouse his savage, protective instinct.

As they discussed their plans for the immediate future Nu opened his eyes with a return of consciousness.

At sight of the strange figures about him he sat up and reached for his spear, but Barney had had the foresight to remove this weapon, as well as the man's knife and hatchet, from his reach.

As the cave man came to a sitting posture Barney laid a hand upon his shoulder.

"We shall not harm you," he said, "if you will tell us what has become of my sister." Then, placing his lips close to the other's ear, he whispered, "Where is Nat-ul?"

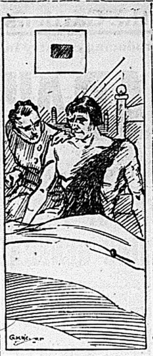
Nu understood but the single word Nat-ul, but the friendly tone and the hand upon his shoulder convinced him that this man was no enemy.

He shook his head negatively.

"Nu does not understand the stranger's tongue," he said.

Then he asked the same question as had Barney. "Where is Nat-ul?"

But the American could translate only the name, yet it told him that here indeed was the dream man of his sister.



"We shall not harm you if you will tell us what has become of my sister."

And so they set out for the ranch. Four half naked blacks bore the rude stretcher.

Upon one side walked Terkoz, the wolfhound, and upon the other Barney Custer.

Four Waziri warriors accompanied them.

Nu, weak and sick, was indifferent to his fate. If he had been captured by enemies, well and good. He knew what to expect—either slavery or death, for that was the way of men as Nu knew them.

CHAPTER VIII.

A Prisoner.

There were times when they despaired of his life, for the bullet wound that creased his temple clear to the skull had become infected but at last he commenced to mend and after that his recovery was rapid, for his constitution was that of untainted physical perfection.

The several searching parties returned one by one without a clew to the whereabouts of Victoria Custer. Barney knew that all was being done that could be by his friends, but he clung tenaciously to the belief that the solution to the baffling mystery lay locked in the breast of the strange giant who was convalescing upon the cot that had been set up for him in Barney's own room. Curtiss had been relegated to other apartments, and Barney stuck close to the bedside of his patient day and night.

His principal reasons for so doing were his wish to prevent the man's escape and his desire to open some method of communication with the stranger as rapidly as possible.

Already the wounded man had learned to make known his simpler wants in English, and the ease with which he mastered whatever Barney attempted to teach him assured the American of the early success of his venture in this direction.

Curtiss continued to view the stranger with suspicion and ill disguised hostility. He was [illegible] that the man had murdered Victoria Custer, and, failing to persuade the others that they should take justice into their own hands and execute the prisoner forthwith, he now insisted that he be taken to the nearest point at which civilization had established the machinery of law and turned over to the authorities.

Barney, on the other hand, was just as firm in his determination to wait until the man had gained a sufficient command of English to enable them to give him a fair hearing and then be governed accordingly.

He could not forget that there had existed some strange and inexplicable bond between this handsome giant and his sister nor that unquestionably the man had saved her life when Old Raffles had sprung upon her. Barney had loved and lost because he had loved a girl beyond his reach, and so his sympathies went out to this man who, he was confident, loved his sister.

One of the first things that Barney tried to impress upon the man was that he was a prisoner, and, lest he should escape by night when Barney slept, Greystoke set Terkoz to watch over him.

But Nu did not seem inclined to wish to escape. His one desire apparently was to master the strange tongue of his captors.

For two weeks after he was able to quit his bed he devoted his time to learning English. He had the freedom of the ranch, coming and going as he pleased, but his weapons were kept from him, hidden in Lord Greystoke's study, and Barney, sometimes with others of the household, always accompanied him.

Nu was waiting for Nat-ul.

He was sure that she would come back again to this cave that his new acquaintances called a bungalow. Barney was waiting for the man to mention his sister.

One day Curtiss came upon Nu sitting upon the veranda. Terkoz lay at his feet. Nu was clothed in khaki—an old suit of Greystoke's being the largest that could be found upon the place, and that was none too large.

As Curtiss approached the wolfhound turned his wicked little eyes upon him, without moving his head from where it lay stretched upon his forepaws, and growled. Nu extended a booted foot across the beast's neck to hold him in check.

The hound's show of hostility angered Curtiss. He hated the brute, and he hated Nu as cordially—just why he did not know.

Production And Thrift Campaign

The Need of Production

It must be plain to the most obtuse and unreasoning mind that twenty-four or twenty-five millions of men cannot be withdrawn even from the swarming population of Europe without effecting a huge reduction in the produce of labor and of the soil. Women may in a measure supply the places of men, but it must be remembered that women have also their sphere in the economics of life. Therefore in taking them to the land they are being taken, in the main, from other employment. Consequently, if for every man who goes to fight there was a woman to take his place in agriculture or other industry there would still be a deficiency not only in labor but in production. At the present time 400,000 women are being called for to take the place of 250,000 British soldiers recruited from farm work.

Hence it is clear that no matter what steps may be taken, either during the war or after the war, there must be an enormous shortage of the requirements across the Atlantic for many years to come. And that shortage for a period subsequent to the declaration of peace will be as keenly felt as at any time during the gigantic struggle. With the normal scramble for existence resumed there will be less immediate government control— in other words there will be less systematic regulation of supplies. To meet the huge demands that must succeed extra consumption, tremendously less production and immensely greater wastage, there will be abundant use, not for one year's bountiful crops, but for similar blessings during a score of successive years. Where and how can this assured demand be met? There is but one answer to the dual question—by the undevastated countries and by redoubled efforts at production in those countries.

That Canada is not the only country that has not had its resources in large part exhausted or destroyed, is true but there is plenty of reason to believe that the nations of Europe not engaged in the war, have been drawn upon to the utmost by those so engaged; hence when the time comes all eyes will be turned from east to west for succour. Canada, being the nearest to the great centre of demand, will, of necessity, apart from sensational reasons, be the first looked to and will have the greatest opportunity. The bogey of released Russian harvests has been on parade since the war commenced, but Russia, with twelve or fifteen million men called to arms, largely of the peasant class, has suffered and is suffering, like the rest. She, too, will need reorganizing, rejuvenating and regenerating. Hence, while for a few months after the outbreak of hostilities, there may have been something to be expected from the release of stores of wheat and other grain from Odessa and other Black Sea ports, there is nothing available now and there may be little in the next decade. Hence, Canada's role is plain—to go on producing, to go on garnering and storing, if necessary, in the sure and certain hope of ultimate profit and prosperity. There never was a time, and probably never will be another time, when we were more urgently called upon to produce, in increased quantities, not alone all articles of food, but every article that enters into the industrial life of peoples.

THE ADVENTURE OF THE MISSING GENERAL

Skylark Romes Consults With Sir Conan Doyle in Connection With the Strange Disappearance of General Firebrace, Who Is Feared to Have Been Murdered

(The Weekly Tatler)

"Busy, doctor?" asked Skylark Romes, walking into the study of Sir Conan Doyle's house in Slowborough.

The author, who sat furiously writing, surrounded by maps, blue books, pamphlets, and press-cuttings by the hundredweight, glared unamiably at his visitor.

"Horribly," he answered.

"You are writing a history of the war," pursued Romes, dropping into a chair, and producing a pipe which he proceeded with long, nervous fingers to load. "That is common knowledge. This morning you are engaged on an account of the Dardanelles campaign. You are describing the first landing of our heroic but unfortunate troops, and regretting that the leaders' strategy was not equal to the courage of the men. I deduce this from the furrows on your brow, the sparkle of your eyes and the dilation of your nostrils, the first signifying regret, the second——"

"You're wrong," snapped the doctor. "I am engaged on a history of the war, but I haven't reached the Dardanelles expedition yet; and when you interrupted me I was answering a cinema impressario who wants me to write him a picture play."

"Tut, tut!" said Romes with an unruffled air. "I am your fifth caller this morning. Two came in motorcars, one on a bicycle, two walking, a man and a woman—the latter carrying a basket."

"You have simply been inspecting my gravel walk on all fours," retorted the doctor, unimpressed. "The knees of your trousers are in evidence against you, though such evidence is unnecessary to one who knows your methods as well as I."

"Not my trousers, but Watson's. "I always borrow Watson's when I have an investigation to carry out. That's one of the things he doesn't tell in the yarns you and he used to write."

"Well, well," said Conan. "Why are you here to-day? What do you want, Romes?"

"You've been neglecting me too long, my dear friend. I'm getting bored in retirement. I want a job—hence this visit."

"Frankly, Romes, I've none for you. As an historian, I find detective stories are now somewhat infra dig. for me to write."

"Really," ejaculated Romes, angrily rising to his feet; "really, Doyle, I, beneath you!—I, the most celebrated man in the world."

"You forget Charlie Chaplin. But indeed, Romes, I meant nothing derogatory to you personally. My real objection to receiving you is that it means reviving Watson."

"Colonel Mars and Captain Courageous," said the parlor-maid at this juncture, and two khaki-clad officers followed their names.

"A thousand pardons for disturbing you, Sir Arthur, but we've heard that the celebrated Shylark Romes is calling upon you," this with a bow to Romes, "and we are badly in need of his service."

"Indeed, Colonel," said Romes.

"A most surprising mystery has befallen the camp. In two words, our chief, General Fireplace, has vanished."

"State the facts of the case, if you please."

"The General, as you know, is in command of the big camp at Oakdown Forest. He lives in a house on the London Road at the east junction of the camp. Last night he gave a dinner party to fifteen of his officers, including Courageous and myself. The party broke up about eleven."

"Was the General then in his usual health?"

"Well, not exactly," confessed the Colonel.

"Intoxicated?" queried Romes, lifting his eyeglasses.

"Not at all. The General's patriotism has led him to follow the example of the King and Lord Kitchener. He had before then—I state this in confidence—a large capacity for liquor and the change he has made in them from the alcoholic to the teetotal has not led to any great diminution in the quantity. What did the General drink last night, Courageous?"

"Two lemonades, three ginger beers, a bottle of Hops' non-alcoholic ale, two sodas and milk, and three glasses of barley-water," replied the Captain. "He confessed to internal pain, and went to bed directly after the guests had departed."

"He was wise," commented Romes.

"When I called at nine this morning," continued Mars, "there was no sentry at the gate, and no General within. His bedroom was in disorder. All his uniforms were there, but the General had disappeared. We searched (following the methods described in the famous detective memoirs), but could find no clue. The mystery is inexplicable."

"Let us go," said Romes, alertly "Come, Doyle."

"I think you'll have to excuse me. My history——"

"Nonsense, my dear chap. In Watson's absence your duty is clear. Indeed, I decline to stir without you."

The four men entered the big car waiting, and were driven rapidly to the scene of the mystery. Nothing was said on the way, the others respecting Romes's obvious desire for silence. He sat in deep thought, only rousing himself when introduced into the General's bedroom. Then for a quarter of an hour he was busy with his microscope; and Watson's trousers suffered severely as he crawled about the room. Finally he stood up and shook his head, frowning intently.

"What do you make of it, Mr. Romes?" asked the Colonel, respectfully.

Romes did not reply, but, leaving the room, walked slowly down the stairs, the others following. Romes circled the house like a questing hound; halting at last just outside the small garden at the back. A path here led on the right to the camp, and to the cemetery on the left. He pointed to a tiny dark stain on the hard earth's surface.

"I was looking for that," he said, simply. "It is as I fear. Gentlemen, we shall never see the General again alive."

"Blood!" ejaculated Colonel Mars, after stooping down and investigating. "You suspect foul play, Mr. Romes?"

"The General has been murdered, and his body carried out this way. We shall find his corpse in the cemetery. I will tell you what occurred. He was visited last night by two men. They disposed of, or bribed, the sentry and managed to gain access to his bedroom. They were probably Germans. Have any Germans been seen about here lately?"

"Well, William le Queux, who was here last week, has seen a number, so he told us. He says they average one and a quarter to an acre in Sussex." Romes nodded. "One of them was tall, one short. They carried the body out into the garden and along this path. The wound began to bleed, and we shall find more blood stains."

Leading the way and pausing occasionally to indicate what were indubitably fresh blood stains, Romes followed the path some thirty yards, until, close by the wall of the cemetery, in the dry ditch outside, were plain indications of a newly-made sepulchre.

"The General lies there," he said.

Two soldiers and spades were speedily procured, and set to work. Romes stood by with folded arms in a Napoleonic attitude; the others watched eagerly as the men, who unenlightened into the circumstances, and, apparently rather amused at their task, proceeded to throw up the earth.

"Why, what the deuce is going on here?" cried a harsh voice.

Its effect on the two officers was electrifying. With utter astonishment in their eyes and mien, they gazed at the speaker—a stout, elderly man of high military rank, as his uniform indicated.

"It's General Firebrace," gasped Colonel Mars.

"You've not been murdered, sir?" queried Captain Courageous.

Murdered? What the—what are you talking about, Courageous? Mars, what has happened?"

"Your mysterious disappearance—"

"Yes, yes, I ought to have left a note. I did write one, but I was feeling queer and forgot to leave it. The fact is I had a bad night owing to the infernal temperance beverages I drank at dinner-time, and woke early this morning in great pain. I got up and was about to 'phone to the regimental doctor, when two gentlemen arrived in a motorcar from London. They came from the Secretary of War, who desired my immediate presence. I said I was feeling too ill to travel, but one of them carried a flask; and after a lot of whiskey—taken medicinally, of course—I was well enough to dress and accompany them. What is this nonsense about my having been murdered?"

"You'd vanished, sir," explained Colonel Mars, "and your man reported all your uniforms were in your room and your pyjamas missing."

"The man's a fool who can't count, and if he had looked in the linen-cupboard he'd have found my pyjamas. Why, the sentry saw my visitors arrive, and my departure with them."

"He's disappeared, General."

"Beg pardon, sir," said one of the two Tommies—who, having suspended digging operations on the General's arrival, were standing listening—"are you alluding to Private Jawker?"

"Yes."

"'E ain't disappeared 'E's in clink for deserting his post and arguing with the sergeant. He's a trade unionist, and having done eight hours' duty in twenty-four by 'alf-past six this morning, considered himself entitled to chuck sentry duty and go to his billet. 'E made an eloquent speech about the rights o' man on his way to prison, and 'e may be still continuing it to himself in the guard-room."

"Then that mystery is explained. But——" continued the Colonel, striking the ground with his stick, 'who is buried here?"

"Why, don't you know what we're digging up, sir?" grinned the private "D' You?"

"Rather, sir, since I 'elped to bury it last night. It's beef, sir, a hundred pounds o' prime beef which we can't eat, and get into trouble if we give away. Men go on leave, but their rations are issued just the same. So we puts it in a basket and digs a hole and buries it."

"But what ass thought I was murdered?" demanded the General.

"Mea culpa," said Romes, with one of his fascinating smiles. "I blundered; I made a wrong diagnosis. I do occasionally, but Watson suppresses those cases. I am Skylark Romes, General. Possibly you have heard of me. At least I was right about the blood-stains, although they had proceeded from the beef during its removal, and I was right about the two men visiting you. Was one, may I ask, short, and one tall?"

"Yes, sir."

Romes rubbed his hands gleefully. "Not an entire failure this case, after all. Now let me explain how I deduced that."

"You'll excuse me, Mr. Romes," said the General. "I'm busy, and so are my officers, whom I desire to consult on military matters. Dig up that meat, men, and give it away. You have my authority to do so. Good-morning, gentlemen."

"Shall I tell you how I deducted the height of the visitors?" began Skylark Romes to Sir Conan Doyle.

"I've no time to listen," said Sir Conan. "I want to get back to my history. I've wasted enough time as it is." And with a curt nod he strode off.

"And this," soliloquized Skylark Romes," is gratitude! I made that man. No matter, I'll go and see Watson. I'm always sure of welcome there. And I've got to return his trousers."

Farmers Try To Save Cemetery From Waves

Erie's Rollers Are Eroding the Bank and Endangering Christ Church

AMHERSTBURG, April 10.—Rollers from Lake Erie are causing erosion along the Canadian shore to such an extent that part of the cemetery of Christ Church, Colchester township, near Amherstburg, has been washed into the lake.

Several graves are now under water, and the farmers are fighting desperately to save the historic graveyard, where are buried their forefathers and soldiers who fought in the war of 1812. Trees, brush and stone are being hauled into position, in an effort to prevent further damage.

The church is also in danger, being only a few feet from the brink, which is rapidly disappearing. The situation is so serious that the Government has been asked to lend assistance.

Sentenced For Attempt To Rob

Victim's $600 and Ticket to Saskatchewan Were Recovered at Hotels

MONTREAL, April 10.— Thomas Eagan, Ottawa, and Thomas Murphy, St. John, N.B., were yesterday sentenced to seven years in the penitentiary by Judge Lanctot for attempting to rob Joseph Billodeau, Rochester, N.Y. Eagan and Murphy wore the uniform of the 87th Battalion, a Montreal regiment stationed at St. John's, Que.

Detectives O'Donnell and Labine saw Eagan, Murphy and Billodeau going the rounds of the hotels yesterday morning, and suspecting that an attempt would be made to rob Billodeau, followed the trio all day. Last night in an alley off Cathedral street, Eagan and Murphy turned on Billodeau, and the officers promptly arrested them.

Billodeau said he had $600 and a ticket to Saskatchewan when he reached Montreal, and left it at hotels somewhere and had forgotten where. The police were notified by the proprietors of the Grand Central Hotel and the Quebec Hotel, when the case was reported in the papers that Billodeau's money had been left with them.

BELIEVE NEW TRAIL WILL LEAD TO VILLA

New Cavalry Columns Hurried Southward and Others Take Different Directions

GENERAL PERSHING CAMP, SOUTH OF NAMIQUIPA, April 9.—(By aeroplane and wireless to Columbus, N.M.)—New cavalry columns were hurried southward yesterday, while the other columns in the field are taking a new direction. The new movements, coupled with other reports received, increase the conviction of Brig.-Gen. Pershing and his officers that troops on the new trail of Villa, opened several days ago, following reports made by an aviator, are on the right track.

The American line of pursuit is now 400 miles long and some of the difficulties encountered by the troops through the rocky passes were indicated in the report of an aviator today, that he had been obliged to drop messages in the small parachute to an advanced detachment.

New reports of Villa's flight received today said that because of his wounds Villa is riding on a stretcher carried on the shoulders of his men, and that he is accompanied only by a small personal bodyguard and rearguard.

FAMOUS DRIVER IS KILLED ON RACE TRACK

CORONA, Cal., April 9.—Both Bob Burman and his mechanician, Erich Schrader, are dead as a result of an accident in the running of the Corona Grand Prize yesterday afternoon. Burman who was removed to Riverside, died at a hospital there at 6 o'clock to-night. Schrader died a few minutes after his removal to the Corona Hospital from the temporary hospital at the track. A bursted tire in the ninety-fifth lap caused the accident.

W. F. Speer, a guard on the course, was instantly killed and twenty spectators more or less injured when Burman's car suddenly swerved from the course, mounted the curb, dashed into a pole, turned over and pinned both Burman and Schrader under it.

Prize Court Has Millions To Award

LONDON, April 8.—The estimate £30,000,000 worth of cargoes condemned by prize courts is shown to be greatly exaggerated by returns just completed by the Treasury for the consideration of Parliament.

Figures in the returns, which include only courts in the United Kingdom up to the end of March, show that condemned cargoes brought a total of £188,677, while proceeds from cargoes of freight uncondemned and still awaiting adjustments and release represent a total of £2,112,267.

Much of this, according to the returns, represents perishable cargoes, which had to be sold, and therefore a large proportion of this sum may yet reach the original owners.

It is expected that the figures in the returns may show a considerable increase when reports are received from colonial prize courts, especially those from Alexandria, where many German ships have been condemned. There is not the remotest possibility, however, that the grand total will reach the estimate of £30,000,000.

SYNOPSIS OF COAL MINING REGULATIONS.

Coal mining rights of the Dominion, in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Yukon Territories, the North-West Territories and in a portion of the Province of British Columbia, may be leased for a term of twenty-one years at an annual rental of $1 an acre. Not more than 2,560 acres will be leased to one applicant.

Applications for a lease must be made by the applicant in person to the Agent or Sub-Agent of the district, in which the rights applied for are situated.

In surveyed territory the land must be described by sections or legal sub-divisions of sections and in unsurveyed territory the tract applied for shall be staked by the applicant himself.

Each application must be accompanied by a fee of $5 which will be refunded if the rights applied for are not available, but not otherwise. A royalty shall be paid on the merchantable output of the mine at the rate of five cents per ton.

The person operating the mine shall furnish the Agent with sworn returns accounting for the full quantity of merchantable coal mined and pay the royalty thereon. If the coal mining rights are not being operated, such returns should be furnished at least once a year.

The lease will include the coal mining rights only, but the lessee may be permitted to purchase whatever available surface rights may be considered necessary for the working of the mine at the rate of $10.00 an acre.

For full information application should be made to the Secretary of the Department of the Interior, Ottawa, or to any Agent or Sub-Agent of Dominion Lands.

W. W. CORY,
Deputy Minister of the Interior.

SYNOPSIS OF CANADIAN NORTH-WEST LAND REGULATIONS.

The sole head of a family, or any male over 18 years old, may homestead a quarter section of available Dominion land in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta. Applicant must appear in person at the Dominion Lands Agency or Sub-Agency for the District. Entry by proxy may be made at any Dominion Lands Agency (but not Sub-Agency) on certain conditions.

Duties—Six months residence upon and cultivation of the land in each of three years. A homesteader may live within nine miles of his homestead on a farm of at least 80 acres, on certain conditions. A habitable house is required except where residence is performed in the vicinity.

In certain districts a homesteader in good standing may pre-empt a quarter-section alongside his homestead. Price, $3.00 per acre.

Duties—Six months residence in each of three years after earning homestead patent; also 50 acres extra cultivation. Pre-emption patent may be obtained as soon as homestead patent, on certain conditions.

A settler who has exhausted his homestead right may take a purchased homestead in certain districts. Price $3.00 per acre. Duties—Must reside six months in each of three years, cultivate 50 acres and erect a house worth $300.

The area of cultivation is subject to reduction in case of rough, scrubby or stony land. Live stock may be substituted for cultivation under certain conditions.

QUINTE BATTALION MINSTRELS SCORE A GRAND SUCCESS

Boys of the 155th Play to a Packed House and are Generally Commended For an Excellent Rendition of a Splendid Programme—Some of the Features Brought Out Brilliant Talent

Back to the days of Cool Burgess and his famous minstrels might place us in the ages read about but not desired; but certainly there was always something to brighten one up when the minstrels landed in town. Frequently, even in the modernized present, we have heard the wish expressed that a return to the days of the "bones and tambo" to the extent of arranging for an occasional visit by the ebony-hued gentlemen might not be out of order. And when it was whispered that the 155th Battalion were planning for an outbreak in that direction our people—the more matured in particular—could scarcely await the scheduled hour.

So, last night fully twelve hundred of our townspeople, old and young, rich and poor—the judge, the advocate, the merchant, the workman, and society in general, wended their way to Griffin's Opera House, armed with pasteboards for specific seats, and awaited impatiently the lifting of the curtain. My! what a shout went up when George Dulmage as interlocutor, resplendent in uniform and lace, occupied the central chair of the semi-circle, with middies on either hand, while the famous Ab. Wheeler, decorated with the blackest cork, and immaculate linen, occupied one end, and Sergeant-Major Sam Turner, directly opposite. In the rows extending backward were Corporal Robson, Ernie Lang, David Clark, Pte. J. Hamer as bonesmen, the tambos being handled by Ab Wheeler, Pte. J. A. Phillips, Lieut. Wallace, Lieut. Fish and Bandsman Wilkinson.

Did we hear anyone remark that Ab. Wheeler was becoming antiquated in his manipulation of the tambo, or that "Dear old George Dulmage" was not as fresh in cracking jokes as of yore! Never a one! For Ab is just as litie as ever, his voice as clear, his feet as light in the jig, and when he smiles—my, what a beaming expression—just natural, you know.

The introduction, "Humoreske, Swanee River", just as the curtain went up, followed by the opening choruses, with orchestral accompaniment and "Welcome to the Merry Minstrels" were inspiring starters for what followed. "We'll Never Let The Old Flag Fall" by Ernie Lang; "When Old Bill Bailey plays the Ukalale" by Bugle Corp. Robson; "Somewhere in France" by Mr. Robert Blaind, Jr., "I'm All Alone," by Sam Turner; "Asleep in the Deep" by Band-man Burke; "What's All This Noise About?" by Ab Wheeler, introducing fancy clog dancing, were especially creditable.

A tenor solo, "Mother," by Capt. J. V. Doyle, was finely rendered, an added attraction by the word M-O-T-H-E-R, printed on cards, and held by six boys in order, the appearing of an aged lady tenderly conducted across the stage by the singer, gave a thrilling effect.

Right here, and quite unexpected, Mayor H. F. Ketcheson, in a brief address, let a number of young ladies loose, each carrying a basket containing Battalion badges, which were freely sold at twenty-five cents each.

The Belleville Male Quartette, composed of George Dulmage, Ernest Monck, Capt. Wrightmeyer, and Sergt. Minns, rendered several interesting selections, and the song, "A Night in Flanders", by Capt. W. H. Wrightmeyer, received a hearty applause.

Then came another turn for Ab Wheeler in a humorous monologue, "The Black Watch."

A unique, and none the less attractive number on the programme, was the Dancing Festival, introducing the famous dancers Pipe Major Johnstone and Tommie Bowie, in Scotch garb, assisted by Lieut. Sandford.

Sam Turner in "Imitations" was truly original, representing the cackling of the hen, when eggs were fifty cents a dozen, the crowing of the rooster, the lowing of the cow and calf, the sawing of wood, and a perfect representation in sound of the action of a trolly car in ascending a grade.

A night scene at the front, brought out vividly the discipline of war. The programme concluded with the operatic burlesque "The Capture of the U-B-Dam, in which George Dulmage, Lieut. Fish, Capt. Wrightmeyer and fifteen or twenty others appeared to advantage.

On the whole it was a splendid production, and the 155th Battalion are deserving of unlimited credit for the smooth manner in which the entertainment progressed.

The 155th Battalion Orchestra, Bandsman Hinchey in charge, accompanied the singers throughout, Miss Edna Wallace presiding at the piano.

About fifty singers and players occupied the stage in the opening act, the chorus singing being particularly creditable.

With the rendering of the National Anthem one of the most enjoyable events of the season came to a close.

Back Was Lame And Ached; Could Do Very Little Work

Suffered Much From Kidney Disease For Years, But Cure Came With the Use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills

Doctors had tried to cure this man but failed to get at the cause of trouble, probably because they relied on medicines which act on the kidneys only. The strong feature about Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills is their combined action on liver, kidneys and bowels. In many of these cases the disease is so complicated that ordinary kidney medicines fail to be of much benefit. Under such conditions Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills usually touch the spot and effect a cure.

Had they been only moderately successful Dr. Chase would never have selected them for world-wide distribution. As it was, the demand for these pills resulted naturally from their superior merit, and there was nothing else to do but supply them in large quantities.

Mr. Simeon Shieloff, Birchbrook Orchards, Birchbank, B.C., writes:

"For several years I suffered greatly from kidney disease. I was weak and could do very little work. My back was lame and ached and I suffered much from headaches. Tried doctors and obtained no relief. Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills were recommended by a friend, and after taking four boxes I think I can say that I am cured, for I feel as well as I ever did."

This statement is endorsed by Mr. Harry Anderson, J. P., who writes:—

"This is to certify that I am personally acquainted with Mr. Simeon Shieloff and believe his statement in regard to Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills to be true and correct."

Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, one pill a dose, 25 cents a box, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Company, Limited, Toronto.

MUSIC AND DRAMA

"POTASH AND PERLMUTTER" TO-NIGHT

Ever since Montague Glass wrote the first "Potash and Perlmutter" story for the Saturday Evening Post there developed a strong desire to see Abe and Morris on the stage. The two partners had become international favorites when Manager A. H. Woods presented them two seasons ago at the Cohan Theatre, New York City, and their reception was an ovation. "Potash and Perlmutter" broke all records for runs and for receipts long before Mr. Woods, in answer to insistent demands from the theatre-goers of the rest of the country, determined to break the apparently endless engagement, but now at last this most delightful of all comedies is to be seen at Griffin's Opera House tonight. From the minute that Manager Forhan announced that he had secured "Potash and Perlmutter" as the big attraction of the season inquiries as to its date of presentation have been enormous.

THE ETERNAL CITY

Baseball's Greatest Players Bushwhackers

Cobb and Others did not Waste Time in Minor Leagues

The brighest stars of the diamond game have come from the way down minors, directly from the colleges or from off the semi-pro sandlots.

The ratio of high grade minor leaguers is smaller than that of the supposedly inferior candidates. It is a strange condition—but true. It is but natural to suppose that the men who have worked their way from the insignificant leagues to the American association, Pacific Coast and International are surer of success in the majors. But——

Well, dig out the histories:

Ty Cobb jumped from the Augusta club of the Southern league to the American league. It was quite a leap. Did Ty "land?"

Walter Johnson was laboring for the Weiser (Idaho) semi-pro team in 1907 when Washington decided to give him a trial. All the laws of baseball ruled that Johnson wasn't fit for such fast company—that he needed more seasoning. Well, you know about Walter, don't you?

Tris, Nap and Rest

Tris Speaker was purchased from Little Rock in 1907 for $500. Eddie Collins went direct from Columbia university to the Athletics. Jack Murray, who shone so brilliantly in the Giant garden for so many years, never had any minor league experience, coming direct from Notre Dame university in 1906 to the big leaguers.

"Nap" Rucker, long ranked as the greatest southpaw in the game, jumped from the Augusta (Ga.) team to the Dodgers—and he's been there since. Eddie Plank, the most remarkable flinger of the age, never was a minor leaguer. He joined the Athletics after he graduated from Gettysburg college. Chief Bender played college baseball, barnstormed for a while, and then was snared by Connie Mack.

"Rabbit" Maranville played two years for the New Bedford (Mass.) team in the New England league, then in 1912 joined the Braves and immediately became a sensation. Fred Snodgrass left St. Vincent's college in 1907, joined the Giants the next spring and continues to linger in fast company.

Were Very "Bushy"

"Slim" Sallee, the Cardinal heaver, made the big jump from the Tri-State league to the Nationals—and hasn't moved since. Mamaux, the pitching wonder of the Pirates, came from the Huntington team in the small Ohio state league. That was in 1914. A year later found him battling for the premier pitching honors of the Tener circuit.

Larry Doyle, champion National league batsman in 1915, is a Springfield (Three-Eye league) product. Johnny Evers had only one year's experience as a minor leaguer. That was in 1901 with Troy. In 1902 he joined the Cubs. Charley Dooin, now with the Giants, is from the Western league.

Jack Barry, of the Red Sox, was graduated from Holy Cross college in 1908. Immediately afterward Connie Mack "roped" him and "Black Jack" has been starring since. John Henry, of the Senators, ranking as one of the best catchers in the game, had no minor league experience. He joined the Washington club in 1910, after graduating from Amherst. Charley Herzog was a collegian in 1905, a semi-pro in 1906, with the Tri-State league in 1907. In 1908 he got a chance with the Giants and hit 300. He's been a major leaguer since.

Clouters and Pitchers

"Home Run" Baker was a semi-pro in 1907. In 1908 he played in the Tri-State circuit. A year later he joined the Athletics. Vice Saier, the great Cub first sacker, jumped to the majors from a small minor league.

The New York State league isn't ranked high, as minors go, yet it developed the mighty Grover Alexander. It seasoned him to such an extent that, during his first year as a Phillie, he won 28 out of 41 games—average .683, and he did it with a joke team behind him.

Ivy Wingo, the backstopping star, played in 1909 and 1910 with Greenville team in the Carolina association—an organization so small that it is almost unknown outside the state. The next season Wingo got a tryout with the Cardinals—and he made good. Heinie Zimmerman played with Wilkesbarre in 1906 and part of 1907, was sold to the Cubs—and—Heinie ever since has been making life unhappy for National league umpires.

Faber, the White Sox pitcher, went to the Sox direct from the Des Moines team. George Foster, who helped the Red Sox to a world series victory, played in the small Texas league in 1912. The next spring he got a chance with Boston—and he's still starring. Ray Collins, a mainstay for the Red Sox for six years or so, joined the Sox immediately after graduating from the university of Vermont.

Or From Colleges

Christy Mathewson pitched for Bucknell college in 1899, for Norfolk, in the diminutive Virginia league, in 1900—and the next season he became a major leaguer. Jack Coombs was a Colby college heaver from 1902 until 1905. Then he signed with the Athletics.

Bill Doak was secured by the Cardinals from the Akron team of the Inter-State league in 1913, after a brief tryout with the Reds in 1912. The next season—1914—Doak led the National league pitchers. Ray Caldwell, of the Yankees, leaped from the Ohio and Pennsylvania league to the American—some jump—and pitched for a .500 average in his debut year. Leon Ames, a major league hurling star since 1903, came direct from the Ilion team in the New York State circuit. "Lefty" Tyler, of the Braves, was a college player in 1908, a semi-pro in 1909, with Lowell in 1910—and then he went to Boston.

RITCHIE'S

SILK SUITS

In a Strictly New Showing For Easter, Priced
$20, $25, $30, $32, $35
Up To $45

Perhaps that wide range of prices will convey to you some idea of our present display of New Silk Suits for Easter—and it is truly a fresh new showing as the majority of the garments were only placed in stock Saturday. They are in the most wanted fabrics, such as Taffetas, Silk Poplins, Silk Crepe Poplins and Taffeta and Serge combinations. Various new style effects are introduced and the shades are what Fashion smiles most favorably upon just now. If it is to be a Silk Suit, be sure and see these.

CLOTH SUITS $15 to $45

The New Suits for Easter are really beautiful to view—unquestionably the smartest garments presented for several seasons. Of course we haven't the space to tell you about the different models in detail, so we want you to come in personally and see them. Come in at your earliest opportunity, as every day now means a heavy day's selling, which tends to deplete the showing, even though new models are arriving daily. As for prices the range is broader than ever before, and furthermore the values are exceptionally good. See our special value at $15.00.

Our Leading Silk Suit Values At $20.00

All stunning garments in Silk Poplin materials, featuring such new shades are Russian Green, Copenhagen, Navy and Black. Suit Coat has fancy girdle, two patch pockets, large collar and reveres, fancy sleeve and bell cuff; collar, cuffs and pockets stitched with white silk, also silk lined throughout; fancy buttons on coat and skirt, the latter being a plain flared style. They are indeed extra value at $20.00. The higher priced models are equally as good values. See windows.

SEPARATE COATS For Every Occasion

Whatever your taste or fancy may be, you are sure to find just the coat you like best in our superb collection and at a price to exactly suit you. There are coats to put on for eevry occasion with, of course, the Sport Coats largely in evidence. These we are showing in all the latest New York styles and fabrics, in checks, plaids, stripes and tweed mixtures, with a range of prices from $5.00 to $18.50.

MEN, CHOOSE YOUR NEW HAT AT RITCHIE'S

STETSON'S AND CHRISTY'S

These two famous makers have contributed the majority of the new Hat models to our Spring Display, although a few of the more reasonably priced soft Hat models are from a well known Canadian firm, and are priced at from $1.50 to $3.50. Stetson's Fur Felt Hats, $4.50. Christy's Soft Hats, $3.50. Christy's English Hard Hats, $2.50 and $3.00. What better choosing could one desire? (Men's store)

Body Of Soldier Found in Canal

OTTAWA, April 10.—Shortly after four o'clock yesterday afternoon the body of a soldier, very much decomposed and as yet unidentified, was found in the Rideau canal just back of the Central station.

The discovery was made by one of the station hands who noticed part of the body sticking up above the muddy water. It was clothed in a uniform bearing the shoulder numerals of the 77th Battalion. The collar badges were, however, missing and it is not certain yet whether he was a member of the 77th or not. If he was a member of the 77th he has been missing since Christmas because on Christmas Day the battalion was issued with regimental crests to replace the numerals. Nothing was found on the body by which any definition could be made. A rosary was all that was found in his pockets.

Coroner Baptie has decided that an inquest is necessary as the circumstances appear very peculiar. The right leg was broken and while it is possible that he fell into the canal and broke his leg in that way such a solution is not accepted by the coroner as satisfactory. The absence of any identification marks makes it more peculiar.

The adjutant of the 77th Battalion states that there are several members missing since last fall including one whose height would correspond with that of the body found. His age was, however, 20 years, and the man found in the canal is evidently much older.

Use Cocoanut Oil For Washing Hair

If you want to keep your hair in good condition, be careful what you wash it with.

Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali. This dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle, and is very harmful. Just plain mulsified cocoanut oil (which is pure and entirely greaseless), is much better than the most expensive soap or anything else you can use for shampooing, as this can't possibly injure the hair.

Simply moisten your hair with water and rub it in. One or two teaspoonfuls will make an abundance of rich, creamy lather, and cleanses the hair and scalp thoroughly. The lather rinses out easily, and removes every particle of dust, dirt, dandruff, and excessive oil. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and it leaves it fine and silky, bright, fluffy and easy to manage.

You can get mulsified cocoanut oil at most any drug store. It is very cheap, and a few ounces is enough to last everyone in the family for months

NOVA SCOTIA ELECTIONS

Move to Extend Parliamentary Term Finds No Support

HALIFAX, N.S., April 10.—A movement was started by the executive of the Canadian Club at Amherst for the postponement of the provincial elections, which must take place by midsummer unless legislation is passed extending the parliamentary term. A public meeting was called, but the proposal found no support and it dropped. Meanwhile, the nomination of candidates is going on and in King's County yesterday Lieutenant J. D. Spedell, of Kentville, and Fred L. Parker, of Berwick, were nominated by the Conservative convention. Lieut. Spedell is a Baptist minister, who some time ago joined the Canadian forces preparing for overseas work. He accepted. Mr. Parker was not present and his acceptance has not yet

Germans Still Resort to Fiery Fluids in Vain Attempt to Win Victory

Canadian Press Special.

PARIS, April 12—(Afternoon statement). On the left bank of the Meuse the Germans this morning delivered an attack on our positions at Caurettes wood, between Le Mort Homme and Cumieres, in which they used flaming liquids. They were everywhere repulsed.

On the right bank of the river there has been great artillery activity between Douaumont and Vaux, but last night saw no resumption of infantry fighting at this point.

It has been confirmed that a very violent offensive action occurred yesterday afternoon at four o'clock in this sector, which was repulsed by us, and cost the enemy heavy losses.

The night passed relatively quietly on the remainder of the front.

150,000 Die From Starvation

American Red Cross Worker Tells of Awful State of Affairs

PARIS, April 12.—William Willard Howard, of New York, secretary of the Albanian Relief Committee, who left Paris yesterday on his way to the United States from Albania, said that 150,000 human beings had died of starvation in Albania during the past eighteen months and that 500,000 were likely to die before normal conditions in that country were resumed.

Famine due to the failure of the crops as a result of the excessive rains, Mr. Howard said, has reduced the population to a pitiful condition, and typhus fever threatened to become an epidemic. Owing to the war commerce and industry in the country are paralyzed. The secretary said that the Christian work relief ship Albania carrying the fourth shipment of relief supplies still remained in the Mediterranean.

Mr. Howard is returning to the United States for the purpose of fitting out another relief expedition. He says the Albanians are not taking any part in the war for the Balkans.

CONDITIONS IN MUNITION FACTORIES INVESTIGATED

An Order in Council Passed by the Government Appointing Commissioners, Who Will Probe Affairs Relative to Labor

OTTAWA, April 12.—(Special.) — Labor conditions in munitions factories at Toronto and Montreal are to be investigated by a Government Committee. An order in Council was passed yesterday appointing Commissioners as follows:—Chairman, Judge Colin G. Snider of Wentworth county; Wm. Inglis of the firm of John Inglis & Co., Toronto, and John McClelland of Montreal, Vice-President of the International Association of Machinists. There has been considerable complaint from the employees of some of the munitions factories both at Toronto and Montreal in regard to wages and conditions of employment, and the Commission will nvestigate with a view to adjusting the differences of the workmen with their employers and preventing any interruption to the industry. The inquiry will begin at once.

BACK TO THE DAYS OF THE WOODEN OCEAN VESSEL

Wartime Needs Revive the Days of the Old Schooners—Nova Scotia Shipbuilder Has Contracts for Eleven of the Sailing Craft—Scarcity of Canadian Tonnage is a Real Problem

So great is the demand for Canadian tonnage that it has been found necessary to revert to the building of wooden vessels of the sailing type; a condition somewhat unique in the shipping world. When steel-built vessels supplanted the wooden craft, few of which have been constructed in recent years, it was never thought that the old-style craft would ever be received. But war has changed conditions, and incidentally brought about a condition of affairs on the upper lakes that was never dreamt of before the war started.

Mr. A. B. MacKay of Hamilton, a well-known vessel owner in Canadian marine circles yesterday stated that he had just placed an order with a shipbuilder at Meteghan, Digby county, Nova Scotia, for the construction of a four-masted wooden vessel, to cost $75,000. The same firm has just laid keels for 10 vessels of similar type for other Canadian vessel owners. These vessels will be used in the North and South America coastwise trade and in the West Indies service, and under the terms of the contracts they are to be delivered for service in October next. Their gross tonnage will be 1,200 tons.

The scarcity of Canadian tonnage occasioned by the transferring of some forty-five freighters from the upper lakes to salt water service has created a keen and spirited revival in the shipping world for vessels of all types, many of which have changed ownership have been prepared to place orders for the building of new vessels, it has been found almost impossible owing to the increased price of steel, the delivery of which would not be guaranteed within a limited time.

The consequence has been that the wooden vessel has found a ready market by reason of the fact that the timber is available and the builders in a position to guarantee deliveries in time to meet the demands of the vessel interests, hence the preference for the sailing craft under existing conditions. Mr. MacKay states that the schooners will be completed in every detail and will be fully equipped with all the modern appliances necessary for the loading and unloading of cargoes.

PROROGATION PLAN NOW ABANDONED

House Resumes After Easter Recess—Bilingual Question A Live Topic

OTTAWA, April 12.—Special—It was announced to-night that the house will adjourn next Wednesday until the following Tuesday for Easter. It will probably be the end of May before the business of the session has been completed.

Government members did not caucus this morning, as had been anticipated, and the conference may go over until after the Easter recess. Just now parliamentarians on both sides are marking time, but with the return of Maj.-Gen. Hughes the opposition no doubt will resume their shelling of the government trenches.

No announcement as to railway legislation is likely to be made in the immediate future. To-night the general topic of discussion is the debate upon the bilingual question, which, it is said, may be brought up in the house before the close of the session.

The English-speaking Liberals are not keen for the debate, but it is declared to be necessary from a party standpoint because of the impending provincial elections in Quebec.

The debate may come up upon a motion to go into supply, when a resolution will be offered, probably by Mr. Lapointe, the Liberal member for Kamouraska, calling upon the government to disallow the Ontario legislation by which the separate school board of Ottawa was ousted and the schools put in charge of a commission.

Canadian Troops In The Thick of Fight

Troops From Dominion Numbering Seventy-Five Thousand in Flanders

OTTAWA, April 11. — Although press despatches indicate severe fighting on the Flanders front where the Canadians are holding the line, the Militia Department is still without any information as to the extent of the fighting or losses. It is not expected that any information as to the troops engaged or their losses will be forthcoming until the present action has been concluded. Around St. Eloi, where the most severe fighting is in progress, are several Canadian brigades, and that they are in the thick of it is believed by the Militia headquarters here.

Some prominent militia officers believe this is the beginning of the big British offensive so long awaited, others say that it is only a German demonstration in force to prevent further concentration of Allied troops to resist the advance on Verdun. The British have been steadily taking over more and more of the French lines to permit of reinforcements for the French front at Verdun, and a strong demonstration on the British front would delay any further extension of their line.

The Canadian forces in Flanders number about 75,000, and no doubt are holding many miles of the line. The militia authorities here anxiously await details as growing casualty lists are ominous of heavy fighting by our men.

ANOTHER SPY PUT TO DEATH.

London, April 12—Special—A spy was put to death in London today. Announcement of the occurrence was made officially as follows:

"A prisoner charged with espionage was tried by our general court-martial at Westminster Guildhall on the 20th of March and the following days, and was sentenced to death, which was carried out this morning."

EXEMPTION OF HOTELS TAKEN UP BY LEGISLATURE

Premier Hearst Makes Promise of Consideration Along that Line—Provision May be Made for the Traveling Public After the Bars Go

TORONTO, April 12.—(Special—To assist hotel-keepers to stay in business after prohibition, Dr. Martyn (East Lambton,) introduced a bill yesterday, providing among other things for tax-exemption, for the exclusive right to sell soft drinks, cigars and tobacco, for direct grants of $200 a year, for tax exemptions for a year and for fixed assessments for twenty years, providing there is a three-fourths majority of three-fourths of the voters in favor.

The bill, which aims to help hotels particularly in smaller municipalities to provide accommodation for the traveling public after the bar has been abolished, provides for the placing of hotels under licenses which may be cancelled for infraction of the license laws, and for giving the exclusive rights of license to one hotel only where the business of the community does not warrant more than one.

Hon. Mr. Hearst said that some legislation along the lines suggested by Dr. Martyn would be enacted by the government after free discussion.

Napanee Woman Went Insane

Raced About the Streets, Went into a Church Pulpit and Talked Wildly—Brought to Rockwood Asylum

NAPANEE, April 11.—Sunday about noon, some citizens were thrown into a state of great excitement by the actions of a woman who had suddenly become demented. She raced around several blocks, screaming and shouting, and finally entered one of the churches, where she got into the pulpit and commenced a wild and incoherent religious talk. She was secured and later taken to Rockwood Asylum by Chief Barrett.

The platoon of the 146th Battalion, under Lieut J. J. Graham, took a route march to Deseronto yesterday afternoon, arriving back at 6.40 o'clock. This is the longest tramp the men have had yet, being fourteen miles, and they all finished in good shape.

The band of the 80th Battalion gave a farewell concert here in the Armouries on Saturday night, and was assisted by Misses Gertrude and Victoria Stares. There was a large attendance.

PROHIBIT SALES OF DUCKS AND GEESE

New Regulations Decided on by Fish and Game Committee

TORONTO, April 12.—An Act to prohibit the sale of wild ducks, wild geese, or other wild water-fowl was decided upon by the Fish and Game Committee of the Legislature today, as a step for lessening the unnecessary slaughter of game birds. Other important decisions were the prohibition of trapping fur-bearing animals without a license, farmers exempt; close season for partridge and grouse until Oct. 15, 1918; open season for woodcocks, November 1 to 15; for quail, the same, with a day bag limit of six and a season limit of 25; black and grey squirrels and wild turkey, November 1 to 15; ducks from Sept. 1 to Sept. 31.

The license fee for Americans is reduced from $50 to $25.

KAISER WILHELM JUST ESCAPES DEATH BY BOMB

ROME, April 12.—(Special.)—Reports from Berlin received by way of Switzerland state that the Kaiser is now at Potsdam, where he receives no one but members of his family and a few official personages.

When before Verdun the Kaiser had a narrow escape from being killed by a French bomb which exploded near him, killing several officers and destroying the Imperial motor car.

A German official communique announced that the Emperor was unhurt. His unexpected departure for Potsdam, however, and the mystery with which he surrounds himself have led to the supposition that the Kaiser was struck by a fragment of the shell or that the explosion has dangerously affected his nervous system.

Announced Villa Killed in Action

United States War Department Thinks Bandit is Dead at Last

QUERETARO, Mexico, April 11.—The War Department announced today it had reason to believe Francisco Villa had been killed in action, and that searching parties had been sent out to find his body.

Columbus, N.M., April 11.—Lieut. Dargue and Lieut. Gorrell of the aero corps, returning here today from a flight to San Antonio, Chihuahua, 330 miles south of the border, said the reports were current among the natives in the vicinity of Santa Anna that Villa was dead of blood poisoning, caused by his wounds.

Santa Anna is seventy miles southwest of Chihuahua City. Other reports indicated that Villa was in flight closely followed by American troops south of Parral and near the Durango border.

CANNONADING OPENS NEAR SALONIKI

It is Reported the Germanic Allies Have Captured Fortified Positions

Canadian Press Special.

PARIS, April 12.—The resumption of violent cannonading along the Greek frontier in the vicinity of Gievgeli and Doiran is reported in a despatch from Salonika to The Journal. It is said the French artillery had the advantage. It is also reported, but not confirmed, that the Germanic allies captured the fortified positions at Deve Tepe.

Berlin Reports Turkish Victory

Canadian Press Special

BERLIN, April 12.—A Turkish headquarters report of yesterday says the British suffered a bloody defeat near Felahie. Sunday, in an attack on Turkish positions near Felahie. All the British who succeeded in entering the Turkish trenches were bayoneted. After a battle lasting six hours, three thousand British dead were counted in and in front of the trenches.

NEW MANUFACTURIES BEING CONSTRUCTED

MONTREAL, April 12.—The trail smelter, in which the Canadian Pacific has a large interest, has started the construction of a plant for the manufacture of sulphuric and hydrofluoric acid, which is expected to be ready for operation in two months. A site is also being cleared for a copper refinery and the existing lead refinery will also probably be extended. The new plant for the manufacture of zinc is now in operation. Though shipments have not yet commenced, the copper converters now in course of installation are nearing completion, and should be working shortly. The new lead mill is in operation and working well.

SEIZURE JUSTIFIED BY GREAT BRITAIN

Canadian Press Special

WASHINGTON, April 12.—Great Britain's not replying to the American protest against the seizure of thirty-eight Austrians, Germans and Turks from the American Steamer in China, near Shanghai, was made public today by the State Department. It justifies the seizure on the ground that prisoners had been engaged in plots against the British in the far east, and were returning home to take up arms.

FELL DEAD FROM BICYCLE

STRATFORD, Ont., April 11. — Edgar Smith, 46, a carpenter in the G. T. R. shops, riding to work this morning on a bicycle, felldead in front of the Y.M.C.A. He leaves a widow and daughter. He came here from Cayuga several years ago.

REPORT OF OFFICIAL INVESTIGATION INTO SINKING OF DUTCH STEAMERS

Canadian Press Special.

AMSTERDAM, April 12.—The Dutch shipping council has issued a report of the official investigation into the sinking of the steamships Palembang and Tubantia.

In the case of the Palembang there were three explosions. The first was caused by a drifting mine which was fired upon by a British destroyer. This did no damage. The second was caused by a torpedo, possibly fired at the British destroyer, which passed in front of the latter, and the third was also from a torpedo, which must have been aimed at the Palembang, because the destroyer was by that time a long distance away. These torpedoes were seen by several witnesses, and their statements are confirmed by the fact that no other drifting mines were observed, that the Palembang was motionless, and, even supposing the current might have carried her against the mines, the explosions were on the wrong side of the ship for that.

In the case of the Tubantia, the statements of witnesses and experts prove the explosion which sank her was caused by a torpedo fired from some distance by a submarine or torpedo boat without warning.

ADVERTISE IN THE INTELLIGENCER

IN And ABOUT THE CITY

DEATH OF INFANT

Clarence E., infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry J. Hall, residing at 31 Canifton Road, died last night.

WILL EXAMINE RECRUITS

Capt. Harper of Madoc, will be in the city to-morrow to examine recruits for the 155th Battalion.

CHIMNEY BLAZE

The fire brigade had a run shortly after the noon hour to-day. A chimney blaze at a residence on Geddes street was the cause of alarm, but no damage resulted.

HORSE SLIPPED ON PAVEMENT

A horse attached to a delivery waggon slipped and fell on Front street this morning. The animal had to be unhitched from the vehicle before it was able to rise.

NAME OMITTED

Amongst the list of contributors of an entertainment given recently by the Shannonville Branch of the Red Cross Society, the name of Miss Maud Macfarlane, as one of the contributors, was accidentally omitted.

DIED IN MONTREAL

Word has been received here announcing the death in Montreal of Mrs. Wilder, wife of Mr. George Wilder, a former employee of The Intelligencer Office. Deceased was married a little over a year ago. The many friends of Mr. Wilder in this city will sympathize with him in his affliction.

OFF TO DESERONTO

The members of the 155th Battalion Minstrels went to Deseronto today where they will give a performance this evening. Previous to leaving the band in connection with the Battalion paraded Front and Bridge streets, rendering a number of marches.

A DISTURBANCE QUELLED

On Monday evening an altercation took place between some soldiers who were in a pool-room in the city. The trouble arose over interference of a game of pool that was being played. At first it was feared that the affair might result in serious injuries to some of the parties involved, but order was quickly restored upon the arrival of some members of the military police.

MISCELLANEOUS SHOWER

A very delightful social event took place at the home of Mrs. M. Denton, of Sidney, when the many friends of Miss Maude Denton surprised and gave her a miscellaneous shower. A very delightful time was spent in opening of gifts and reading of verses. The evening closed for the party by singing for "She's a Jolly good Fellow."

155TH MINSTRELS

Inadvertently the names of Mrs. Albert Johnstone was left out of our report of the performance given by the 155th Battalion Minstrels. Mrs. Johnstone did some excellent dancing with Pipe Major Johnstone and Mr. T. Bowie, which was much appreciated by the large audience present. This was the first public appearance of Mrs. Johnstone in eight years.

WOUNDED IN ACTION

Among the casualty list yesterday appeared the name of H. Delisle of Trenton, who was reported wounded. The unfortunate soldier was well known in Belleville, having left here with the 39th Battalion. Previous to leaving he was seriously ill in the local hospital, having been the victim of an attack of pneumonia. He, however, sufficiently recovered so as to leave with the Battalion. Mr. Delisle Delisle, a G.T.R. engineer, residing in Belleville, is a brother of the unfortunate soldier.

59th Battalion Lands in England

Many Belleville families will be relieved by the announcement that the 59th Battalion has arrived safely in England. The Battalion left Halifax a few days ago per Steamer Olympic, and it is stated will be stationed temporarily at Grayshot Camp, in the Aldershot district. Mrs. John Kennedy, wife of a former member of the Belleville police force, who resides on Benjamin street in this city, received a cablegram from her husband, which simply stated the Battalion had arrived safe.

Artillery School Closes Its Doors

Course of Progress at Kingston Institution Will be Last

No more artillery courses will be held in Canada after May 13.—This order, just decided upon by Ottawa, means that the course now in progress at the Royal School of Artillery, Kingston (which concludes May 1) will be the last. This announcement by the militia department indicates that there are probably enough artillery officers trained to fill the needs of the Canadian Expeditionary Forces during the remainder of the war.

Since there are a large number of young officers qualified, but not placed with overseas battalions, Gen. Logie has asked authority to have a "company" of officers organized to train as a company. It is probable that they would receive the pay of their rank. The training they would carry on would be more advanced, with a view of selecting the best for overseas service with the Canadian forces when opportunity arose.

With Imperial Army

In the event of calls from the British war office for young officers they would be available also for service with the imperial army. The foregoing plan would add to the practical importance of the school of instruction.

Two hundred and seventy-two recruits came forward for enlistment yesterday, 162 of them being accepted. The number offering was an increase of 68 as compared with the corresponding day last week. Yesterday's recruits were secured by the following battalions:

Units.	Recruits.	Strength
Q. O. R.	1	1083
Mississaugas	21	690
Buffs	25	686
Tor. Light Inf.	5	340
Beavers	36	514
Fusiliers	24	394
Bantams	13	428

The armouries depot wants a butcher, baker and a cook for Kapuskasing camp.

Recruiting in Counties.

The matter of recruiting in the counties of this district, after the battalions already authorized have been filled up, is being considered by Gen. Logie. As some counties have only a limited number of eligibles to draw upon, it is probable that Ottawa will be asked to grant authority for the formation of "depot battalions." These depot units could absorb the quotas of men raised in the various counties. The men could then be sent without delay overseas as drafts. In counties where a considerable number of eligible men were thought to be still available the formation of complete new battalions might be authorized.

Must Pass Depot.

It has been decided that recruits who are "rejected" by the medical officers at recruiting depots and who are afterwards sent up as "fit for attestation" by battalion medical officers, are not to be attested unless reconsidered by medical boards at the depot and accepted by them as fit.

An order just issued makes officers commanding units responsible that no troops enter private property while on manoeuvres.

A class in signaling for qualification of signaling officers will commence April 17 at Exhibition camp.

"Bombing" will be the subject taught at a special five-day course which commences at Exhibition camp this morning. Twenty men from each of these battalions will attend: 123rd, 124th, 126th, 134th, and 169th.

At Infantry School.

A new course of instruction opened at the Infantry School College street, yesterday, with 200 officers present. It is being conducted under new regulations which require those attending to wear uniforms of scarlet and blue. The new rules also provide that students must live in the school at night. A number of the class rooms have been converted into dormitories.

Beaver's Biggest Day.

The Beavers had a record day yesterday, when they sent 82 men up to the recruiting depot. Of this number 36 were accepted, 7 were sent to the hospital for minor defects, and 40 were to wear uniforms of scarlet and blue.

Preparedness

Now that all nations are talking preparedness, why not discuss health preparedness. While we have been negligent in protecting our country against the enemy, we have also failed lamentably in fortifying our human bodies against disease germs.

This has been proven in the recruiting offices, where so many men have been turned down by the examining doctors. Weak heart action; diseased lungs; thin, watery blood; defective eyesight, resulting from exhausted nerves. These are among the prevailing derangements which the examining doctors find.

Health has been neglected. The blood has not been kept in healthful condition. The nervous system has got run down, and the subject under inspection is in no condition to fight the enemies of his country or to withstand the attack of disease germs.

Health preparedness means the use of preventive treatment, such as Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, to enrich the blood, reinvigorate the starved nerve cells and keep the health at high-water mark. In this condition you have the strength, vigor and confidence which is necessary to the success and enjoyment of life. You have the vitality to defy disease germs and thereby escape many ills which find an easy prey in the run-down system.

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, by means of its blood-forming and nerve-invigorating influence, cures headaches, nervous indigestion, sleeplessness and irritability, and prevents such serious diseases as nervous prostration, locomotor ataxia and paralysis.

THIS IS THE 618TH DAY THE BRITISH EMPIRE HAS BEEN AT WAR WITH GERMANY.

CANADIAN FINANCES.

There is reason for much satisfaction with the condition of our Dominion finances, as will be noted from the Government's initial statement of the revenue and expenditure for the fiscal year ending with March 31 last, which is now made public.

There are likely to be some changes when the books are closed, but the effect will only be to a moderate extent. The revenue is given as follows, with comparisons by items for the preceding year:

	1914-15	1915-16.
Customs taxes	$75,479,336	$97,954,119
Excise taxes .	21,367,682	22,215,712
Post Office . .	12,589,460	18,165,213
Public works, etc. . .	13,072,114	21,527,907
Miscellaneous	9,190,328	11,385,714
Total . . .	$131,698,922	$171,248,668

There was in 1915-16 an increase in all items, both of taxation and where, as in the case of the post office and public works and railways, the receipts represented payment for service rendered. An increase in general trade as well as the increases in taxes contributed to make the total of last year $39,545,000 greater than in the preceding twelve months. It is probable, all things considered, that the burden of 1915-16 was more easily borne than that of 1914-15.

The record of the expenditures so far as the ordinary outlays of the administration are concerned is also to be counted satisfactory. Aside from the war outlays they are given as follows:

	1914-15	1915-16.
Ordinary services . .	$117,190,246	$107,730,367
Public works, Railway etc.	36,063,877	32,749,339
subsidies . .	4,630,273	1,400,171
Total . . .	$157,884,396	$141,879,877

In 1914-15 the expenditure outside of war outlays exceeded the revenue by $26,185,000. In 1915-16 the revenue exceeded the expenditure outside of war outlays by $29,368,000. The Government of Canada is following the wholesome British precedent of paying all interest on loans and providing something over out of revenue to decrease the debt burden of the war.

The war outlays are growing heavier. In 1914-15 they were given as $46,574,587. In 1915-16 they are put at $134,650,460. This latter figure may be exceeded when the final adjustment of the accounts is made. It is also likely to grow with each month as the number of men on service is increased and may soon reach half a million dollars a day.

A SCRUPULOUS PRIME MINISTER.

For a year past Sir Robert Borden has had Sir Charles Davidson employed as a Royal Commission in ferreting out charges of wrongdoing in connection with war contracts. Most of the charges were made by partisan Liberals and Liberal newspapers in the hope of making party capital, and most of them have been proved to be sheer libels. Now Sir Robert has taken the extreme step of appointing a second commission to investigate Imperial war contracts in which not a cent of Canadian money is involved and which were placed by a Shell Committee having no responsibility whatever to the Canadian Government. He has gone this length because one of his colleagues is said to have approved a division of profits on certain Imperial contracts amongst Col. Allison and his associates. It is not yet clear how Mr. Lloyd George will regard this invasion of the British Government's field by an Administration which has no claim on the money involved. The conclusion must be that the Canadian Prime Minister is bent on the fullest investigation of all charges in which his Ministry is even remotely interested.—Toronto News.

The News should have added: And where a wrong had been discovered, the guilty party or parties had been punished.

Hamilton Spectator: Everyone admits that ex-Senator Root would make an ideal President. Against his eligibility there are, first, the fact that he is a corporation lawyer, and hence vulnerable to any anti-trust agitation; and, secondly, his advanced age. He is now 71, and the following list will show the ages at which American Presidents have hitherto been inaugurated: Washington, 57; John Adams, 61; Jefferson, 58; Madison, 58; Monroe, 59; J. Q. Adams, 58; Jackson, 62; VanBuren, 54; Harrison, 68; Tyler, 51; Polk, 49; Taylor, 64; Fillmore, 51; Pierce, 48; Buchanan, 66; Lincoln, 52; Johnson, 56; Grant, 47; Hayes, 54; Garfield, 49; Arthur, 51; Cleveland, 48; B. Harrison, 56; McKinley, 54; Roosevelt, 43; Taft, 51; Wilson, 56.

Montreal Herald: There has been a lot of criticism of British strategy in connection with the force which is now besieged at Kut-el-Amara. It has been referred to as "sending a boy to do a man's work," and as an example of lack of foresight and preparation. Most people will be surprised to know that this expedition is now looked upon as a masterpiece of strategy. The Rev. Canon Parfit, a noted Turkish authority, advances two reasons for the claim—firstly, the diversion by this expedition of a proposed attack upon Egypt; secondly, a diversion of Turkish forces which allowed the capture of Erzerum, a triumph of the first magnitude.

Mail and Empire: Von Tirpitz's retirement is generally interpreted as meaning that the German war lords have decided to abandon their submarine campaign of "frightfulness." If this assumption is correct there are other reasons behind, one of them particularly being encouraging to the Allies. If Germany has decided to abandon "frightfulness" at sea it means that she is beginning to dread the judgment of neutral nations rather than to fear their active participation in the war.

An intimation that any legislation remaining to be introduced in Parliament this session will not be of such a character as to entail protracted discussion, was given in the House of Commons before it adjourned Monday night by Hon. Robert Rogers. The Minister of Public Works had been suggesting that if all the members were diligent and prepared to facilitate the transaction of business it would be possible for Parliament to prorogue on the Thursday before Easter or shortly after Easter.

In the Canadian West they are putting interned aliens to work on the farms. Those Zeppelin and submarine officers and crews under arrest in England, should be put to work on the stone pile instead of being waited upon and fed on the country's best.—St. Thomas Journal.

The British Government has placed in the United States an order for 600,000,000 one-pound tins of Irish stew. It seems like a lot. But if France and Russia each get one-third of it the supply will not last very long. If ten million men each eat one tin per day the whole supply will be gone in sixty days.—Toronto Star.

Officers at Divisional Headquarters, Exhibition Camp, expressed the opinion yesterday that the Ottawa report that a summer camp would be maintained at Toronto as well as at Niagara probably meant Long Branch, where 12,000 troops will be accommodated, it is expected.—Toronto News.

When Sir Sam Hughes in New York spoke of Canada raising an army of half a million the people of this country blushed because of the foolish boast. When, much later, Sir Robert Borden announced the authorization of an army of half a million, his words were taken as expressing a serious and reasonable purpose.

When the allies in the west begin their grand offensive, the Russians, no longer hindered by climate, will be ready for theirs. No doubt the advance from Salonika will begin at the same time. Under pressure from three quarters at once, we shall soon see what will become of German stubbornness and pride.—Hamilton Spectator.

The statement made by Armand Lavergne in his address at the Longueuil town hall Monday night that the teaching of German was allowed in the schools of Berlin, Ont., is without foundation, according to a despatch from that place. The teaching of the German language in Berlin Public Schools was discontinued when the schools reopened last September.

Officers of the Department of Inland Revenue, having successfully prosecuted Alcides Paquette, farmer, of St. Henry, in Mascouche County, for having an illicit still in his possession, succeeded in their charge against Napoleon Meunier, another farmer, of the same parish, for having sold the still to Paquette. Police Magistrate Husmer Lanctot fined Meunier $500 and costs.

The Poets' Corner

A VERSE LETTER

The following lines were sent by Edward Knitting, formerly a sergeant with the 15th Batt. A.L.I., now with the 58th Batt., C.E.F., "somewhere in France," to his wife and mother in this city:

There's a dear old spot in Canada,
That's where I'd like to be,
But while this war is raging,
This is the place for me.

They said "Young man, we need you,
We like the looks of you,
Here, sign your name, three times."
The doctor said, "You'll do."

They gave me a new uniform,
My room and board were free,
A dollar ten for nothing—
That's just the life for me.

They sent me to Niagara,
To get in fighting trim,
That, when I'd meet the Kaiser,
I'd put one over him.

Then they sent me over to England,
To get some further training;
Old England is a fine place,
But it's nearly always raining.

We'll soon be going to the Front,
To meet old Hans and Fritz.
They say it's very cold o'er there;
So send me socks and mitts.

Don't worry about me at the Front,
We'll stop the Germans' noise;
If anybody can do it,
The 58th are the boys.

But I must leave off writing,
I hear the Cook-house blow;
I'm with a bunch of hungry guys—
So it don't pay to be slow.

But just before we part again,
Let us both rise and sing,
The Maple Leaf for ever
And then God Save the King.

$1,100,000 AUCTION SALE IN HALF AN HOUR

NEW YORK, April 11.—(Special.)—The first ship auction ever held in this country netted $1,100,000 in 25 minutes to-day. The sale took place on the floor of the Maritime Exchange, and as prospective buyers Joseph P. Day, the auctioneer, had the Four Hundred of New York's shipping business.

A motor tanker building at Baltimore, delivery on which was promised for August 31, 1916, was sold to Max Strauss, son of Max Strauss, General Manager of the Russian-American Line, who bid $500,000. He said that he represented a Norwegian owner.

The second steamer sold was a 7,500-ton general cargo steamer in course of construction at the yards of the Seattle Construction & Shipbuilding Company, Seattle, Wash. Her contract calls for delivery on the Pacific coast July 12, 1917. On an offer of $600,000 the Universal Transportation Company took the steamer.

$3,500,000 WILL BE SPENT BY C.P.R. ON FARMS FOR SOLDIERS

J. S. Dennis Amplifies Announcement Made by Lord Shaughnessy and Upholds Latter's Views on Enlistment, Transportation and Shortage of Labor in the West

The providing of employment for returned soldiers is a question that is demanding nation-wide attention, and it is with great satisfaction that Canadians learn that the Canadian Pacific Railway is to take action in this regard.

Mr. J. S. Dennis, assistant to the president of the C.P.R., has just returned to Calgary, and was asked details of the scheme planned by Lord Shaughnessy. Mr. Dennis replied:—

LORD SHAUGHNESSY'S DECISION

"The decision of Lord Shaughnessy to provide through the Department of Natural Resources of the Canadian Pacific Railway farm homes for our returned soldiers is a further proof, if any were needed, of his willingness at all times to devote his great energy and ability, and the resources of the company, to the solution of the problems facing Canada as part of the empire.

The extent and magnitude of the work of preparing 1,000 farms will be realized when it is noted that it involves: Building 1,000 houses; building 1,000 barns; constructing 1,200 miles of fence; digging 1,000 wells; breaking and cultivating 50,000 acres; the buildings will require about 20,000,000 feet of lumber to erect. The preparation of these farms will entail an expenditure of about $3,500,000.

ENLISTMENT QUESTION

"One thousand farms will, of course, provide for an extremely small proportion of returned soldiers who will want to obtain farm homes, and the Dominion Government must adopt some general policy of providing these homes. However, the Canadian Pacific Railway has led the way in trying to solve the pressing and troublesome question and no doubt before long the Dominion Government will announce its general scheme.

AN IMMENSE PROJECT

"The enlistment of the 250,000 additional men called for by the Government, will, of course, double the number to be taken care of after the war is over, and also causes a serious present problem. The western provinces have responded nobly to the call of the empire in enlisting men to fight our battles, and already there is a serious shortage of labor of all kinds, due to this enlistment. In the effort to meet this shortage, the Dominion government is now advertising in some 4,000 papers in the United States for 50,000 laborers to come west and help put in the crop this spring. They find that there is no chance of getting this number of men, and have announced that from 3,000 to 5,000 is the greatest number that can be obtained.

SHORTAGE OF LABOR

"The recognition of this shortage of labor by the Department of the Interior, and the efforts they are making to meet the situation by bringing men from the United States is a contradiction of the statement made at a meeting in Montreal a short time ago by Gen. Sir Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia, that the enlistment of men in the west was not causing any shortage of labor, and is a proof, if any were needed, of the soundness of the policy of recruiting advocated by Lord Shaughnessy at the same meeting. Every true Canadian realizes that Canada must ultimately send her last man and spend her last dollar to enable the empire and her allies to bring the war to victorious termination, but why enlist men before they can be used.

TRANSPORTING TROOPS

"It is now recognized that under the most favorable circumstances it will be the end of the year before all the men now enlisted can be transported across the Atlantic, and after that date, at most, 10,000 men a month can be sent forward. Many of the battalions now authorized are very much below their full strength, and it will be many months before they will have succeeded in enlisting their full quota of men. Why then go on authorizing additional battalions and removing men from the useful employment of helping feed the empire or supply it with munitions until they can be utilized in the firing line?

WESTERN CANADA'S LOYALTY

"Of the men already enlisted, western Canada has provided much more than its share on the basis of population. As western Canadians we are proud of that fact, but why drive a willing horse off its feet, particularly when its energies can be utilized in the meantime to such great advantage in other ways, and it can be kept in good condition for the time when its full strength can be properly applied in the supreme crisis?"

Probing Regina Asylum Charges

Defence Seeks More Light on Negligence Charges

REGINA, Sask., April 10.—A lengthy argument regarding the particulars filed in regard to the Battleford Asylum charges took place before the Haultain Commission this morning at a special session called by request of H. Y. MacDonald. Mr. MacDonald wanted specific information in regard to the general paragraphs in the particulars filed by counsel for J. E. Bradshaw, M.L.A.

Frank Turnbull, of Bradshaw's counsel, stated he expected to show that every contract in connection with the asylum building was either let without tender or without sufficient opportunity for tender. Turnbull also stated experts were today making an examination of the building having received the plans on Wednesday night.

MacDonald said the defense wanted further particulars in regard to the charges relating to the asylum. He also took objection to the charge of negligence of officials, stating no such charge was contained in the reference to the commission. He said there were no real particulars filed at all, and in this the Chief Justice said he was inclined to agree.

MacDonald said the defence was entitled to know what officials and members of the Government were charged with negligence, what contracts were referred to, and the particulars of the changes alleged to have been made in the contracts; how the amount of $250,000 referred to was arrived at, and a more definite statement of what advertisements for tenders were deemed insufficient.

Sir Frederick Haultain pointed out the defense must know what contracts were let without tender and what publicity was given to the tenders that were called. Defence could not be embarrassed in this respect.

Final arrangements were made for the opening of the real work of the commission next Wednesday.

Mr. MacDonald, before the adjournment, stated that while the ministers he represented wanted a full inquiry, that it meant an inquiry into the charges as made and these charges were strictly defined in reference to the commission.

"That is the proper legal standpoint, but whether it would be advanced by the ministers under the charges is another question," said the Chief Justice.

HORRORS! THEY ARE PLAYING HOCKEY YET

OWEN SOUND, Ont., April 11.—(Special.)—What will possibly be the last hockey match of the 1916 season was played here tonight between the Berlin Union Jacks and the Owen Sound Grays. The weather had been fairly cold for some days back and the ice had been gotten into fair condition, but warm weather today made it very soft, and really fast hockey was impossible. However, the game was a fair exhibition of hockey, and the spirit of clean sport prevailed with the players, and as a result only three penalties were registered, but some of the spectators got rough and Masters of the Berlin team was severely hurt. The Grays had the better of the play throughout the entire game and took five goals to their opponents' two. The first period was very evenly contested and no goals were registered. In the second the Grays got two and the Jacks one; in the third the Grays added three more to Berlin's one. Breen starred for the locals and Masters and Brown for the visitors. The work of Childs and Young in the goals was the feature of the game, and both men saved the score from being much larger. The game was a patriotic one, the proceeds being devoted to the Grey County Recruiting League. The line-up.

Referee— J. H. Stratton, Owen Sound.

DO THIS FIRST—YOU!

You know, and every physician knows, that when any sickness has passed, whether it be throat trouble organic disturbances, contagious diseases, or even a severe cold, a relapse is feared, because sickness robs the system of Nature's resistance and leaves it subject to lingering germs.

Drugs never build up a worn-out body—only food can do that, and the first thing to take after any sickness is the concentrated, blood-making oil food in Scott's Emulsion, which feeds the tissues, benefits the blood and strengthens both lungs and throat.

Physicians prescribe Scott's Emulsion after sickness. Nurses everywhere advocate it. Scott's is pure medicinal food, without injurious drugs.

THIS IS YEAR FOR THE OLYMPIC GAMES

PARIS, April 11.—Baron Pierre de Coubertin, president of the International Olympic Games Committee, stated to-day to the Associated Press that no Olympic games would be held during the present year or while the war lasted. He also supplemented the announcement with some interesting details.

"Though there will be no Olympic games in 1916 or during the war," said the baron, "preparations for the games in 1920 are being made as far as possible. Four cities already have expressed a wish to have the 1920 Olympic games held within their precincts, namely, Antwerp, Lyons, Amsterdam and Havana.

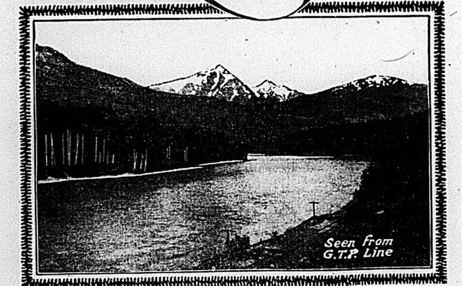
"In the last named capital the application is about to be made or has been made to the Cuban Congress for 5,000,000 francs on account of the preliminary expenses alone. Antwerp already had signified a desire to have the games held there before the war. Since the outbreak of the war the city has repeated the request, and the burgomaster has received a letter from King Albert of Belgium congratulating him on the fact.

"The meeting of the international committee planned to be held at Venice has, of course, fallen through, and there will be no meeting of the committee till the war is over."

SEWAGE DISPOSAL PLANT AT WHITBY HIGHLY PRAISED

WHITBY, April 11.—Special—The most perfect sewage disposal plant on the American continent is the way Engineer T. A. Murray, of Toronto described the Whitby plant on the occasion of the Town Council of Dundas visiting Whitby to inspect the sewerage system and disposal plant. "We have nothing like it in the United States," was the remark of an American engineer when he looked over the plant.

MOUNT·SIR·ROBERT and BORDEN GLACIER



Seen from G.T.P. Line

From now on, while Canada endures, the name of its Premier, Sir Robert Borden, will be perpetuated in the topography of the Dominion. Thus decrees the Geographic Board of Canada, which has just officially adopted the name Mount "Sir Robert" to be applied to the beautiful snow-capped peak illustrated above. On the flank of the mountain is a great glacier, and this has been named "Borden Glacier."

This noble Mountain, whose glittering snow-capped crest rises sharply to a height of between eight and nine thousand feet, is situated 120 miles east of Prince Rupert, to the south of the Skeena River, and nine miles southeast from Doreen Station on the Grand Trunk Pacific line, and is in the heart of the British Columbia Coast Range.

Even on the route of the Grand Trunk Pacific, famous for its mountains, there are few more beautiful peaks than the newly named "Sir Robert," and while the pointed peak in itself is considered one of the most graceful and dignified in the neighbourhood, the huge glacier, fully a mile in width, lends it additional beauty and interest. This serried mass of frozen snow and ice—accumulating rocks, stones and earth as it moves slowly, inch by inch, down the side of the mountain—is apparently drained by a winding mountain stream which empties into the Skeena, and the great sweeping bend of this river, seen in the foreground of the picture, with a fine stretch of the track, indicates the view to be obtained from the railway line. Travellers on the Grand Trunk Pacific get the best view of this lovely peak when two miles west of Doreen Station.

"I want to ask you a question," he said coldly. "I have been wanting to do so for a long time, but there has always been some one else around."

Nu nodded.

"What can Nu tell you?" he asked.

"You can tell me where Miss Custer is," replied Curtiss.

"Miss Custer? I do not know what you mean. I never heard of Miss Custer."

"You lie!" cried Curtiss, losing control of himself. "Her jacket was found beneath your head in that foul den of yours."

Nu came slowly to his feet.

"What does 'lie' mean?" he asked. "I do not understand all that people say to me yet, but I know much from the way of saying, and I do not like your way, Curtiss."

"Answer my question!" cried Curtiss. "Where is Victoria Custer? When you speak to me remember that I'm Mr. Curtiss!"

"What does 'lie' mean?" persisted Nu. "And why should I call you 'mister?' I do not like the sound of your voice, Curtiss."

It was at this moment that Barney appeared.

The black haired giant stood with the bristling wolfhound at his side. The attitude of the man resembled nothing more closely than that of a big black panther tensed for a spring. Curtiss' hand was reaching for the butt of the gun at his hip.

Barney stepped between them.

"What is the meaning of this, Curtiss?" he asked sharply.

Curtiss had been a warm friend for years—a friend of civilization and luxury and ease. He had known Curtiss under conditions which gave everything that Curtiss wished, and he had seemed a fine fellow, but lately, since he had been crossed and disappointed, there had been sides to his character that had never before presented themselves.

Curtiss made no reply to Barney's question. Instead he turned on his heel and walked away.

Nu laid a hand upon the American's shoulder.

"What does 'lie' mean, Custer?" he asked.

Barney tried to explain.

"I see," said Nu. "And what is a 'mister?'"

Again Barney did his best to explain.

"Who is Miss Custer?" Nu asked.

Barney looked at the man in surprise.

"Do you not know?" he asked.

"Why should I?"

"She is my sister," said Barney, looking closely at the man.

"Your sister?" questioned Nu. "I did not know you had a sister, Custer."

"You did not know my sister, Nat-ul?" cried Barney.

"Nat-ul!" exclaimed the man. "Nat-ul your sister?"

"Yes. I supposed that you knew it."

"But you are not Abt, son of Tha," said Nu, "and Nat-ul had no other brother."

"I am brother of the girl you saved from the lion in the garden yonder," said Barney. "Is it she you know as Nat-ul?"

"She was Nat-ul."

"Where is she?" cried Barney.

"I do not know," replied Nu. "I thought that she was a prisoner among you, and I have been waiting here quietly for her to be brought back."

"You saw her last," said Barney.

The time had come to have it out with this man.

"You saw her last. She was in your cave in the mountain. We found her jacket there, and beside the spring this dog lay senseless. What became of her?"

Nu stood with an expresion of dull incomprehension upon his fine features. It was as though he had received a stunning blow.

"She was there?" he said at last in a low voice. "She was there in my cave, and I thought it was but a dream. She has gone away, and for many days I have remained here doing nothing, while she roams amid the dangers of the forest alone and unprotected.

"Unless"—his tone became more hopeful—"she has found her way to our own people among the caves beside the restless sea. But how could she? Not even I, a man and a great hunter, can even guess in what direction lies the country of my father, Nu. Perhaps you can tell me."

Barney shook his head. His disappointment was great. He had been sure that Nu could cast some light upon the whereabouts of Victoria.

He wondered if the man were telling him the truth. Doubts began to assail him. It seemed scarcely credible that Victoria could have been in the fellow's lair without he knowing of her presence. That she had been there there seemed little or no doubt.

The only other explanation was that Nu had, as Curtiss had suggested, stolen her from the vicinity of the bungalow, killed her, and taken his spear and her coat back to his cave with him, but that did not account for the presence of the hound or the beast's evident loyalty to the man.

Nu had turned from the veranda and entered the bungalow. Barney followed him. The man was hunting about the house for something.

"What are you looking for?" asked the American.

"My spear," replied Nu.

"What do you want of it?"

"I'm going to find Nat-ul."

Barney laid a hand upon the other's arm.

"No," he said, "you are not going away from here until we find my sister. You are a prisoner. Do you understand?"

The cave man drew himself to his full height. There was a sneer upon his lip.

"Who can prevent me?"

Barney drew his revolver.

"This," he said.

For a moment the man seemed plunged in thought. He looked at the menacing gun, and then off through the opening windows toward the distant hills.

"I can't wait, for her sake," he said.

"Don't make any attempt to escape," warned Barney. "You will be watched carefully. Terkoz will give the alarm, even if he should be unable to stop you, though as a matter of fact he can stop you easily enough. Were I you I should hate to be stopped by Terkoz. He is as savage as a lion when aroused and almost as formidable."

Barney did not see the smile that touched the cave man's lips.

Later Barney told the others that Nu seemed to realize the futility of attempting to get away, but that night he locked their doors securely, placed the key under his pillow and drew his cot beneath the double windows of their room. It would take a mighty stealthy cat, thought he, to leave the apartment without rousing him, even were Terkoz not stretched beside the prisoner's cot.

About midnight the cave man opened his eyes. The regular breathing of the American attested the soundness of his slumber. Nu extended a hand toward the sleeping Terkoz, at the same time making a low, purring sound with his lips.

The beast raised his head.

"Sh-h!" whispered Nu.

Then he rose to a sitting posture and very carefully put his feet to the floor. Stooping, he lifted the heavy wolfhound in his arms. The only sign the animal made was to raise his muzzle to the man's face and lick his cheek.

Nu smiled.

He recalled Custer's words, "Terkoz will give the alarm even if he should be unable to stop you."

The troglodyte approached the cot on which Barney lay in peaceful slumber. He rested one hand upon the sill of the open window, leaning across the sleeper.

The hound was tucked under his other arm. Without a sound he vaulted over the cot, through the window and alighted noiselessly upon the veranda without.

In the garden he deposited Terkoz, telling him to wait there. Then he returned to the living room of the bungalow to fetch his spear, his hatchet and his knife.

A moment later the figures of a naked man and a gaunt wolfhound swung away beneath the tropic moon, across the rolling plain toward the mountains to the south.

CHAPTER IX.

The Hunt.

It was daylight when Barney Custer awoke.

His first thought was for his prisoner, and when his eyes fell upon the empty cot across the room the American came to the center of the floor with a single bound.

Clad in his pajamas he ran out into the living room and gave the alarm. In another moment the search was on, but no sign of the cave man was to be found, nor of the guardian Terkoz.

"He must have killed the dog," insisted Greystoke, but they failed to find the beast's body, for the excellent reason that at that very moment Terkoz, bristling with anger, was nosing about the spot where, nearly a month before, he had been struck down by the Arab as he had sought to protect the girl to whom he had attached himself.

As he searched the spot his equally savage companion hastened to the cave farther up the mountainside, and with his knife unearthed the head of Oo which he had buried there in the soft earth of a crevice within the lair.

The trophy was now in a rather sad state, and Nu felt that he must forego the pleasure of laying it intact at the feet of his future mate, but the great saber teeth were there and the skull. He removed the former, fastening them to his loin cloth, and laid the balance of the head outside the cave, where vultures might strip it clean of flesh against Nu's return, for he did not wish to be burdened with it during his search for Nat-ul.

A deep bay from Terkoz presently announced the finding of the trail, and at the signal Nu leaped down the mountain side, where the impatient beast awaited him.

A moment later the two savage trailers were speeding away upon the spoor of the Arab slave and ivory raiders. Though the trail was old, it still was sufficiently plain for these two.

What to Do When Hair Grows Thin

Parisian Sage Makes the Hair Grow

If your hair is getting thin and causing you anxiety, you ought to read about Parisian Sage, the hair grower, that surely does grow hair.

Parisian Sage is guaranteed by the Manufacturers to stop your hair from falling out, or refund your money. It will make the hair grow profusely if used regularly.

Hair falls out and stops growing because the hair root does not receive proper nourishment. If the nourishment entirely ceases for any length of times the hair root will die and baldness will follow. It's the dandruff germs that steal from the hair root the nourishment that nature supplies it.

Parisian Sage soaks into the scalp, destroys the dandruff germs and furnishes the nourishment needed to stimulate a renewed growth of hair.

Parisian Sage grows hair, stops hair from falling out, eradicates dandruff and puts an end to splitting hair. It turns dull, lifeless, faded hair into bright, lustrous hair, and is used by women and men who take pride in beautiful and luxuriant hair. It is the most delightful and refreshing hair dressing ever put into a bottle and should be used by every member of the family.

Parisian Sage is sold by leading druggists everywhere for only 50c. a large bottle.

For aches, pains, rheumatism, etc., try Parisian Mustard Cerate. Its effect is wonderful. Use in place of mustard plasters, poultices, or hot applications. Will not blister. 25c. a tube.

Czar Grateful For Sympathy

LONDON, April 11.— A despatch from the Daily Chronicle's correspondent at Petrograd says:

"I had the honor of being received by the Emperor at Imperial headquarters to-day.

"His Majesty talked with me for some time about England. He was very glad British sympathies had turned so strongly toward Russia and that the great sacrifices of his army had been warmly recognized.

"I also had a talk with the chief of staff, General Alexieff. He spoke in a plain, soldierly way of the past stupid diplomatic muddles, when the Russians were supposed always to be making for India. He said:

"'Surely our geographical boundaries are clean enough and surely there is room enough anyhow. We have got our work cut out for us with Turkestan. The Great thing is that we should understand each other.'"

LARGE FOE SUBMARINES CRUISE IN BLACK SEA

COPENHAGEN, April 11—Special—German submarines, larger and speedier than any previously seen, have appeared in the Black Sea, according to the Constantinople correspondent of the Vossiche Zeitung (Berlin) who asserts that it was one of these that torpedoed the Russian hospital ship Portugal.

THE GLESCA MILEESHY HOLD THE HUNS

"Sunny Jim", the G.O.C., Asks Col. Corkleg to Hold the Key of the Position Checking the German Advance on Calais and Spud Tamson Wins the V. C.

(In The Weekly Tatler)

By Capt. R. W. Campbell.

Hello, who's this?" said the colonel, as a figure darkened the doorway of the dug-out. It was the brigade-major.

"Good-morning, Jones —anything on?"

"Good-morning, sir, I've got some trouble for you," remarked the major with a dry smile.

"Oh!"

"The Kaiser's got another brain storm. He has decided to lunch with the gay madames of Calais. Our Division is, of course, in the way, and the Brigade in particular, so there's going to be some fun."

"When?"

"Soon, sir. Our aeroplanes report a great concentration behind the enemy's lines. As we hold them on the most likely line of advance, you may expect to be in the affair."

"Well, Jones, it's a case of us making our wills. We hold the key of our whole line. Their fury will be spent on that."

"Yes, sir; and the brigadier wishes you to hold on at all costs. He will reinforce you if things go badly. He said that he was glad you were there."

"Old toughs for a hard road, eh, Jones. Now—any more orders?"

"Only one more, that is, to double your sentries and reinforce your firing-line trench. If you can make any obstacles or entanglement tricks in front of your line, the brigadier will be very glad."

"I'll see to that."

"Thank you, sir, good-morning."

"Good-morning, Jones," and out jumped the brigadier-major in continuance of his task. When he had gone, the colonel sent for his company commanders. The situation was explained, and all were instructed to strengthen the line, erect more entanglements, and use every means in their power to embarrass the enemy's advance. Nothing, of course, could be done during the day. The enemy was only three hundred yards distant from the first line of trenches. But for the next three nights all were busy. Fifty yards in front of their trenches deep pits were dug. The earth was removed, and over the deep gaps thin sticks were laid or wedged into the sides. Green sods, which had been carefully cut, were neatly laid across the sticks, so as to disguise the pits and resemble the general lay of the ground. Behind these death-traps low barbed wire entanglements were fixed. Some loose brushwood and other green stuff aided in the disguise of these lures. Finally, the higher entanglements were strengthened in a way that made the complete scheme a death-making obstacle of no mean order.

Many of the trenches were also screened by a few dummy earthworks to draw the enemy's fire, and thus minimise the casualty roll. Every man was given 250 rounds, all rifles thoroughly cleaned; bayonets grimly sharpened to a razor-like standard, and the sentries doubled. These preparations were continued all along the line. Behind, in the reserve area, reinforcements were prepared at a central point to enable the G.O.C. to throw them forward where required.

• • • •

Meantime the Germans had not been idle. With that vigor and thoroughness so characteristic of the nation, they prepared for "The Day"—another of the "the's," of course. Victory was certain, for the Kaiser had invoked the aid of his God. In a general proclamation sprinkled with oaths, imbecile pleas, the biblical embellishments, he called on his generals and army to charge for the Fatherland. He would be with them—miles to the rear, of course,—and he would stand waiting with thousands of iron crosses to plaster round his soldiers' chests. God was to be on the side of his big battalions.

The plan on this occasion was the old one—dense masses of men. Line after line of conscripts to be thrown to death and destruction. But the preliminary bombardment was a thing which they also relied on. This commenced at the dawn of a cold and drizzling day. The boom of the first shell roused "Sunny Jim" and the Staff of the Mixed Division. A tinkle of a telephone bell stirred the British gunners to action. Observers cunningly concealed in some haystacks in the forward part of the line immediately 'phoned back the range of the German batteries. The crash of our shells 'midst the guns of the enemy was a fitting reply. The range was accurate and the toll a deadly one.

However, these German gunners have a wonderful pluck and persistency. Their observers saw many guns, new trenches, and here and there fields dotted with turbans, caps, and badly concealed guns in the Allied lines. Eagerly they worked out their range tables, and crash went their guns again. One great line of trenches with Indian turbans and Tommies' caps peeping over was bombarded with three hundred powerful shells. The parapets were wrecked, trenches burst, and great craters made in the surrounding fields. Deadly gunnery and deadly havoc. No wonder Krupp's hirelings gained the iron cross. The exposed guns were crushed to smithereens, and the gunners near knocked down like dollies in a fair. This made the German observers glad. To them the battle promised well. But one of the German observers, stationed in an old windmill, received sudden marching orders through the agency of a powerful British shell.

"Sunny Jim' was pleased to allow the "hits" of the German batteries. His unorthodox methods had proved supreme. With his wonderful cunning he had prepared those long and exposed lines of dummy trenches, dotted with turbans and caps. The "guns" which they had smashed were simply trees resting on the wheel of old farm carts. The "gunners" killed had been made out of old khaki suits filled with straw. True, the Germans had registered some good hits on the real trenches and live men while here and there a gun had been knocked out of action. Yet the stagecraft of this clever G.O.C. had lessened the casualty roll and drawn the enemy's fire away from the hives of our warriors.

Britons are not so stupid as they seem. As for our guns, they were a match for Krupp's newest and latest. The Mixed Division was armed with weapons of a powerful range and deadly type. There was no useless aiming or extravagant shooting. Almost every shell burst near a breech block and mangled its defenders. For six hours they pumped death and destruction into the gun-pits, trenches, and masses of grey-coated Germans waiting for the assault.

This was very annoying to Kaiser Bill, sitting in his three-ply armour-plated travelling booth. But it did not alter his decision. "Forward" was his order after the bombardment. As he himself was excused the honor of advancing, he made certain of the fulfilment of his commands.

There was an air of death and stillness in those British lines towards which the deep ranks of the Germans marched. The gunners must have done well. A spirit of victory filled them; more eagerly they marched to Calais—the Kaiser's dream. But the reckoning was to come. Deep in their burrows lay thousands of expectant British warriors. Every magazine was charged, and every sentry coolly watching the stern advance of the German host. Nearer, still nearer they came. At last they reached the deadly zone—300 yards.

• • • •

"Rapid fire," roared Colonel Corkleg, and every other commander in that great, long, line. The crash was terrific, the surprise amazing, and the shrieks of death and pain alarming. The great line paused in terror, but only for a moment. On they came again, the living jumping over the dead. Do not call them cowards. They can fight and die. They faced their punishment nobly. Maxims and rifles poured death into line after line; still on they came. With a devilish delight the Glesca Mileeshy watched the advance.

"They're near Bannockburn noo," said Spud to his pals as the enemy ran towards the pits.

"They're in!" They're in!" he yelled as the first line tumbled down into the death-traps. Hundreds floundered to an awful end in front of the British lines. The cries of the struggling mass were even heard above the din of shooting. The next line paused in horror, and many tried to run, but the officers' swords and revolvers drove on the men in rear and shoved still more into the chambers of horror. At last they were filled, and over the mangled moaning men the others charged to the trenches.

"Rapid fire!" ordered Spud, and every other section commander all along the line. The response was startling. Worse, something caught the feet of the first line. It was the low entanglements. The running men were thrown forward on to the jagging stakes and piercing wire. Again the advance was stemmed, and again the British maxims and rifles exacted a frightful toll.

To the sensative soul such a sight is awful and sickening. Brutality is triumphant, and war shown in all its hellish aspects. There is little culture in the business. It is simply the awful expression of Hate. Nevertheless, such men as the Glesca Mileeshy viewed almost calmly the scene. They even joked and laughed as they sent their bullets into the reeling masses of men.

"They're comin' again—Rapid fire," commanded Spud to his men once more. The weight of numbers had pushed the living over the maimed. They clambered across their bodies towards the high entanglements. A crisis was near, and every man in the Glesca Mileeshy fixed his bayonet, then opened fire again. Dead men paved the way to the higher entanglements.

Click! Click! Click! went the enemy's wire-cutters all along the line. Some even tore themselves over or through the barbed wire. They had reached their goal.

• • • •

"Gie them H——, boys," roared Spud above the din. There was no need to command. Out of the trenches leaped the first line of Glesca Mileeshy. The slaughter was fierce. Blood spurted everywhere. Germans and British struggled like Dervishes for the mastery. Screams were mixed with curses, moans drowned in the awful din. Germans hate our British bayonets; in fact they loath cold steel at any time. Seldom will they face such music, but this attack had been driven on. To turn meant death from the bayonets behind; even if they had escaped from the crush a German officer's revolver would have quickly ended their flight. Brave as they are, when equal in numbers against our arms the British assert their superiority with natural ease. The Glesca Mileeshy, like their copartners, had centuries of tradition behind them. Germans, after all, are young at the game of war.

Colonel Corkleg viewed the awful struggle from the supporting trenches. The condition of affairs was uninspiring. He saw more and more grey masses of the enemy surging forward to swell the attacking line.

"Good God," he exclaimed, as two great columns burst through on the right and left of his line. He also noticed that the regiments on his flanks were retiring. Was it panic? Were they complying with previous orders? He did not know. All he knew was that his regiment had been told to hold on at all costs. He would do so, for, like a true soldier, he had a firm sense of duty and a belief in his general. As it was useless to waste more men in his front line, he signalled to them to retire through the communication trench.

"Retire, man by man," ordered Lieutenant Greens, waiting with Spud to see all the men through. Perhaps the action of the officer and sergeant was unnecessarily reckless and daring; yet it is typical of the British officer and N.C.O. Quickly the men jumped down into the communication trench and ran on to the supports. Nearly all had gone, when Spud was alarmed to hear some one say—

"Sergeant—Spud—for the love of God, don't lave me—I'm done in, bhoy." Spud turned from his act of bayoneting a German to see poor Muldoon lying half mangled across the parapet.

"Get hold of him, sergeant—I'll keep the devils off," roared Greens, smiting the attackers with the butt-end of a rifle. Spud jumped forward and grabbed the heavy form of his faithful chum. He staggered with the weight, but, with a superhuman effort he half carried and dragged the wounded man along the deep communicating trench. Colonel Corkleg and his men had seen it all. They even stopped for a second to cheer. As Spud dropped his load he turned to look for his officer. He saw him surrounded by half a dozen wild Bavarians.

'Come oot, three o' ye," he shouted to the nearest men. They clattered down the trench behind his nimble form. Into the surging mob they dashed, gashing and hacking as they went. Poor old Greens had fallen. He seemed almost dead as Spud jumped and pulled him out from beneath the attackers' feet.

"Right ye are," was the willing response of the three stalwarts. Nobly they tackled their men, but, alas! two were killed in the melee; the third man had to flee with a terrible wound in his chest. Spud pulled the lieutenant under cover of the supporting trench, and then handed him and the other wounded men over to the stretcher-bearers.

• • • •

"Things look bad," mused Colonel Corkleg, viewing the surging horde of yelling Bavarians, who were now advancing again. He knew he was in a tight hole; he was also aware that the eyes of men were on him. That is the Tommie's way. In danger he looks to his officer. If the officer is still the same cool gentleman who has kindly but firmly guided in the other affairs of peace and war—all's well.

But—if there is a sense of despair, a touch of pallor, a command given in a nervous way, then that wonderful confidence which wins all battles dies out in a flash. Corkleg knew the working of the soldier's mind. This was an occasion to preserve to the last the air of ease and the sense of hope. Between puffs of a cigarette he calmly issued his orders, directed the fire, and occasionally cursed a slacker who fiddled with his bolt.

"Thank Heaven for our Maxims," he remarked to the adjutant, as he watched Cockney Dan and his gunners sending death and disorder into the German ranks. Then jumping over the dead bodies of some of his gallant men, he entered a little dug-out where the telephone was. Turning the handle, he waited. A faint tinkle quickly echoed through the din.

"Hello—is that the brigadier?"

"Yes."

"We're in a tight fix here, sir. We have lost the first line of trenches. The regiments on my right and left have gone. It looks like as if we're going to be scuppered."

"Hold on, for God's sake, colonel. Yours is the key of the whole line. They must not get it. We'll reinforce you soon. Good-bye."

'I hope to God you will," he muttered, dropping the phone. He was not afraid of slaughter, but he was certainly afraid of the enemy capturing this, the pivot of the defence. The colonel, of course, was not aware of the higher policy which had placed him there, for even commanding officers are seldom informed of the inner secrets of attack and defence. In this case the G.O.C. knew the strength of the enemy and fully estimated the deadly weight of their numbers. Brave as his men were, it was impossible for them to repel this great attack in its early stages. Nor would it have been wise to do so.

He knew the enemy could break the line. It was, therefore, essential to work out his defence in such a way that he might avoid needless casualties, gain time, inflict a frightful slaughter, and then drive home the counter-attack—the soundest maxim of war. The point held by the Glesca Mileeshy, however, could not even be temporarily surrendered. It was on a knoll commanding the flat country round.

If captured by the enemy it would have been an easy matter for them to gallop forward their light field batteries under cover of this hill, and then render to the attacking German infantry a weighty co-operation which would have been fatal to the British General's plan.

That is why this regiment was there, and the presence of this regiment gave their general the assurance that they would hold out while he attempted a venture thrust upon him by the will and numbers of the enemy.

Colonel Corkleg, of course, may have divined this thought of the G. O. C., but he had not been informed of the fact. He had ben given a definite order—"To hold out till the last," and in the British Army orders are always obeyed. The orders to the colonels of the regiments on his immediate right and left were to promptly retire when the enemy reached the first line of their trenches.

On arriving at two little knolls covering the ground which they had surrendered, they were instructed to immediately reform behind them. There they would find sixteen Maxim guns and fresh troops to aid them. That was all they knew.

But behind a great earthwork screen, some five hundred yards to the rear of this second line, the Canadians, Australians, New Zealanders, the Gurkhas lay under cover, ready, if need be, to repulse a serious reverse, but really destined to carry out the counter-assault.

PERSONAL.

St. Catharines, Ont.—"Two years ago I was in a very nervous, generally run-down condition, so that I awoke in the morning more tired than when I retired. The doctors thought I had heart trouble and treated me for it, but I got no benefit. I heard of Dr. Pierce's remedies through a friend who had been to your Invalids' Hotel for an operation (which proved entirely successful) and I at once got the 'Favorite Prescription.' I took three bottles altogether and at the end of three weeks I felt entirely cured and have been well and strong since, without a single bad spell. I stopped taking it about three months ago and am glad to tell any one how splendidly your medicine has healed me."—Mrs. John Lewin, 53 Niagara St., St. Catharines, Ont.

The mighty restorative power of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription speedily causes all womanly troubles to disappear and brings back health and strength to nervous, irritable and exhausted women.

It is a wonderful prescription prepared only from nature's roots and herbs with no alcohol to falsely stimulate and no narcotic to wreck the nerves. It banishes pain, headache, backache, low spirits, hot flashes, worry and sleeplessness surely and without loss of time.

Get it now! All druggists.

A Great Book Every Woman Should Have.

Over a million copies of the "The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser" are now in the hands of the people. It is a book that everyone should have and read in case of accident or sickness.

Send fifty cents or stamps to Dr. Pierce, Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y., and enclose this notice and you will receive by return mail, all charges and customs duty prepaid, this valuable book.

Throw Away Your Eye-Glasses!

A Free Prescription

You Can Have Filled and Use at Home.

Do you wear glasses? Are you a victim of eye-strain or other eye-weaknesses? If so, you will be glad to know that there is real hope for you. Many whose eyes were failing, say they have had their eyes restored through the principle of this wonderful free prescription. One man says, after trying it: "I was almost blind; could not see to read at all. Now I can read everything without any glasses and my eyes do not water any more. At night they would pain dreadfully; now they feel fine all the time. It was like a miracle to me." A lady who used it says: "The atmosphere seemed hazy with or without glasses, but after using this prescription for fifteen days everything seems clear. I can even read fine print without glasses." It is believed that thousands who wear glasses can now discard them in a reasonable time and multitudes more will be able to strengthen their eyes so as to be spared the trouble and expense of ever getting glasses. Eye troubles of many descriptions may be wonderfully benefited by following the simple rules. Here is the prescription: Go to any active drug store and get a bottle of Bon-Opto tablets. Drop one Bon-Opto tablet in ¼ glass of water and allow to dissolve. With this liquid, bathe the eyes two to four times daily. You should notice your eyes clear up perceptibly right from the start and inflammation will quickly disappear. If your eyes are bothering you, even a little, take steps to save them now before it is too late. Many hopelessly blind might have been saved if they had cared for their eyes in time. The Valmas Drug Co., of Toronto, will fill the above prescription by mail, if your druggist cannot.

A prominent City Physician to whom the above article was submitted, said: "Bon-Opto is a very remarkable remedy. Its constituent ingredients are well known to eminent eye specialists and widely prescribed by them. It can be obtained from any good druggist and is one of the very few preparations I feel should be kept on hand for regular use in almost every family."

J. S. McKeown fills many Bon-Opto prescriptions, and will gladly fill yours.

Capt. Gilroy of the 80th Battalion, has been given the rank of major. He is a good officer, and will fill his new duties creditably, if his work at Barriefield camp last summer is any criterion of his ability and energy.

In accordance with an order-in-council, approved by His Honor the Lieutenant-Governor of the province of Ontario, if any soldier's wife requires a certificate of her marriage or of the birth of her children, the same (if registration has been made) be supplied free by the Registrar-General of Ontario, provided the request for same is made to the Registrar-General, and is certified to by a secretary or other officer of any Patriotic Fund, a Justice of the Peace, a clergyman, or other responsible person satisfactory to the Registrar-General.

Captain "Nick" Bawlf, paymaster of the 154th battalion, Cornwall, is in the city, and is taking a special course on instruction in pay duties at the armouries. Captain Bawlf is well known all over Canada as a hockey player, and last season played with the Wanderers.

Great will be Barriefield camp this year. There will be 10,000 soldiers—more than was ever before encamped on the historic heights. The camp will be for the training of infantry men for the great conflict and instead of the constant clatter of artillery guns along the road there will be the silent solid bodies of khaki-clad foot soldiers. It will be a case of dig, walk or drill-you-terriers, drill. The life of the infantryman is now on a basis that the Militia Department after two years of hard steady work has decided is their very best method of rapidly drilling men for the trenches of France and Flanders. That training is to take place within two miles of Kingston and under canvas will be ten complete battalions.

The immensity of the command over which Col. T. D. R. Hemming, D.O.C., will be in charge is not very easily imagined as few officers have ever had so many soldiers training in one body before.

Tumblers that have been used for milk should be filled first with cold water and rinsed; then use a little warm water. Putting the milky glass into hot water first has the effect of clouding it permanently.

SYNOPSIS OF COAL MINING REGULATIONS.

Coal mining rights of the Dominion, in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Yukon Territories, the North-West Territories and in a portion of the Province of British Columbia, may be leased for a term of twenty-one years at an annual rental of $1 an acre. Not more than 2,560 acres will be leased to one applicant.

Applications for a lease must be made by the applicant in person to the Agent or Sub-Agent of the district in which the rights applied for are situated.

In surveyed territory the land must be described by sections or legal sub-divisions of sections and in unsurveyed territory the tract applied for shall be staked by the applicant himself.

Each application must be accompanied by a fee of $5 which will be refunded if the rights applied for are not available, but not otherwise. A royalty shall be paid on the merchantable output of the mine at the rate of five cents per ton.

The person operating the mine shall furnish the Agent with sworn returns accounting for the full quantity of merchantable coal mined and pay the royalty thereon. If the coal mining rights are not being operated, such returns should be furnished at least once a year.

The lease will include the coal mining rights only, but the lessee may be permitted to purchase whatever available surface rights may be considered necessary for the working of the mine at the rate of $10.00 an acre.

For full information application should be made to the Secretary of the Department of the Interior, Ottawa, or to any Agent or Sub-Agent of Dominion Lands.

W. W. CORY,
Deputy Minister of the Interior.

SYNOPSIS OF CANADIAN NORTH-WEST LAND REGULATIONS.

The sole head of a family, or any male over 18 years old, may homestead a quarter section of available Dominion land in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta. Applicant must appear in person at the Dominion Lands Agency or Sub-Agency for the District. Entry by proxy may be made at any Dominion Lands Agency (but not Sub-Agency) on certain conditions.

Duties—Six months residence upon and cultivation of the land in each of three years. A homesteader may live within nine miles of his homestead on a farm of at least 80 acres, on certain conditions. A habitable house is required except where residence is performed in the vicinity.

In certain districts a homesteader in good standing may pre-empt a quarter-section alongside his homestead. Price, $3.00 per acre.

Duties—Six months residence in each of three years after earning homestead patent; also 50 acres extra cultivation. Pre-emption patent may be obtained as soon as homestead patent, on certain conditions.

A settler who has exhausted his homestead right may take a purchased homestead in certain districts. Price $3.00 per acre. Duties—Must reside six months in each of three years, cultivate 50 acres and erect a house worth $300.

The area of cultivation is subject to reduction in case of rough, scrubby or stony land. Live stock may be substituted for cultivation under certain conditions.

MUSIC AND DRAMA

POTASH AND PERLMUTTER CREATE MUCH MERRIMENT.

"If I should express what was in my mind I would be arrested," exclaimed "Mawruss" Perlmutter in an argument with his partner, Abe Potash, at Griffin's Opera House last night.

Following the packed house of the previous evening, and the inclement weather of last night, it was naturally expected that the patronage would be limited, but the popularity of the company, and presence of the famous film star, Miss Jane Fearnley, together with judicious advertising by Manager G. J. Forhan, drew a large audience, all of whom were delighted with the funny, and frequently intricate incidents developed throughout the play.

Potash & Perlmutter were Jewish dispensers of ladies' wearing apparel, with all the sidelights which the business contains, and with the coming and going of customers, the complaints of road-men, and office disagreements, freedom of speech prevailed from beginning to end.

A 8.10 sharp a brief section of an elaborate photoplay was thrown upon the screen, showing Miss Fearnley in action, following which the drama proper started an evening of merriment for the audience, if not for the actors. The play opened in the salesroom of Potash & Perlmutter, with Harry Semels as Boris Andrieff, a Russian, at his desk, Miss Harriet Gustin, as Miss Cohen, operating her typewriter, and Meyer Bernson, as Sidney, the fresh office boy, dusting the displayed garments. Then appears Abe Potash, the senior partner, followed closely by "Mawruss" Perlmutter, when the fun commenced. The routine of faultfinding, with all the elegant Jewish expressions for and against, were simply sidesplitting; it was a draw which proved the most brilliant in vocabulary, yet the friendliness beneath it all revealed a unity at heart. When a designer was an urgent need, and the proper talent apparently unavailable, Miss Jane Fearnley, as Ruth Goldman, a typical blonde Jewess, comely of form and feature, appeared on the scene, and was engaged at a fabulous salary. "Mawruss" also falling to her charms and becoming a devoted admirer.

From this out things went bad with the firm, which moved to more commodious quarters, calling for heavy expense; Mr. Potash's charming daughter, Miss Irma, represented by Miss Mildred Davis, fell a captive to Andrieff's manly beauty; Andrieff was arrested, and the sums spent to liberate him put the firm in a financial corner; Miss Helen Salinger as Mrs. Potash proved too extravagant, and the house went to the wall, which brought out the sympathies of Miss Goldman, who decided she preferred Perlmutter in poverty rather than in wealth, trusting to her own ability to "put the establishment on a firm foundation and keep it there."

Miss Fearnley possesses many charms, including a positive business tact, which was admirably portrayed, and her acting in general was highly appreciated by the audience.

The cast as a whole, including officers of the law, detectives from abroad, and other celebrities, was strong throughout, and did justice to the play. The scenery, while not elaborate, was appropriate to the subject.

"A PAIR OF SIXES," COMING

The typist on the stage, (that is, the woman typist,) is always a delightful and interesting character. She is always jolly and sometimes pert. Authors never seem to put the serious kinds into their plays. There is one feature of the stage typist that jars—and that is her typewriting. The business portion of the audience shudder because they know the stage typist never knows how to type, but hold! Miss Jane Moore who plays the part of the pretty typist in "A Pair of Sixes," the sensational farce success which will be seen at Griffin's Opera House, next Wednesday night knows how to type. When she starts on the machine, a great sigh of relief and surprise wafts upward to balcony and gallery, with pure enjoyment of the educated clicks! The stage typewriter has absolutely written. Everyone in the audience immediately assumes that she must have been a typewriter before she became an actress. The truth is she had never struck a key until she began rehearsals for her part in the play.

"THE ETERNAL CITY" TONIGHT

The famous dramatic star, Pauline Frederick, portrays the role of Donna Roma with incomparable charm and grace in the Famous players superb photo-production of Hall Caine's brilliant drama of modern Rome. "The Eternal City," which is being exhibited at Griffin's Opera House, to-night and Thursday evening. Produced amid the grandeur and beauty of modern Rome, under the direction of Edwin S. Porter and Hugh Ford, this amazing 6 part photo spectacle marks a new era in dramatic picturization. Against this classic background of modern Rome progresses one of the most powerful and appealing romances ever conceived, and no doubt the popular play-house will be favored with unusually large patronage to-night and Thursday evening, during its exhibition.

"GRAFT" WILL BE EXPOSED

The great traction trusts and public service commissions are the subject of the second episode of that most remarkable of series serials by eighteen of America's most brilliant authors, "Graft", which is being presented at the Palace Theatre to-night and Thursday, matinee and night, and every Wednesday and Thursday for 15 weeks. An expose that sways, grips and fascinates, runs throughout this almost unbelievable story of secret plottings and machinations of "The Fifteen" (The Grafters), and a love story that thrills and charms. You will see with your very own eyes the doings of "The Graft Trust", and will see how the evil-doers are downed, crushed one by one by the young fighting attorney, Bruce Larnigan. In addition to the above very popular serial, a selected programme of comedy and varied photoplays will also be exhibited.

Sure Way to Get Rid of Dandruff

There is one sure way that never fails to remove dandruff completely and that is to dissolve it. This destroys it entirely. To do this, just get about four ounces of plain, ordinary liquid arvon; apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

By morning, most if not all, of your dandruff will be gone, and three or four more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every single sign and trace of it, no matter how much dandruff you may have.

You will find, too, that all itching and digging of the scalp will stop instantly, and your hair will be fluffy, lustrous, glossy, silky and soft, and look and feel a hundred times better.

You can get liquid arvon at any drug store. It is inexpensive, and four ounces is all you will need. This simple remedy has never been known to fail.

THE CAUSE OF ANAEMIA

It is universally known that iron is a very important element of the blood, and lack of it is the direct cause of run-down conditions and anaemia. It may interest our readers to know that Druggist J. S. McKeown, of this town, has in Vinol a reliable, constitutional remedy for such conditions. Vinol supplies iron to the blood in its most soluble state, then there's the nourishing properties of beef peptone and the medicinal curative extractives of fresh cod livers, without oil, all dissolved in a pure native tonic wine. That's what makes Vinol so successful in overcoming run-down and anaemic conditions.

WEDDING BELLS

JEFFERY—DENTON

A very pretty wedding took place on Wednesday, April 5th, when Maude Luella, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. Denton, of Sidney, was united in marriage to William Arnold, son of Mr. and Mrs. C. Jeffery, by the Rev. F. Joblin. The bride, who was given away by her brother, looked charming in a gown of white silk embroidered voile, with bridal veil and orange blossoms, and carried a bouquet of bridal roses. The bridesmaid, Miss Mabel Jeffery, was gowned in pink silk and lace, and carried a bouquet of pink carnations. Mr. Harry Denton did honors for the groom.

A wedding breakfast was afterwards served to about forty guests, the bride and groom leaving later for the West. The bride's travelling suit was navy blue with hat to match and mink furs, the latter the gift of the groom.

OBSEQUIES

A SOCIETY FUNERAL

Under the auspices of the Canadian Order of Oddfellows of which deceased was a member, the remains of the late Mr. Albert Wickett, were yesterday afternoon interred in Belleville cemetery. Many were present to pay the last tribute of respect to the departed. At the family residence, Reid street, services were conducted by the Rev. S. C. Moore, Pastor of the Tabernacle Church. A number of floral designs were placed upon the casket by relatives and friends. The burial services of the C.O.O.F. Society were conducted by Bro. J. McCarthy, N.G. of the Belleville Lodge. The bearers were, Messrs. W. Ruttan, W. Taylor, T. Vanmeer, R. C. Cole, J. Warren and W. J. Yerex.

THE GLESCA MILESHY HOLD THE HUNS

against the helmeted hordes who tried to envelop and crush them. Their trenches were filled with blood, and hundreds lay maimed and dead. Round their flanks swept rank after rank of Germans, in vigorous pursuit of the sections of retiring regiments who fired a few rounds, then ran on to the next bit of cover, where they repeated the same performance with a coolness truly wonderful and inspiring.

Their volleys were deadly enough, but feeble against such a mighty deluge of men. Still, they lured them on, then finally disappeared behind the flanks of their second line of defence. Meantime, the German reserves had arrived. Inspired by the success of their first lines, they pressed bravely forward to finish their job, leaving the Glesca Mileeshy almost encircled by their friends.

Z—r—r—p! Z—r—r—p! Z—r—r—p! spat the machine-gun batteries behind the little knolls. This was accompanied by a terrific explosion of land mines, which burst beneath the feet of the enemy, as well as the rapid fire of the infantry and the crashing bombs from five aeroplanes above.

Hundreds were blown lifeless and multilated into the air, hundreds were riddled with the traversing fire of the Maxim guns, while many were caught with the well-aimed musketry of the eager Tommies. The great host reeled with the blow. Death and fumes, the smoke and noise, stupefied them all. They were like lost sheep in a wilderness. Indeed, the enemy had reached that mental state when a counter-attack will always win.

"Double forward the reserves, and when ready, charge," was the order flashed from the G.O.C. of the Mixed Division. Out of the earth rose the Indians and Colonials—brothers in arms.

Their advance was covered by the men and Maxims of the knolls in front of them. Gleefully they ran—Indians mixed with Canadians, New-Zealanders and Australians. They reached the second line of defence and lay down for a breath.

"Fix bayonets—prepare to charge," was the next order flashed along the line. The clicking of the steel rings on the bayonet standards was a cheerful sound to all.

"Charge!" A wild hurrah was heard from seven thousand men. Seven thousand bayonets gleamed in the new sparkling sun. And down like an avalanche swept the sons of the Empire. Words can never depict a charge. It is wild, almost insane, yet glorious. There is a thrill of pride in the veins that kills all fear and makes even the fattest and laziest envious of the fleet-footed subalterns, who always lead the way. And this was an Imperial charge—a charge of willing volunteers, who loved the Motherland.

The stupefied Germans were horror-struck. Seven thousand fresh and lusty warriors struck terror into their hearts. And those bayonets! Well, who wouldn't run! They fled like hares on a frosty morning, pursued by the yelling and stabbing multitude. The slow-footed fell in hundreds. But on pressed the Mixed Division. Over their original line they charged to a great and glorious victory. The counter-attack had won the day.

* * * *

Just as the battle ended, "Sunny Jim" dashed up in his motor car. News of the victory had cheered him, but he was anxious to learn the fate of the Glesca Mileeshy. As the car neared Colonel Corkley's position, he was received with a cheer from a hundred men.

"Good God, colonel—is that all that's left to you?" said the general quietly, looking on the living, then at the piled-up dead.

"Yes, sir," said Corkley, with a catch in his voice, as he tried to salute. The strain and an awful bayonet wound in the shoulder had drained much of his blood. He collapsed at the general's feet.

"Never mind me, doctor," he whispered in a weak voice to the surgeon who had jumped to his side. "Look after Sergeant Tamson."

"Who, sir?"

"The man who saved me," said the colonel, trying to point to the prostrate form of Spud, who lay almost lifeless on the top of some dead Germans. Then closing his eyes he swooned away, muttering, "Useful man—useful man."

Spud Tamson was found living, yet seriously wounded. He had been bayoneted in the chest while gallantly rescuing his colonel from a band of lusty Bavarians.

"Save him if you can, for he has earned the V.C.," said the adjutant to the doctor as Spud was lifted into the motor ambulance.

"Oh, he'll live all right," was the cheerful reply as the the motor started on its way. And live he did. The whole Empire cried "Well done," an all the world wondered at this hero

HUNT FOR VILLA WILL BE RUSHED

No Indication of Withdrawal of American Troops For the Present

Canadian Press Special

WASHINGTON, April 13.—In official quarters it was stated the American troops will not be withdrawn, at this time at least, and that while the question is being discussed with Gen. Carranza the pursuit of Villa will be rushed with renewed vigor.

HE SAW WOMAN CUT HOLE IN ICE

OTTAWA, April 12.—Another attempt was made by a woman to commit suicide in the Rideau canal yesterday afternoon, according to a story told by some corporation laborers working at the corner of Herridge avenue and Echo Drive. William Gow, who is foreman of the gang declares that he saw a woman make her way down to the ice and begin cutting a hole in it with the evident intention of committing suicide. He prevented her and she was brought to her home in Ottawa South.

Yesterday morning a fireman from No. 5 station claims to have prevented a young girl committing suicide in the Rideau river at the foot of Cathcart street. On Monday a woman is alleged to have been seen by some workmen trying to find a watery grave in the Rideau canal at the Deep cut.

HORSES, COW, HOGS, BURNED IN STABLE

NORWOOD, April 12.—About 1.30 a.m. fire was discovered in L. E. Killoran's livery stable. It had got such headway that it was impossible to enter the building. Besides the building and rigs, six horses, one cow and six hogs were burned.

While the fire was at its height a second alarm was rung, and John Weir's large livery, barn and feed stables were found to be on fire. This fire was extinguished before much damage was done. The fire was undoubtedly the work of an incendiary. The loss is partly covered by insurance.

Royal Proclamation Just Issued Gives Wider Range to this List of Articles—Metallic Chlorides Also Under Government Ban

LONDON, April 13.—(Special)—A royal proclamation was issued last night, extending the list of articles which hereafter will be treated as actual contraband. Included in the list are "gold, silver and paper money, and all negotiable instruments and realizable securities."

Also included in the supplemental list are all metallic chlorides, except chloride of sodium, metalloidic compounds of carbon, starch, borax, boric acid and other boric compounds, and sabadilla seeds and all preparations compounded from them.

PREPARED FOR ATTACKS WHEN TIME ARRIVES

Canadian Press Special

PARIS, April 13.—Another lull has fallen on the Verdun battlefield, while the Germans are filling gaps in their ranks and replacing damaged material preparatory to another assault.

It is believed the French command is not likely to modify its methods. General Petain is said to be quite satisfied as long as the Germans continue losing three for one without achieving important results, as he knows he has ample reserves to press counter attacks on a large scale when the opportune time arrives, and also his inexhaustible ammunitions.

The output of three inch shells since the beginning of the war has increased thirty-three times, and larger shells forty-four times, and the manufacture of cannons twenty-three times.

MEXICO ASKS THAT TROOPS BE WITHDRAWN

Canadian Press Special.

MEXICO CITY, April 13.—The Mexican Government has sent its Ambassador in Washington a note to be delivered to Secretary Lansing, this morning asking that the American troops be withdrawn from Mexican territory, and that the pursuit of Villa be left to the Mexican Constitutionalist army.

General Herrera reports to the War Department that Villa is fleeing southward with a handful of ragged followers, badly armed and without rations, a thoroughly defeated man.

According to a despatch received by the War Department, General Pacheco and General Palafox were recently assassinated at Tepextlan by orders of Zapata, who accused them of plotting his downfall.

WILL PROVIDE FOR DEATH OF COUPLE

NEW YORK, April 12.—The surrogate's court has sustained a provision in the will of Charles F. Fowles, an art dealer, in which he stipulated that if he and his wife should die simultaneously he should be declared legally to have died first." Mr. and Mrs. Fowles perished with the sinking of the steamship Lusitania and so far as known their deaths were virtually simultaneous. They drew up their wills two days before the Lusitania sailed on her last voyage.

The executor of Mr. Fowles' $1,005,-069 estate asked the surrogate to construe the clause by which Mr. Fowles left a considerable part of his fortune to his wife. By the court's decision the income of $200,000 will go to Mrs. Fowles' sister, Mrs. Dorothy E. Smith, of London, and eventually the principal will be divided between the children of Mrs. Fowles and Mrs. Smith.

But for the unusual clause in Mr. Fowles' will the $200,000 would have gone to his next of kin.

The assurance adds that the recent conference of the allies in Paris did

A MODERN DAVID WITH THE BRITISH ARMY

Reuben Ginsberg, Aged 13, Followed His Father From Montreal—Drew Praise From Lord Kitchener—Wounded at Ypres—Is Pet of the Battery

LONDON, April 12.—A modern David is the title given by the Jewish Chronicle to Reuben Ginsberg, who, at thirteen years of age, is said to be the youngest soldier in the British and overseas armies. Fourteen months ago, it is said, the boy was in school at Montreal. When his father joined the first Canadian contingent and was about to leave for England, Reuben, who is a devoted son, determined to go with him.

Staff-Sergeant Ginsberg is an old soldier, having served in Africa, Egypt and the Soudan, and he very firmly prohibited his son from carrying out his wish. Reuben, however, saved up a few dollars for his fare to Halifax and there stowed himself away on the steamer in which his father was to be transported to England. Then, in midocean, the child presented himself, and pleaded so hard to be allowed to accompany his father that he was enlisted there and then as trumpeter and regimental mascot. He soon became an expert trumpeter and after a course of training at Salisbury Plain, his father's battery, to which Reuben was attached, was ordered to the front.

When Lord Kitchener reviewed the troops previous to their departure for [the front, Reuben was brought] before him, and, after the usual catechism from K. of K. permission was granted to him to go to the front. The sturdy, bright lad evidently made an impression upon the veteran campaigner, for as he turned away, he was heard to remark to his aide-de-camp, "That's blood for you."

Pet Of The Battery.

At the front Reuben became the pet of the battery, for he endured hardships and privations in the right spirit and did his duty like a soldier. On horse and motorcycle alike he was at home and he often carried messages, learning to rough it with the best of the brave Canadian boys. At length he was wounded by shrapnel at Ypres while riding his motorcycle. He was brought to Shorncliffe and there the assistant chaplain, the Rev. H. Shandel, when he visited that district, found that he would soon become Barmitzval, or attain his religious majority. Arrangements were made for the ceremony to take place at the Ramsgate synagogue. He wore the tallis which he always put on under his tunic before going into action, and it bore the traces of battle upon it. This young soldier is a grandson of a famous rav of the Askenazi con-

SUPREME EFFORT WAS IN VAIN

German Attack Against French in Caurette Woods a Complete Failure

LONDON, April 13.—(Special.)—With an assault delivered this morning against the French positions in the Caurettes Wood between Le Mort Homme and Cumieres the German supreme effort seems to have spent itself. There has been hearty artillery fire since, both east and west of the Meuse, but no infantry advances.

From the grand attack of Sunday the German objective has dwindled until now it is a ravine south of Le Mort Homme, the possession of which would threaten the French hold on the hill.

This morning's attack, like those of yesterday, was aimed at this ravine. Again flaming liquids were used, but without effect, until finally in desperation the Germans charged across an open field exposed to the full fire of the French artillery. When the remnants of those regiments crawled back to their trenches action ended for the day.

Paris fully expects the reopening of the attack within a few hours. The German troops have passed the last point of human endurance, and rest and refitting is necessary. There are also the dead to be buried and the great masses of wounded to be shipped back to Germany.

Russian Sailer Sunk by Sub.

Mediterranean Scene of More Work by Pirates—Nine of Crew Landed

PETROGRAD, via London, April 12.—The fighting north and south of Dvinsk is being waged fiercely, but still without decisive advantage to either side. Military opinion here is inclined to view the situation with the greatest complacency, since the main object of Russia's surprise attack on Field Marshal von Hindenburg's Dvinsk position—to create a diversion while the German attack on Verdun was in progress—is regarded as having been fulfilled.

The necessity of defending their Dvinsk positions is said to have upset the calculations of the German General Staff, who had counted on a period of quiet along the Russian front to enable them to transfer troops to engage in the campaign against the French. The unexpected pressure by the Russians, which made considerable headway against Postavy and Lake Narocz, according to the prevailing view here, not only forced von Hindenburg to use all his available forces including the reserves, on this front, but necessitated the bringing up of fresh troops destined for Verdun to prevent the possibility of being compelled to abandon the whole Dvinsk line.

The operations of the Russian Caucasian armies, which are fighting their way to Trebizond, Erzinjan, and Mesopotamia, have entered upon a new phase, in which Turkish resistance is no longer a negligible factor. By a careful regrouping of their forces the Turks are now opposing the three main lines of the Russian advance with solid organized resistance, which gives way only after most stubborn fighting.

According to estimates by Russian officers, the Turkish force has at least been doubled by reinforcements from European Turkey, the greater part of which despite the importance of Trebizond and the Persian operations is a region of the greatest value to the Turks, since it stands in the way of the main Caucasian armies, whose ultimate aim is to sweep westward toward Constantinople.

To avoid the expense of having a feather recurled, sprinkle it with a fair amount of ordinary salt and shake before a fire until quite dry. The

BRITISH SHIP SINKS TWO GERMAN RAIDERS

Steamship Orbita Decoys Two Commerce Destroyers Into a Trap, and H.M.S. Cumberland Accomplishes The Rest

VALPARAISO, April 13. — (Special.—An apparently authentic report is current here that the British steamship Orbita has decoyed two German commerce raiders into a trap and that both have been sunk by H.M.S. Cumberland.

According to the report, the raiders were sunk somewhere between the Strait of Magellan and the Falkland Islands. No details are available beyond the bare report.

It was off the Falkland Islands that one of the big naval battles of the war was fought on December 8, 1914, when a British naval detachment under Vice Admiral Sir Frederick Sturdee, destroyed Admiral Count von Spee's German squadron, sinking the Scharnhorst the Gneisenau and the Leipzig.

HEAVY GERMAN LOSSES INFLICTED BY CANADIANS

Enemy Makes Three Successive Attacks West of Pilkelm-Ypres Road, But are Quickly Repulsed—Bombard The German Trenches

LONDON, Aprpil 12.—The War Office communication, issued to-night, says:—

"It has now been established that the gallant fighting of the Canadians in their neighborhood inflicted heavy losses on the enemy during the last week.

"Last night we made a small, successful raid on enemy trenches near Richebourg l'Avoue. About ten Germans were killed.

"The enemy last evening made three successive attacks west of the Pilkelm-Ypres road. He first gained a footing in our trenches, but was quickly driven out. Other attacks were repulsed, the Germans leaving about 25 dead in front of our trenches and three prisoners in our hands. We bombarded enemy trenches in this area today.

"There was considerable artillery activity to-day northwest of Wytschaete, and some shelling about Souchez, Carency and Calonne. Behind St. Eloi there has been heavy hostile shelling, but little shelling on the front lines and craters."

CONFESSIONS OF TEUTONS REVEAL EXTENSIVE PLOT

Four Men Have Been Arrested in New York Charged With Placing Fire Bombs in Sugar Bags on a French Liner—Secret Service Men Consider It an Important Catch

NEW YORK, April 13.—Special—Four arrests were made to-night by the local police in connection with the mysterious fires on ships for ports of the Allies.

The men arrested are: Charles von Kleist, aged sixty-seven, a retired German naval captain, living in Hoboken, and a cousin of the late Prince Bismarck; Captain Otto Wolpert, forty-four, Superintendent of the Atlas Steamship Company's pier; Captain Enno Bode, forty-nine, Superintendent of the Hamburg-American Line docks in Hoboken, and Ernest Becker, thirty-two, an electrician on the interned German liner Friedrich der Grosse, lying at Hoboken.

The men are charged with attempting arson. The affidavit filed against them charges them with "acting in concert with each other and others not arrested in manufacturing fire bombs and placing them in sugar bags on board the steamship Kirk Os[wald of the] French Line, on or about May 2, 1915."

The arrests are regarded by the police and United States Secret Service men as the most important since the investigation of German propaganda methods was started.

They were followed almost immediately by full confessions from two of the prisoners, Becker and von Kleist.

Becker is shown as the tool of the men higher up. The name of Franz von Papen, the former German Military Attache to the United States, is brought into the case through a short statement made by Capt. Wolpert.

The confessions indicated that plans to blow up the Allies' ships had been put into operation in other ports than New York. Every suspicious fire on ships bound for Allies' ports is now regarded as having been instigated by men who worked in connection with those involved in the confes-

Organ Recital At St. Thomas'

Professor Wheatley Renders a Brilliant Programme Before an Appreciative Audience

The recital given last evening under the auspices of the Women's Guild of St. Thomas' Church was a decided success, and we have never heard Ernest Wheatley to better advantage than in the programme he played on this occasion. The musical public of Belleville have missed the regular "Twilight Recitals" which for two seasons were much appreciated. The organ at St. Thomas' is, we understand, to be thoroughly cleaned and overhauled this summer, and we hope Prof. Wheatley's engagements will not prevent him resuming them next season.

The programme opened with Rheinberger's "Fugue in G-major", which is a magnificent example of this noted organist's writing, and one containing much difficult pedal work. The performance was marked by clearness and well defined contrasts of tone color. St. Thomas' choir holds, we should think, quite a record in having twelve of its choristers in the C.E.F., and the recitalist played Guilmant's "Lamentation" in memory of two members—Sergt. Ablard and Corpl. Evans—who have fallen in defence of the Empire. Many organists consider this Guilmant's masterpiece, and its wonderful orchestral coloring and impressive themes were skilfully handled by Prof. Wheatley, quite a number being visibly affected by his musicianly reading. Other items of special interest, particularly upon the expression side, were, Schubert's "Ave Maria" and Lemare's "Solitude" and "Andantino," the latter being an exceptionally charming melody. Rubinstein's "Russian Patrol," portraying the approach and passing of a military band, was much enjoyed and was one of the most popular items. The Concerto in E, by Mendelssohn, is an ever welcome violin piece, and in the hands of Miss Joy Higgs received careful and artistic treatment. She obtained a good cantabile tone throughout, and her playing was devoid of anything like "mere display."

The vocal items were supplied by members of the choir, and St. Thomas should be proud to possess such a number of fine solo voices. The Misses Walton, both in their solo numbers, and in the duet, "Till Dawn," showed themselves capable of singing not only with good tone quality, but with a great deal of artistic finish. Miss May Terwilligar gave "O Dry Those Tears" in a manner worthy of much commendation. Harry MacKay is a favorite with Belleville audiences and his singing of Hemery's setting of "Rock of Ages" was good, both vocally and aesthetically. Mr. Percy Cooke is a baritone who should go far, for he has a voice of exceptional quality, and Gounod's "There is a Green Hill" was given in excellent style. Allan Schryver, a member of the Tabernacle Quartette, possesses a robust tenor voice of good quality and he sings with ease of production and good finish, his singing of "Thy Will be Done" meeting with much approval. The programme appended was one of the most interesting Prof. Wheatley has put on and his work as accompanist was one of the features of the recital.

Major Allen, Major Cook and Lieut. Sandford of the 155th Battalion, attended a recruiting meeting at Glen Miller last evening.

Lt.-Col. G. Gillespie was yesterday morning promoted from the rank of Major to Lieut.-Colonel. He is well known throughout this district as Inspector of Cadet Corps for the 3rd Military District, and his many friends here will be pleased to hear of his promotion.

The Quinte Battalion Minstrels scored another great success when they played before a packed house at Deseronto last evening. To-night they will play at Picton.

KINGSTON

With the opening of the big camp at Barriefield, there is a sincere hope that Col. Hemming, the camp commandant, and officer commanding the third military district will be filed to the rank of brigadier-general. To do this is merely to give him his honest dues, and to place on his shoulders the decorations he has so honestly won.

There will be ten bands at Barriefield camp this summer, and each band is doing its best to come into camp with the finest organization.

Colonel Ogilvie, A.A.G., is back at his office after visiting Brockville Cornwall, Ottawa and Perth.

All the prisoners now at Fort Henry are Germans, and of the type that need the greatest watching. It is the ones most dangerous to Canada that are sent to Fort Henry.

Major Campbell, commandant of the Fort will not recommend that any of the prisoners in his charge be allowed to go milking or haymaking this summer. If the Germans interned here need work, they should be made put the road to the Barriefield Camp grounds in good shape for summer use.

Captain Wilson, A.D.D.S., is in the city. All arrangements are being made by Captain Wilson to conduct the dental work of Barriefield camp on the most efficient lines this summer.

FALSE ALARM OF FIRE

At a few minutes before 6 o'clock last evening an alarm of fire was sounded, and much excitement was caused upon the street when it became rumored that Hotel Quinte was on fire. Such fortunately proved not to be the case. It appears that a party went into a place of business and sent in an alarm that the Quinte was on fire. The fire brigade responded with alacrity to the call only to learn it was a false alarm. The police have ascertained the name of the man who sent in the alarm, and a summons has been issued for him to appear before the Police Magistrate.

Just Try This When Hairy Growths Appear

CALLED BY DEATH

DAVID JAMES FAIRFIELD

It was a surprise to many citizens this morning when it became known that Mr. David James Fairfield, a well known citizen of Belleville, had passed away. The end came last evening at his residence, Coleman Street, after an illness of about three weeks' duration. The ultimate cause of death was heart trouble. In the year 1840, namely 76 years ago, deceased was born in the Township of Thurlow and all his life had been spent in Hastings County and Belleville. He was a gentleman well and favorably known throughout this district. In early life he was for some time engaged in farming and cheese making. Since becoming a resident of Belleville he followed the occupation of an auctioneer. He had also been for a number of years the faithful and efficient Secretary-Treasurer of the Belleville Cheese Board. In religion Mr. Fairfield was a Methodist, being identified with Bridge Street Church. He was a member of Moira Lodge A. F. & A. M. of this city, and was also identified with the Orange Society. In politics he was a staunch supporter of the Conservative party. A year ago deceased, with Mrs. Fairfield, commemorated their golden wedding anniversary. In addition to the widow a family of two sons and one daughter survive. The sons are H. E. of this city, and John K. of Rochester, N.Y. The daughter is Mrs. (Dr) Gutzeit of Toronto. To the bereaved will be extended the heartfelt sympathy of a host of friends.

Forced to Leave School, Had St. Vitus' Dance

Astonishing Cure of This Nervous Trouble Effected by Use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food

Here is a case where life-long gratitude will be felt for Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. As a school girl and in later life Dr. Chase's Nerve Food came to the rescue when the nerves gave out. Now a healthy, robust woman happily gives the credit to this great food cure for restoring her to health and strength.

Miss Sadie M. White, 28 Waterloo street, Fredericton, N.B., writes:—

"When ten years of age a friend of mine had St. Vitus' Dance and she had to leave school and go under a doctor's care. Instead of benefiting by the treatment she appeared to get worse. Her tonsils and tongue became so swollen than she could scarcely take any nourishment. For two weeks she was this way and then took convulsions and nearly choked to death. She was ordered to the hospital, but soon got worse again. I recommended Dr Chase's Nerve Food to her and she used nine boxes, steadily growing better. Three years later a severe fright brought on the nervous trouble again, and she suffered everything a human being could endure. Her mother bought a dozen boxes of the Nerve Food, and with this treatment she was fully restored. I wish you could see her now, a strong, healthy, robust woman with two lovely babies. She still uses the Nerve Food when she feels out of sorts, but has had no return of the old nervous trouble."

For weak, puny, nervous children there is nothing like Dr. Chase's Nerve Food to enrich the blood, restore the starved nerves and start them on the way to health. When they fail to get proper nourishment from the food they eat, this food cure presents the necessary ingredients in condensed and easily assimilated form, and strength and vigor is restored. 50 cents a box, 6 boxes for $2.50, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Company, Limited, Toronto.

DEATH NOTICES

FAIRFIELD—In Belleville, on Wednesday, April 12th, David James Fairfield, aged 76 years, 2 months and 4 days.

The funeral will take place Friday, April 14th. Services at the house, Coleman street at 2.30 p.m., under Masonic fraternity, Interment, Belleville Cemetery.

SELECTING AND PLANTING FRUIT TREES

In setting out fruit trees trim off all broken or bruised roots and make the cut slanting and on the bottom side, so that the stock will sit snug into the ground.

The top-growth should be reduced to about one-third of the amount on the tree as it comes from the nursery.

In pruning tops cut back to a bud; and one so placed that it is likely to start a limb in the direction you desire it to grow.

In cherries no mistake will be made in planting the Early Richmond for early and the Montmorency for main crop. Both are classed as "sours," but ask any small boy who has tasted them if the name is well applied. The Montmorency is one of the best canners.

In plums Abundance will be found to bear early and abundantly. The skin is very thin and the fruit juiciness itself, and of delightful flavor for eating out of hand.

The Burbank plum is a very free and early bearer. If the fruit is thinned to one-half the usual crop the remainder will grow to a very large size, and make splendid material for canning. When well ripened the fruit can be peeled, covered with cream and served raw, in which case it makes a very good imitation of peaches.

For real quality in canning there is nothing superior to the Reine Claude, and this variety has the advantage of coming late, thereby lengthening out the plum season.

CANADIANS FROM ST. ELOI

Wounded Reach London with Story of Brave Stand

TORONTO, April 12.—The Toronto Evening Telegram has the following article from its London correspondent, Douglas S. Robertson:

A number of wounded soldiers have just arrived in England from the Canadian front, where, at St. Eloi, they had sharp fighting. I talked to some of the wounded this afternoon. They narrate that after a terrific concentrated bombardment, the enemy attacked and managed to dislodge the the troops from some four Canadian battalions, which had been holding the craters where mines had been exploded by engineers about two weeks ago against the German position, and which were taken by British troops. The position was a most difficult one to hold, and of no vital importance. After standing shell fire for some time the Canadians were ordered to retire a short distance.

Notwithstanding that the enemy attack was the fiercest in many months. The Canadians stood their ground splendidly and soon were firmly entrenched close by.

Our artillery sustained its reputation and ably supported the infantry. The Germans suffered severely from our shelling.

There was no more difficult position on the line to hold than that which was held by the Canadians in the vicinity of the Ypres salient.

Red, White And Blue Tea

On Tuesday afternoon and evening, under the auspices of the Orange Branch of the Rainbow Circle Red Cross and Patriotic Fund, a red, white and blue tea was given at the home of Mrs. T. Claire, Albert street, convenor of the Circle.

The entrance, reception and tea rooms were beautifully decorated with festoons of red, white and blue, and in a profusion of flags at the tea table the same color scheme was very prettily carried out. Little Miss Dorothea Newson attended the door; Mrs. J. R. Davis assisted Mrs. Claire in receiving, while Mrs. G. Ormand received the donations.

In the afternoon Mrs. J. Currie and Mrs. F. Aitkins poured tea, assisted by Mrs. A. Cole and Mrs. M. W. Mott, and in the evening Mrs. Hodginson and Mrs. I. Crooks were assisted by Mrs. G. VanTassell and Mrs. Newson. During the afternoon Mrs. Dun and Mrs. A. Singer rendered several vocal and instrumental numbers, which were very much enjoyed.

BIG HOWITZER ORDER PLACED BY BRITAIN

Purchases One Hundred From Midvale Steel Co. to Cost $2,700,000

NEW YORK, April 12.—The British Government has placed an order for 100 howitzers with the Midvale Steel & Ordnance Company. The guns will cost about $27,000 each, making the total of $2,700,000. As the Midvale Company has already on its books all the business it can handle for some months ahead, it will probably be necessary to erect a new plant for the manufacture of the howitzers. Plans for a new $1,000,000 structure are receiving consideration.

The Midvale Company has a large amount of rifle business on its books as well as a big domestic business. Salesmen were instructed one week ago not to accept no more orders calling for delivery this year. The British gun order will not be completed until 1917.

HOW TO MAKE CHOCOLATE ICING

An easy way to make delicious chocolate icing is to mix one-quarter cup of Fry's Cocoa with two cups of confectioner's sugar, adding two tablespoons of boiling water or cream.

Many of the best cooks follow this recipe nowadays. Fry's Cocoa gives the icing an exquisite flavor. The usual "bother" of making icing with cake chocolate, which sometimes must be ordered specially for the purpose, is avoided. Try it.

THIS IS THE 619TH DAY THE BRITISH EMPIRE HAS BEEN AT WAR WITH GERMANY.

WILL ENCOURAGE TRAVEL.

Many disturbing and unfounded rumors are current in the United States regarding the difficulties met with by American visitors entering Canada, and this has led Mr. W. D. Scott, superintendent of the Department of the Interior, to issue from Ottawa a vigorous statement of the views of the Government on this subject.

"The Canadian Government," says Mr. Scott, "views sympathetically the tourist traffic, and out of the thousands who visited various parts of Canada last year, I think very few had any reason to complain of their treatment. We shall continue to welcome bona fide tourists and visitors as in other years, but I may say frankly that there are people of certain nationalities that we cannot encourage to visit Canada while the war is in progress.

"Passports are entirely unnecessary; they have never been called for in the past, are not now, and are not likely to be so far as travel between the United States and Canada is concerned. All United States citizens, whether by birth or naturalization, are accorded the same treatment. Persons born in Germany, Austro-Hungary, Bulgaria or Turkey, and who still remain citizens of one or other of these countries, should not visit Canada at this time. Persons born in one or other of the countries named, but who have been naturalized in the United States, may visit Canada if they so desire, but they should carry their United States naturalization papers as a means of identification. Persons who are citizens of friendly or neutral countries, may visit Canada with the same freedom accorded to United States citizens.

"Conscription does not exist in Canada, and is not contemplated, although it has been much talked of in the United States, especially by certain interests unfavorable to Canada. No one need, therefore, miss visiting Canada through fear of conscription.

"This letter may be accepted as final on the subject with which it deals, and I trust that American tourists who this year desire to visit Canada will not be deterred by false rumors spread by thoughtless or mischievous persons."

GRAHAM IN QUEBEC.

Hon. George P. Graham appears to have made a speech in Quebec within the past few days, taking for a text the bilingual question and its troubles in Ontario, the most significant passage of which being to the effect that, in his judgment, "the passing of a statute or even the final interpretation, by the privy council, of the British North America Act would not bring harmony out of the discord that had unfortunately arisen. The appeal must be made not to men's minds but to their hearts." "Which," adds The Hamilton Herald," is as much as to say that if the privy council decides that the Quebec racialists have no legal right to special privileges which they demand in Ontario, those special privileges should be granted just because the Quebec racialists demand them, in order that friction may be removed. It is a plea inspired by a weak opportunism. If Ontario yielded to the Quebec demands the same demands would be made in all the western provinces, and Ontario's example would be cited as a precedent. And the concessions made to French aggression would be used as a means of extorting fresh concessions. There would follow demands for the use of French in the legislature, the printing of all Government reports in French as well as English, the teaching of French in all the public and separate schools of Ontario on an equality with English. The line must be drawn somewhere.

"Is it to be understood that Mr. Graham, in his Quebec speech, outlined the policy of his political chief and the Liberal party on the question of bilingualism in the schools of Ontario? Are we to understand that if Sir Wilfrid were again to become Premier he would use his influence and power to get for the racial agitators of his province the concessions which they demand from Ontario? It looks like it. Perhaps Sir Wilfrid would even go so far as to introduce remedial legislation which would force Ontario to right the "wrong" of the French minority in this province and endow them with the privilege of having their children instructed in French by French teachers, to the neglect or exclusion of the English language.

"Anyhow, the speech of Mr. Graham is one to be profoundly regretted. We cannot believe that it was sincerely spoken. It was the speech of a party politician less anxious to clarify a murky situation by prudent counsel, less anxious to have the whole truth of the situation known and understood, than to win political support for his party."

DRAWING DOUBLE PAY.

The discrimination of the Federal Government, between civil servants who have enlisted for military purposes, and with regard to pay, is likely to create a soreness that will not soon pass away, observes The Kingston Whig. All the public officials who enlisted prior to Nov. 1st, 1915, were allowed full pay from the civil treasury. They were in very great luck. Perhaps those who hastened to enlist, who were eager to serve their country without any persuasion, are entitled to some consideration. But full pay for two positions is certainly over-doing it, and it is not surprising that the limit has been reached. Now there is no allowance for the civil servant who enters the military service, while the men who were enrolled prior to last November continue to draw double pay. There is a decided injustice in this, and it should be discontinued. The civil servant who can go to the front should not suffer financially by the proceeding. He should get from the military establishment as much as he got in the civil service, or a little more. But the double deal is an imposition which cannot be justified.

The destruction of the Provence, which caused some 3,000 deaths, may be excused as an act of war, though it was more like wholesale slaughter. But the losses of vessels, serious as they are, are not crippling the Allies; and, judging from the experience of the earlier activity of the German submarines, the watching British and French war vessels will overcome the piratically-operative craft and make the seas comparatively safe again in a brief time. The bitterness of the war may be aggravated by the submarines' methods; but their accomplishments will not hasten the end in the way those responsible desire.

In the wildest scene which the Legislature of New Brunswick has known for many years the supporters of the Government on Monday night charged the Minister of Public Works with allowing all kinds of graft to go on in his department. Hon. John Morrissey, the Minister, replied in a bitter speech, declaring that the accusations were false and unjustified, and that if at least two of his accusers had their just deserts they would be "under a different roof than this." "Shyster," "grafter," "thief," "scavenger," "scullion," and many other epithets of this kind were hurled across the floor of the House and Parliamentary rules were cast to the winds.

9 YEARS

I suffered with an abscess on my face," writes Mrs. Herbert Cox, of Port McNichol, Ont. "I tried everything and received medical treatment for some time, but in vain. Finally the doctor advised an operation, which was performed, but instead of improving, the sore became worse. I had despaired of ever finding a cure, when a friend recommended Zam-Buk. I tried it, with the result that before long the poison was drawn out and the sore began to heal. Perseverance effected a complete cure, and now not even a scar remains."

Zam-Buk is equally good for eczema, blood-poisoning, ulcers, boils, piles, burns, cuts, and all skin injuries. All druggists, 50c. box, 3 for $1.25, or from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto.

Current Comment

The exodus of German bankers from the Fatherland, bearing with them as much of their capital as they can take away, is a significant sign. What those bankers have they want to hold, and they are fearful of losing it if they stay.—Hamilton Herald.

A Hamilton, Ont., lad of fourteen tried unsuccessfully to enlist on several occasions. At last in disgust he walked away from the recruiting station with the Parthian shot, "Well if you lose the war, don't blame me." That boy has the kind of stuff in him that makes armies unbeatable.—Lethbridge Herald.

For the second time during the Legislative session the opening has been delayed an hour to allow the Conservative members to discuss in secret what should be discussed in public. If the people could only hear a real discussion of public questions it would be enlightening, perhaps disillusioning.—Toronto Globe. And what were the Grits doing during the mis-spent hour

French financial influence in Spain has so increased that the power of the Krupps at Madrid has been shaken. In recent years the Krupps have wielded tremendous influence. Financially the French are satisfied. While expecting that the new loan in the United States will be successful, they realize this depends on the amount of collateral they can obtain.

As the ship bearing Sir Sam Hughes across the Atlantic nears the shores of the continent it is noted that his enemies' anticipations of what will follow his arrival are declining in expansiveness. Mr. Kyte was seemingly a big man a week ago. He appears of moderate size today. He may be small again next week.—Montreal Gazette.

The Opposition's ability to show up grafters is no evidence of statesmanship. After the years of experience they had in power, they know the profiteering game—know how to show it up, and know how to play it. The people of this country need leadership—something more than ability to show up grafters. Independence and integrity and constructive ideas are what count in the coming times of stress. There will be little or no room for them in the Liberal party so long as it is run by its present mandarins.—Ottawa Citizen.

The Toronto Star voices a well-founded complaint at the fact that Canada has made no attempt to organize an aerial branch of the military service. It notes the success achieved by Canadian aviators and the prominent part they are playing in the British army aeroplane service and regrets that Canada cannot claim the credit for herself.—Ottawa Free Press. If the matter was brought up in the Commons it would be squelched in the Senate, as was the proposed dreadnought contribution.

GinPills FOR THE KIDNEYS

Why They're Sold

WINNIPEG, May 19th, 1912.

"In the autumn of 1911, I suffered with a continual pain in the back. As a druggist, I tried various remedies without any apparent results. Having sold GIN PILLS for a number of years, I thought there must be good in them, otherwise the sales would not increase so fast. I gave them a fair trial and the results I find to be good."

The Poets' Corner

THERE'S PLENTY OF TIME

I've never been known as a poet,
 And this little break into rhyme
Is quest for that wonderful country,
 The Land Where There's Plenty of Time.

Does anyone know where it lieth?
 "It's only a beautiful dream?"
No, No; I have heard of its glory
 And glimpsed an occasional gleam.

To reach it I'd travel the desert;
 The highest of mountains I'd climb;
I'd sail o'er the wildest of oceans
 To bring home a shipload of Time:

I've dresses to make and fix over;
 I've babies and chickens to tend;
And bonnets to trim and make stylish,
 And stockings to darn—without end.

The neighborly deeds I'd be doing,
 The sisterly letters I'd write,
If only the daylight were longer,
 The dawn not so near to the night!

I'd cheer the faint-hearted and fallen;
 I'd pay up the calls that I owe;
I'd ramble and visit and journey;
 I'd read and I'd write and I'd sew.

If somebody only would tell me
 The where of that loveliest clime—
The country I sigh for forever—
 The Land Where There's Plenty of Time.

Celia W. Whitehead.

FARM AND GARDEN

HEALING WOUNDS ON TREES

A writer in Rural New Yorker says the cleanest and quickest healing of bark wounds on trees, inflicted during cultivation, was obtained on some young apple trees which had been severely barked by a cultivator. These injuries were treated and ordinary grafting wax applied to entirely cover the cut surface. The rapid healing that resulted from such treatment was not due to any especial healing virtue of the grafting wax, but to the protective and moisture-holding properties of the wax, which allowed the healing processes to take place unhindered by drying influences, or the work of disease-producing organisms. "This practice," he says, 'will certainly pay when young orchard trees have been barked and should be done as soon as possible after the injury has been made."

GRAND TRUNK PIONEER IN WIRELESS CONTROL OF MOVING TRAINS.

CHICAGO, April 10.—An invention controlling railroad trains by wireless is part of the 1916 exhibition of the National Railway Appliance Association in Chicago. Danger signals are flashed to the train by a touch on a key. The wireless, worked in connection with an automatic speed control, applies the air brakes automatically, whether the engineer sees the signal or not, and reduces the speed to the desired maximum.

Experiments in wireless telegraphy on the railway were conducted for the first time by the Grand Trunk Railway in 1912, just six years after Marconi made his successes in England. The occasion was the meeting of the American Association of General Passenger and Ticket Agents held at Portland, Maine, and it was during the journey from Chicago to Portland in a special train provided by the Grand Trunk that the first successful experiments in wireless ever made on a train were demonstrated to the party. These experiments were conducted by Dr. E. Rutherford, F.R.C.S., and Dr. Howard T. Barnes, F.R.C.S., both of the Macdonald Physical Laboratory of the McGill University, and consisted of an exchange of signals between a station and the train, which was travelling at the rate of 50 miles an hour. With comparatively simple laboratory apparatus it was found possible to keep the train in touch with a station for a distance of eight to ten miles. St. Dominique, 32 miles west of Montreal, was selected as the transmitting station where two large metal plate vibrators, connected with an induction coil of the usual pattern, were situated. On the train itself the waves were received by collecting wires connected to a coherer of nickel and silver powder. The relay operated electric bells in three cars. The collecting wires were run through the guides for the train signal cord, and extended on both sides of the coherer for about one car length.

SAFETY FIRST PRODUCES SPLENDID RESULTS ON GRAND TRUNK LINES

MONTREAL, April 10.—Vice-President Howard G. Kelley, of the Grand Trunk Railway System, in a message issued here today to the employees in the operating, maintenance and construction departments of the road, says:—

"There has been a gratifying reduction in the number of employees injured.

"This improvement, it is believed, is due largely to the exercise of care and diligence which is expected, as a matter of course, from railroad men.

"The management, however, takes this opportunity to express grateful appreciation to officers and employees whose fidelity to duty has made this announcement possible.

"We would like, if we could, to meet every employee on the Grand Trunk face to face. If it were possible to do so and if, at such meeting, we had time to ask you one and only one question, that question would be: "Are you doing your work in the safest practicable manner?"

The Eternal Lover

by Edgar Rice Burroughs

Copyright, 1914, by W. G. Chapman

the hound's scent was but a trifle more acute than his human companion's, but the man depended almost solely upon the telltale evidences which his eyes could apprehend, leaving the scent spoor for the beast, for thus it had been his custom to hunt with the savage wolfish progenitors of Terkoz a hundred thousand years before.

They moved silently and swiftly through the jungle, across valleys, over winding hill trails, wherever the broad path of the caravan led. In a day they covered as much ground as the caravan had covered in a week.

By night they slept at the foot of some great tree, the man and beast curled up together, or crawled within dark caves when the way led through the mountain, or when Zor, the lion, was abroad the man would build a rude platform high among the branches of a tree that he and the hound might sleep in peace throughout the night.

Nu saw strange sights that filled him with wonder and sealed his belief that he had been miraculously transferred to another world.

There were villages of black men, some of which gave evidence of recent conflict. Burned huts and mutilated corpses were all that remained in many, and in others only a few old men and women were to be seen.

He also passed herds of giraffe—a beast that had been unknown in his own world—and many an elephant, which reminded him of Glub, the mammoth. But all these beasts were smaller than those he had known in his other life nor nearly so ferocious.

Why, he could scarce recall a beast of any description that did not rush into a death struggle with the first member of another species which it came upon, provided, of course, that it stood the slightest show of dispatching its antagonist.

Of course there had been the smaller and more timid animals whose entire existence had consisted in snatching such food as they could as they fled through the savage days and awful nights of that fierce age in the perpetual effort to escape or elude the countless myriads of huge carnivora and bellicose ruminants whose trails formed a mighty network from pole to pole.

To Nu the jungles of Africa seemed silent and deserted places. The beasts, even the more savage of them, seldom attacked except in hunger or the protection of their young. He had passed within a dozen paces of a great herd of diminutive, hairless mammoths, and they had but raised their little pig eyes and glanced at him as they flapped their great ears back and forth against the annoying flies and browsed upon the branches of young trees.

The ape people seemed frightened out of their wits at his approach, and he had even seen the tawny bodies of lions pass within a stone's throw of him without charging.

It was amazing. Life in such a world would scarce be worth the living. It made him lonelier than ever to see that he could travel for miles without encountering a single danger.

Far behind him along the trail of the Arabs came a dozen white men and half a hundred savage Waziri warriors.

Not an hour after Barney Custer discovered Nu's absence a native runner had come hurrying in from the north to beg Lord Greystoke's help in pursuing and punishing a band of Arab slave and ivory raiders who were laying waste the villages, murdering the old men and the children and carrying the young men and women into slavery.

While Greystoke was questioning the fellow he let drop the fact that among the other prisoners of the Arabs was a young white woman.

Instantly commotion reigned upon the Greystoke ranch. White men were jumping into field khaki, looking to the firearms and ammunition, lest their black body servants should have neglected some essential. Stable boys were saddling the horses.

The sleek ebon warriors of Uziri were greasing their black hides, adjusting barbaric war bonnets, streaking faces, breasts and limbs with ocher, vermilion or ghastly bluish white and looking to slim shield, poisoned arrow and formidable spear.

For a time the fugitive was forgotten, but as the march proceeded they came upon certain reminders that recalled him to their minds and indicated that he was far in advance of them upon the trail of the Arabs.

The first sign of him was the carcass of a bull buffalo. Straight through the heart was the great hole that they now knew was made by the passage of the ancient stone tipped spear. Strips had been knife cut from the sides, and the belly was torn as though by a wild beast.

Brown stooped to examine the ground about the bull. When he straightened up he looked at Greystoke and laughed.

"Didn't I understand you to say that he must have killed the dog?" he asked. "Look here. They ate side by side from the body of their kill."

* * * * * * * *

For three weeks now Victoria Custer had been a prisoner of Sheik Ibn Aswad, but other than the ordinary hardships of African travel she had experienced nothing of which she might complain.

She had even been permitted to ride upon one of the few donkeys that still survived, and her food was as good as that of Ibn Aswad himself, for the canny old sheik knew that the better the condition of his prisoner the better the price she would bring at the court of the sultan of Fulad.

Proposition To Aid Farmers

Transportation Arrangements Settled at Meeting in Winnipeg—Dominion Gov't May Pay

WINNIPEG, April 11.—An important meeting in connection with the proposal to release a large number of interned aliens from detention camps in order that they may aid farmers in agricultural operations of the present year was held on Saturday afternoon in the office of the commissioner of immigration here, J. B. Walker, who presided. Those present at the conference included Major-General Sir William D. Otter, K.C.B., who is in general charge of the detention camps of the Dominion; George A. Walton and Ralph G. McNeillie, general passenger agents of the Canadian Pacific Railway; Osborne Scott, assistant general passenger agent of the Canadian Northern; W. E. Duperow, assistant general passenger agent of the Grand Trunk Pacific; R. MacKenzie, of the Manitoba Grain Growers' Association; George Munroe, president of the western section of the Canadian Bankers' Association, and W. H. McWilliams, of the Grain Exchange.

At the meeting many details in connection with the release of interned aliens were discussed. It was arranged that, as the list of available men in the camp at Brandon was exhausted from Cochrane west and, if necessary, 2,000 men would be brought from the camps near that place to Brandon. If it should seem desirable, the cost of this transportation may be borne by the Federal Government.

Farmers getting men from Brandon must advance a minimum sum of $2, which all aliens will be asked to pay for transportation. The rate to be charged by the railway will be one cent a mile from the outward journey, with a minimum of $2 as stated. Farmers using this labor will be required to take each man for a period of seven months, to pay the current rate of wages, which must include board and lodging, and to report once a month to the commandant of the camp. Cases of desertion must be reported at once. Farmers wanting this help are advised to make the trip to Brandon, but in certain cases the arrangements can be made by mail. Tickets at one cent a mile will be available up to May 31.

Sir William Otter will visit the camps at Verdun, Lethbridge, and Banff and will then go to Cochrane to visit the camps there.

Bounty on Zink Refined In Canada

Sir Thos. White Has Resolution to Implement Promise Made to Company

OTTAWA, April 12.—Sir Thomas White has given notice of a resolution in the Commons, implementing the promise made to the company which arranged to undertake the refining of zinc in Canada, that legislation would be brought down this season providing for a bounty in case the the price obtainable in Canada falls below the market price in England after the war. Zinc is now being refined in Canada at the Trail Smelters in British Columbia, the industry having been started with a view to meeting the war demand. Another zinc-refining industry is mooted for eastern Canada, where cheap power will make the electrolytic process feasible.

The bounty resolution of which the Minister of Finance has given notice provides for a bounty of two cents per pound on zinc or spelter wherever the price in Canada is below the normal price paid in Great Britain. It is provided that no bounty be paid during the continuation of the war or after July 1, 1917, and also that the total amount payable under the provisions of the bounty act shall not exceed the sum of $100,000. The bounty was promised as an inducement to the establishment of the Canadian enterprise and to insure it a certain stability of price for the output, so as to guarantee a return on the initial cost of the plant installation.

The Trail smelter is now producing considerably more than the Canadian market can absorb, and is shipping large quantities of refined zinc both to Great Britain and Russia, where it is needed for munitions manufacture.

PROPOSAL IN SENATE FOR ITS OWN REFORM

Senator Cloran Gives Notice of Resolution Following British Precedency

OTTAWA, April 12.—Senator Cloran has given notice in the Senate of the following resolution:

"That in the opinion of this House it is desirable that the British Parliament should be asked to amend the British North America Act so as to provide that when the Senate of Canada rejects a Government bill or measure during two consecutive sessions, the House of Commons of Canada at the ensuing session thereafter shall have the power, de plein droit, to pass and adopt such bill or measure without further reference to the Senate."

The resolution is along the lines of that adopted in the British Parliament a few years ago as a solution of the House of Lords problem, when the Conservative majority in the Lords was blocking the Home Rule and other legislation of the Commons. Senate reform was a plank in Sir Robert Borden's platform before he became leader of the Government. Since then there have been fulminations against the Liberal majority in the Senate, but no concrete proposal for any legislation reform such as was advocated when the Conservatives were in Opposition. The proposal for Senate reform now comes from within the Senate itself, and follows British precedent.

NEWS AGENT ARRESTED

Chief of Police of Parry Sound Claims He Was Eyewitness

Charles Haines, Chicago, who was making his first trip as a news agent on a Toronto to Winnipeg train, was Tuesday night arrested by Chief Constable Forder of Parry Sound, who claims that he witnessed Haines defraud Mr. E. H. Dorsch, 174 Booth avenue, a passenger, and then, after he had warned the conductor of what had happened, attempt to obtain in a like manner twenty dollars from another passenger.

When arrested he had forty dollars in his possession for which he could not account when questioned at detective headquarters.

Don't Let Soap Spoil Your Hair

When you wash your hair, be careful what you use. Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali, which is very injurious, as it dries the scalp and makes the hair brittle.

The best thing to use is just plain mulsified cocoanut oil, for this is pure and entirely greaseless. It's very cheap, and beats the most expensive soaps or anything else all to pieces. You can get this at any drug store, and a few ounces will last the whole family for months.

Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in, about a teaspoonful is all that is required. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather, cleanses thoroughly, and rinses out easily. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and is soft, fresh looking, bright, fluffy wavy and easy to handle. Besides, it loosens and takes out every particle of dust, dirt and dandruff.

PASTOR RUSSELL

TRENTON, N. J., April 9.—Pastor Russell was here to-day. He gave a very interesting discourse on 1 Timothy 6:12—"Fight the good fight of faith; lay hold on eternal life, whereunto thou art also called, and hast professed a good profession before many witnesses." Excerpts follow:

At the discourse of last Sunday we saw that during the present time the merit of Christ's righteousness is imputed to the Church class in order to permit them to become New Creatures in Christ, of a different order from the world. As we then noted, the sins of those who now leave the world to follow Jesus are covered by the imputation of His sacrificial merit, that they may join Him in sacrifice and thus be accounted worthy to reign with Him in the coming time of blessing for the world—the Millennial Age. They are to be a distinctly new creation. This covering of their sins lasts from the time when they become Christians until the end of their journey here below.

During this period each one will have a battle against the downward tendencies of his flesh—a severe conflict; and by the close of his earthly life he will have demonstrated to the Lord to what extent he has been loyal and true in striving against sin; for that which constitutes our battle as children of God, as soldiers of the Cross, is not merely a campaign against error. In times past we have all been under a cloud of error. It is important indeed to have recognized this condition and to have come out into the light of God's Truth. We are not to minimize the value of correct doctrine. But this is not the main thing; it is only a means to an end. The most important thing is to get rid of SIN.

There are errors of mind, of doctrine, of thought, of morals, of character. From childhood all these things had been going on in our life. We did not realize just what they were. As to errors of doctrine, few preached about them. Ministers of the Gospel said nothing about them; in fact, many of the clergy did not recognize these things as errors. But now we see very clearly what the Bible has to say about doctrine. Now we see that God wishes His people to be free from doctrinal errors. But especially does He wish them to be free from any sympathy with sin, unrighteousness, iniquity, injustice.

In other words, God wishes His people to be very loyal to the Golden Rule. This is the first proposition; and to learn this lesson requires sometimes the experience of years. Very many have never practised JUSTICE. They are unjust in their dealings with their families. Husbands deal unjustly with their wives, parents with their children, wives with husbands, and children with parents. With some people injustice would seem to be the rule of life.

But from the time when we become followers of the Lord Jesus Christ, and see how justice is written in the Law of God, we begin to perceive that God expects us to observe the Golden Rule. We should then begin to do so right in our own families—with our parents, our children, our companion in life. This Golden Rule will affect all the affairs of life. It applies everywhere and in everything. "Do unto others as you would that they should do unto you." As we learn to consider carefully, in our dealings with others, to do for them and toward them as we would wish them to do for us and toward us, we shall find a great transformation going on with us. Gradually the whole course of life is changed.

Great Diligence Necessary.

If we could get this Rule thoroughly worked into our hearts and lives, it would prove to be one of the greatest possible blessings, not only to ourselves, but also to others. No part of God's instructions to the Church is more important than this exhortation to justice. Nothing that He ever does is out of line with absolute justice; and He has invited His people to copy His character-likeness. He wishes us to cultivate and develop in ourselves the great qualities which He possesses and which He has illustrated to us.

There are brethren in Christ who from outward appearance are seemingly not so far advanced as they might be in this respect. Measure not yourselves by the world; for the world does not heed the Golden Rule. We are not to measure them as we measure ourselves; we are not to expect as much from them. Neither should we measure ourselves by other Christians. (2 Corinthians 10:12.) Some who are called Christians are only morally inclined people, who have never been begotten of the Holy Spirit, who have never come into the School of Christ. We appreciate their characters, but we are not to measure ourselves by them. We should measure ourselves only by the Word of the Lord, which asks, "What manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness?"—2 Peter 3:11.

This pointed question of the Apostle Peter implies that the Church of Christ are a special class, different from all other people in the world—a peculiar people, as the Apostle Paul puts it—not peculiar in dress, but zealous of good works, zealous for everything that is right, laying down their lives for the Truth, in the service of others.—Titus 2:14.

Justice in the Home.

We should endeavor not only to say nothing to our families that would injure them, but rather to study to be a blessing to them. And so with our dealings with all. Every human being calls for justice. As followers of Christ, we are to be foremost in exercising justice toward all. There should be nothing less than this in our intentions. If with our heart we are recognizing the Golden Rule, we shall continually seek to conform our very thoughts to it. We shall seek to think as generously of our neighbor as we would wish him to think of us, and to speak as kindly of him as we would wish him to speak of us. The principle of doing good to others would be exercised toward all.

Some who seem to be exact in their dealings with the world, who would not keep even one cent back from the person to whom it was due, appear to be very careless in dealing with their loved ones, treating them very unjustly. This should not be. Justice is the foundation of the Throne of God; and in practising the Golden Rule we become more and more like our Heavenly Father. He does to others only what He would wish them to do to Him. As He would not wish others to roast Him or torture Him, so He does not roast or torture them.

Let us ever keep the Golden Rule in mind, and it will furnish us with the very essence of the spirit of justice. First and always, let us treat others as we would wish them to treat us. Afterwards, let us do a little more; but let us strive never to come short on this fundamental principle. We should indeed, as Christians, give more than justice, but NEVER LESS. Love will lead us to do more, even as it led our Lord Jesus. He kept the Golden Rule inviolate in every instance. He never did less than justice; but He did more, much more. He gave His life for others.

And this is what His followers have engaged to do. This is our covenant. We are to follow the Golden Rule, and then do more. We are to lay down our lives for the brethren and to do for the world as we have opportunity. This is the Bible thought for Jesus' disciples. It is one which should appeal to us even from the human standpoint as being the highest ideal of Christian living.

Fighting the Good Fight.

There is no place where we can better learn to rule our own spirit than in our own home. With husband and wife, with parent and child, with brother and sister, the constant practise of the Golden Rule is an important matter. The battle with self is the greatest battle the Christian must fight; for in it he learns to exercise his will in the right direction—in the direction of control of self. It is only after we have conquered self, only after we have become master of our own flesh, only after we have subdued anger, malice, hatred, and strife in our own hearts, that we are enabled, by means of these severe battles with our own weaknesses, to assist others, to aid them—by our example—to overcome their own besetments and infirmities.

No matter where this conflict may begin, we find entrenched within ourselves many armed and opposing powers. These have possession of us by heredity; they are there as the result of Father Adam's fall. If, when we begin the battle, we have passed the days of youth, these imperfections and weaknesses are all the more strongly entrenched; and it requires the greater conflict to rout them. But he that would win the prize of the High Calling must fight the good fight of faith down to the very end of his earthly existence.

This continual battle of the new mind against the fallen flesh is a good fight in the sense that the New Creature is fighting against the weaknesses and besetments of the fallen human nature, against temptations from within and from without, that appeal to us as human beings. It is a fight of faith because the entire course of the New Creature is one of faith; for "we walk by faith, not by sight." In this battle we could never succeed without aid from on High. Hence we must watch and pray. We must put on securely "the whole armor of God."—Ephesians 6:12-18.

Inspiration of God's Promises.

All of us who have become true followers of Christ have had these thoughts come before our minds. As we progress we learn better what God wishes for us. When first we gave our hearts to the Lord we did not know all that is included in full consecration. Many things were hidden from the eyes of our understanding. But as we have gone on step by step, the Lord has brought us to the clear realization that we must suffer with Christ. Let us, then, progress along this way of sacrifice—sacrificing our lives for the Truth, following in the footsteps of Jesus.

Although we have learned that it is our privilege to sacrifice our lives with Christ, yet the greatest lesson for us to learn is what God is to do for us. He is the One who is doing the really great things. Our hearts are stirred within us by His great and precious promises. We feed upon them and meditate upon them. We are enamored of the things which eye hath not seen nor ear heard.

Thus we grow stronger, taller, as Christians, day by day. With our desire to grow ever increasing, we see the necessity for meeting together with others of like precious faith, in order to build each other up in the most holy faith. We see the Heavenly things more clearly. Other things pass away from our vision. We see the great basic principles of justice and love, and realize their bearing upon our lives in every respect.

Natural Traits Require Attention.

We note that after we have made our consecration and have learned that God has justified us freely from all sin through our Lord Jesus Christ, there is a tendency with some of the Lord's people to violate unintentionally the fundamental principles of justice and love as existent in the Divine character and manifested in the Divine dealings with the people of God. It is not enough that we should have started out to walk in the ways of the Lord, and that we should recognize the downward tendencies of sin. If we have the spirit of the Lord, we shall be anxious to do right. We shall meditate upon God's character; and as we see these basic attributes, we shall endeavor to copy them. Thus the work of grace in our hearts will continue and increase, more and more transforming us into the character-likeness of God's dear Son.

We are not to judge one another in these things, however. "The Lord will judge His people," according to His knowledge of their ability. Mercy will be granted for every unintentional defect; but no mercy will be extended toward those things which we could avoid. Whatever ability we possess we are responsible for; and God will hold us responsible if we do not do our best with what we have. Therefore there is some danger of not attaining the best which God has to give. Those who are living up to their opportunities and privileges should go on with courage, doing their best, exercising full faith and confidence in the Lord; for He has promised a sufficiency of grace to cover every imperfection. But there is no excuse for anyone to live in careless neglect of his duties and responsibilities. Such are not fighting the good fight of faith.

It is the New Creature who will be held responsible for carelessness respecting the conduct, for indifference to the requirements of the Golden Rule and to the additional exercise of love; and it is he who will fail to receive the commendation, "Well done, good and faithful servant," unless he exercise great care respecting these important matters. God will have none in that special class of overcomers except those who measure fully up to the standard of His requirements. If we are to be the future judges of the world, we must cultivate justice as well as love, so as to be fit to occupy positions of influence and power, in which we shall be able to bless all the families of the earth.

In the New Dispensation.

During the Millennial Age, the Lord Jesus will deal with the world. As He declared, "All that are in the graves shall hear His voice ["the voice of the Son of Man"], and shall come forth." (John 5:25, 28, 29.) Those who thus come forth will be the same imperfect beings that they were when they died. Justice will turn them over to Christ imperfect—just as they went down into death. The lifting up to human perfection of all who are willing and obedient will be the work of the incoming Age. The lower down they were, the more steps will they be required to take in order to climb up to perfection.

The Messianic Reign will be the world's Judgment Day. As the Master said, it will be more tolerable in that Day for those who during this life had less opportunity than it will be for those who had more. (Matthew 11:20-24.) The latter class will come forth more tainted in mind, weaker in character, less inclined to hearken and obey; whereas those who had not heard the Message of God's Love will be all the more inclined to give heed. The Judgment Day will be a tolerable time for all mankind, but more tolerable for those who have never before heard and have never known.

Confucius, for example, will come forth in the Messianic Kingdom, and will be a towering giant morally amongst the people in that Day. Many who see him will be surprised at what a strong character he will be—a heathen man, who lived without our opportunities, who heard no church bells, who attended no church services. As they behold him, some will say, "If only we had availed ourselves of the privileges and opportunities that we had, we might have attained a place even amongst the glorified saints in Heaven." But when they consider themselves in the light of their past lives, they will conclude that they are in their proper position; and, stimulated by the example of various worthy characters, as well as encouraged by the assistance afforded them at that time, they will strive to progress as rapidly as possible. Gradually they will learn the rules of the Kingdom—the laws of righteousness, based upon justice and love. Those who are willing and obedient will attain unto life everlasting; but the unwilling and disobedient will be cut off in the Second Death.

But during this Gospel Age God is preparing the special class, of special characteristics, for the special service of associating with the Redeemer in the work of human uplift during the next Age. It behooves this class, therefore, to study this subject of justice continually, and daily put into practice the lessons inculcated in the Word of God. Moreover, they must wage a warfare against sin. They must see that in their hearts, at least, they are free from sin; that in their hearts they continually oppose it; and that so far as possible their lives are in harmony with their hearts.

What God expects of us is that we do the best we can—nothing more, but THAT! Let us as His people rejoice in the wonderful provisions of Divine grace, sufficient for our every need, through Christ our Lord. Let us continually fight the good fight of faith—and DO OUR BEST.

LAVERGNE CUTS LOOSE IN LONGUEUIL SPEECH

Says English Hid in Woods While French Saved Canada in 1812 —Too Loyal to Fight—Says He Has to Fight Here— Attacks Patriotic Societies

Armand Lavergne, M.L.A., Monday night discussed the rights of the French language before an audience of two hundred persons in Longueuil Town Hall and gave a scathing denunciation of what he termed the intolerance of the English in Ontario, stating that the Prussian treatment of Alsace-Lorraine was superior to that accorded the French in Ontario. He claimed that while French was forbidden in the schools of the sister province, German was taught. He said it was the French-Canadians who saved Canada for the Empire in the war of 1812. He deprecated the subscriptions of the French-Caandians to Red Cross Funds, Patriotic Funds, Queen Mary's Needlework Guild, etc., and called upon his compatriots to refuse to go and fight for France in Europe, but to remain and fight for her here. He insisted that he felt so strongly because he was profoundly British and attached to British institutions.

During his address a petition to the Governor-General was circulated asking just treatment on the Ontario school question.

British North America Act

In 1897 when Confederation took place, Mr. Lavergne stated, the French had the right to their separate schools and by the British North America Act this right could not be taken from them. He quoted a letter from Mr. Ryerson, Superintendent of Public Instruction, dated in April, 1867, in which the latter advised a Commissioner in Glengarry County that as French was a recognized language of the country, it was proper and lawful for trustees to allow both languages to be taught in schools when parents so desired. He then took up the rights of French-Canadians to settle in Ontario, and referred to the pioneers who had gone there, and even went further to establish the present cities of Chicago, St. Louis, Winnipeg, Calgary and Windsor, Ont. Ontario, he claimed, was orginally a Catholic province because it had been baptized in the blood of missionaries like Breboeuf and Lalleman. Continuing, he said:

"Some people become indignant in Ontario when I compare them to the Prussians, but the Prussians are much superior from the point of view of tolerance. We must say it in praise of some of the English people, that they resisted the appeal of the Orangmen and the Masons. Bowell and Ross resisted Dalton McCarthy for many years. Mr. Whitney replaced Mr. Ross, and he (Whitney) recognized our rights until 1909-1910. Then they replaced our schools by bi-lingual schools, which are called English-French schools. Before dying Whitney had Regulation 17 passed, and this was ratified later and became law. Regulation 17, taking it from whatever view we wish, the usage and teaching of French, except as a language of communication when the student does not understand English, completely disappears. The teacher is authorized to use French, not as a teaching language, but merely as a communicating language. In the primary grades there is no provision for teaching French.

"Now, take schools like those in Plantagenet, which were built up by the French-Canadians and where the pupils are nearly 100 per cent. French, take the Windsor, Ont., where 85 per cent. of the pupils are French. The Minister of Education may decide they have not the proportion necessary to teach one hour of French a day. Take the case in Green Valley, where two Commissioners not only permitted teaching French, but also permitted ten minutes of catechism in French; they were condemned to a fine of $200 for breaking the laws of Ontario.

"And this is what they call a country of 'justice and liberty, a country over which the Union Jack floats; a country which our ancestors saved for the British, when in 1812 the English of the Province of Quebec hid in the woods until they could know whether the British or the Americans would win that war; it was our ancestors who saved Canada for Britain.

"In 1870 the Prussians did not dare to impose on Alsace Lorraine; the British did not dare to impose on conquered South Africa, the treatment now being imposed on the French Catholic minority in Ontario; that treatment is more tyrannical, more shameful than that imposed on Alsace-Lorraine by the Prussians. Now people who make statements like this pass for extremists."

France Saving Britain

"You will read in the English newspapers that the question of the Ontario schools is unfortunate, but it is due to the extremists of both provinces. Well, on the other side France and England are fighting—or rather France is fighting in front of England; France is saving the British Empire, and why? Because English workmen have too little patriotism and get too small salaries to shovel coal for their fleet; their salaries are too small to make shells for their Mother Country, while France is sacrificing her best. In the loyal Province of Ontario, where they denounce French-Canadians because they dare to say they will not let themselves be crushed, well in that loyal province, in this country of liberty and justice protected by the Union Jack, it is forbidden to teach French to the children of French-Canadians. It is permitted to teach German though. Here is the proof taken from the instructions given by the Ontario Government to teachers: 'The work in French should at first be wholly without the text-book for the training of the ear and tongue.' (All that has disappeared with Regulation 17.) 'After three or four months a systematic study of the book should be begun; German should be taken at the same time, but with a greater apportionment of time; when desired German to be learned first and followed by French.'

School Situation in Ottawa

"The English papers tell us that we are going to fight in Europe to have treaties respected, but, did they not make a treaty here in 1807? Is it these people who will give lessons to Von Bethman Hollweg? No, no lessons to him from Norris, of Manitoba, or Hearst, of Ontario; rather let these go and shake hands with Von Bethman Hollweg as cousins. Ah! it is not for nothing they are called Anglo-Saxons; I think the Saxon in them has devoured the Anglo. Do you know what is passing in the Canadian Capitol? Do you know that there are 5,000 children on the street because the Hearst Government will not let them learn their own tongue? Do you know that in the schools built by our own people, mothers of families have to mount guard to conserve their rights?

Attacks The English

"Our first duty, ladies and gentlemen, is to remain here and conserve our rights, to remain here in our own country. For those others they cannot decide if their homes are here or in England. That question was settled for us three hundred years ago; our home is here, and here we will remain. They also, when they are over there say that their homes are here, because over there they have to fight for a shilling a day while here they get $1.10."

Irish Should Join French

Mr. Lavergne then referred to the martyrdom which Ireland suffered for seven hundred years, and called upon the Irish to help the French-Canadians in their fight against the Orangemen, who wished first of all to destroy the French language and scored the apathy of the French-Canadians of Quebec in connection with the trials of their brothers in Ontario and the other provinces, and referred to the meagre subscriptions for the cause of the French in Ontario, predicting that after the French had been subdued in the other provinces an attack would be made on Quebec. He ascribed this apathy to decadence, which decadence he said began with Sir George Etienne Cartier when he permitted Riel to be tried and executed for defending the rights of his compatriots.

Would Boycott Ontario

After describing the origin of the "boycott" in Ireland, he called upon the French-Canadians of Quebec to declare a boycott of Ontario-made goods. He also urged them to insist on speaking French on railroads, in stores, etc., which would give more work to young French-Canadians. In regard to the poor response made to the appeal for funds for the French school fight in Ontario, he said:

Attacks Patriotic Bodies

"Any charlatan from the other side can come here for a Red Cross Fund, a Patriotic Fund, a Queen Mary Needlework Guild, etc., and at once the French-Canadians come and empty their purses. We can only count on ourselves in this fight. When they tell you to go to the front and fight for France, tell them that it is because you love France that you will fight for her."

He said the English were working against their own interests in trying to destroy French in Canada because they were the most effective barrier against the Americanization of Canada, and maintained that instead of the imaginary frontier between Canada and the United States, if they would settle French-Canadians along the border it would be more effective. "But," he said, "it would be a paradox to suppose the English could understand this.

Slur On The English

"If, by a miracle, the Creator would put enough gray matter in their heads to understand this, they would soon realize the necessity of safeguarding the French language. But, their motto now is that this country has got to be English even if it should cease to be British. I am not as loyal as some, neither am I as servile as some. It is because I am profoundly British and attached to British institutions that I claim the pact made at confederation should be maintained.

French Chivalry

"If we continue to bow our heads under this injustice we are not worthy to be the sons of our fathers. We have in our veins blood of those who civilized the world, and civilized it not for commercial gain but to save souls; we come from the race that civilized Greece, gave independence to Belgium and protected the little nations. Do you realize that you are of the same blood as that marvellous woman who was burned at Rouen for freeing France of her enemies?"

Piracy Menace Serious, Says M.P.

Sees Way to Compel all Neutrals to Use Interned German Ships

LONDON, April 12.—Two more ships have been reported sunk during the past twenty-four hours. According to the morning newspapers, this makes 42 British, ten of Great Britain's allies, and 30 neutral vessels lost since March 1, when the new German submarine campaign began.

Robert Paterson Houston, Unionist member of Parliament from Liverpool, in an appeal to the nation published today, declares that the scarcity of shipping is becoming so serious a problem that the present agitation regarding the price of food is likely to yield place to the agitation as to whether sufficient food will be available. He estimates that since the beginning of the war 190 ocean-going British vessels of 3,000,000 tons have been lost from all causes.

"Between a third and a half of Great Britain's food supply already is coming in neutral ships," says Mr. Houston. "If Germany, by the persistent sinking of every vessel, can frighten neutrals from bringing us cargoes, what then? Already we see neutrals fighting shy of bringing cargoes here. This is natural, too, inasmuch as they can find full employment for their ships at profitable freights elsewhere."

Mr. Houston urges compelling neutrals who have not yet made use of interned German ships to do so. This would be possible by threatening a withdrawal of the Allies' tonnage unless they comply. Mr. Houston also urges the re-assertion by the Entente Allies of the "ancient right to capture an enemy-owned cargo, no matter under what flag it is being carried," and suggests an effort to arrange by diplomacy for the confiscation in neutral waters of a German ship for every Entente Allied or neutral ship improperly sunk by the Germans.

SYNOPSIS OF COAL MINING REGULATIONS.

Coal mining rights of the Dominion, in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Yukon Territories, the North-West Territories and in a portion of the Province of British Columbia, may be leased for a term of twenty-one years at an annual rental of $1 an acre. Not more than 2,560 acres will be leased to one applicant.

Applications for a lease must be made by the applicant in person to the Agent or Sub-Agent of the district in which the rights applied for are situated.

In surveyed territory the land must be described by sections or legal sub-divisions of sections and in unsurveyed territory the tract applied for shall be staked by the applicant himself.

Each application must be accompanied by a fee of $5 which will be refunded if the rights applied for are not available, but not otherwise. A royalty shall be paid on the merchantable output of the mine at the rate of five cents per ton.

The person operating the mine shall furnish the Agent with sworn returns accounting for the full quantity of merchantable coal mined and pay the royalty thereon. If the coal mining rights are not being operated, such returns should be furnished at least once a year.

The lease will include the coal mining rights only, but the lessee may be permitted to purchase whatever available surface rights may be considered necessary for the working of the mine at the rate of $10.00 an acre.

For full information application should be made to the Secretary of the Department of the Interior, Ottawa, or to any Agent or Sub-Agent of Dominion Lands.

W. W. CORY,
Deputy Minister of the Interior.

SYNOPSIS OF CANADIAN NORTH-WEST LAND REGULATIONS.

The sole head of a family, or any male over 18 years old, may homestead a quarter section of available Dominion land in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta. Applicant must appear in person at the Dominion Lands Agency or Sub-Agency for the District. Entry by proxy may be made at any Dominion Lands Agency (but not Sub-Agency) on certain conditions.

Duties—Six months residence upon and cultivation of the land in each of three years. A homesteader may live within nine miles of his homestead on a farm of at least 80 acres, on certain conditions. A habitable house is required except where residence is performed in the vicinity.

In certain districts a homesteader in good standing may pre-empt a quarter-section alongside his homestead. Price, $3.00 per acre.

Duties—Six months residence in each of three years after earning homestead patent; also 50 acres extra cultivation. Pre-emption patent may be obtained as soon as homestead patent, on certain conditions.

A settler who has exhausted his homestead right may take a purchased homestead in certain districts. Price $3.00 per acre. Duties—Must reside six months in each of three years, cultivate 50 acres and erect a house worth $300.

The area of cultivation is subject to reduction in case of rough, scrubby or stony land. Live stock may be substituted for cultivation under certain conditions.

W. W. CORY, C.M.G.,
Deputy of the Minister of the Interior.

Many Military Matters

There are hundreds of qualified officers in the Canadian Expeditionary Force who will not see the front in the capacity of an appointment unless the war keeps on to an even greater length of time than Kitchener predicted. The lists of officers in the Canadian Reserve battalions in England show hundreds of lieutenants. These are practically used for ornaments rather than business through force of unlooked for circumstances. The fact that the Royal School of Artillery on orders from Ottawa has been ordered to suspend operations after the close of the present course shows that the same condition exists in the artillery branch of the service.

One cause for this abnormal condition is that the fact that the great army of Canada has been replenished with men from the Reserve Battalions and these battalions in turn have been filled up by drafts from units training in Canada. To take the long trip across the ocean, one or more officers are in charge of each detachment or draft. Conditions do not warrant the return of these officers and they are taken on the strength of Reserve Battalions until a vacancy at the front occurs." This vacancy is proving too much nearer a dream than a reality to suit the temperament of most of the officers. The casualties in this trench warfare are really not heavy and particularly in the official positions the openings do not occur nearly as rapidly as do appointments at home. For this reason Canada has hundreds of qualified officers who are still waiting for some place to open for them so that they can show what kind of stuff Canada is still turning out.

CLEAR CALL TO DUTY.

Cardinal Bourne (Archbishop of Westminster):

And Moses said unto the children of God and to the children of Reuben, shall your brethren go to the war, and shall ye sit here?—Numbers xxxii:6.

The Infantry School of Instruction is carrying on the work this week without any new registrations. Lieut. Col. D. Barragar, Commandant, is endeavoring to give every man the very best training that the time will allow and for that reason at no time will the capacity of the school be taxed as it might interfere with the splendid results that have been coming to its credit. As some of the probationers will be going back to their units at the end of the week about twenty more will be taken on next Monday.

The results of the Field Officers examinations held at the Infantry School of Instruction a short while ago have been announced by Lieut. Col. W. J. Brown, General Staff Officer, as follows:

Major A. W. Gray, 47th Regiment, 109th Lindsay Battalion.

MUSIC AND DRAMA

"THE ETERNAL CITY" AT GRIFFIN'S

A most elaborate and stirring 8 part photoplay, "The Eternal City", produced by the Famous Players Co., from the novel and play of the same name, written by Hall Caine, was thrown upon the screen at Griffin's Opera House last night. A special feature was the appearance of Pauline Frederick, the famous dramatic star, in the role of Donna Roma, an orphaned daughter of Dr. Rossi, an Italian political refugee in London. Later she becomes the ward of Baron Bonelli, who betrays Dr. Rossi into the hands of the Italian Government, by whom he is exiled to the Isle of Elbe, where he dies. His work for the ends of liberty is then taken up by "David Leone" an adopted son of Dr. Rossi, who after a term in prison escapes and seeks Donna Roma, but is told she is dead.

The story deals with the machinations of the Italian Government to put down the socialist leaders, who endeavor to keep the working-men from being trodden underfoot. Throughout the play the scenes shift from London, England, to Rome portraying in pictorial panorama, Charing Cross and other busy thoroughfares in the great metropolis; and the Coliseum, St. Peter's, the Castle of St. Angelo's and other historic views in Rome, the one time capital city of the world, all these magnificent scenes being emphasized by a stirring plot and story of love, in which the socialist advocate, David Leone, is successful in his fight with the hypocritical government and secures as his wife the ward of Baron Bonelli, who in an encounter with Leone is killed. Leone escapes from the police, only to learn that his wife Roma, has taken the guilt upon herself. After a series of confessions he is allowed a hearing with the Pope, who discovers that David Leone is the son of his sister, who committed suicide after the desertion of her husband. The relationship results in the pardon of all concerned in the murder of Baron Bonelli, ending in a touching and thrilling scene of reunion between Donna Roma and David Leone. The film will again be shown this evening.

"A PAIR OF SIXES"—Coming

This "A Pair of Sixes", the greatest of all farces, which ran for an entire year at the Longacre Theatre, New York, accomplishes in a way that made the metropolitan critics positively outvie one another in their lavish terms of praise. The play is by Edward Peple, who has already distinguished himself as the author of "The Prince Chap" and "The Littlest Rebel." It is in three acts and tells a humorous story that is as ingenious in its development as it is in motive. It concerns two business men, George B. Nettleton and T. Boggs John, who have established a lucrative business by manufacturing a violet tinted digestive pill. Each feels that he has done more for the success of the business than the other, and neither makes any bones of expressing his feelings to his partner. In this respect they might be termed an American Potash and Perlmutter. They finally decide to dissolve partnership and call in their lawyer. He has already had many such demands made upon him, and as usual is unable to bring them to a point of settlement. He finally suggests a game of cards, the one drawing the losing poker hand to become butler in the winner's household for a year; while the other is allowed absolute conduct of the business. Nettleton is the victor, drawing a pair of sixes. John is duly installed as butler in the Nettleton household, where his partner lords it over him, but he grits his teeth and performs his duties as a menial. The contract stipulates that it must be kept a secret and the one breaking it must forfeit $5,000 and lose his share of the business. As a consequence, T. Boggs John is unable to explain his awkward predicament. To add to his discomfiture, the English housemaid, an eccentric cockney, sets her cap for him, but it is not until the arrival of his fiancee as a guest of Mrs. Nettleton, that his misery overflows, for he cannot explain his plight without forfeiting a heavy fine. He begs her to trust him in spite of all. These humorous situations develop a continuous excitement of fun. Boggs' sweetheart proves a very powerful queen in the game, as it is through her cleverness that the relations between the two parties are finally explained to the satisfaction of all, excepting perhaps, the scheming lawyer.

The play will be presented by a splendid company at Griffin's Opera House, next Wednesday night, for one night only.

FATALLY STRICKEN

Death came this morning with awful suddenness to Mr. James Falconer, a well-known resident of Belleville. Deceased was in Mr. H. A. Morgan's tailoring establishment and was seized with an attack of heart failure, expiring before medical aid could be summoned. Mr. Falconer, who was upwards of 80 years of age, was born in Scotland. For many years he had been residing in this city, where he was favorably known. At one time deceased conducted a tailoring establishment in the city, and also was in business for a time at Tweed Village. Of late years he had lived a retired life. Mr. Falconer was a fine Scotch gentleman, and had many friends. He was a member of the Sons of Scotland Society, and was a member of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church. In addition to an aged widow two daughters, Mrs. Charles Delisle of Belleville, and Mrs. H. E. Robinson of Carman, Man., survive. The remains were conveyed to the Belleville Burial Company's undertaking establishment, and after being prepared for burial were taken to his late home on Moira street.

Closing Of Star Series At Y.M.C.A.

Fine Programme Rendered by Mr. Owen A. Smily and the Hollinshead Brothers of Toronto

The closing number in the Star Course series of entertainments at the Y.M.C.A. drew the usual large audience last evening. While the International Opera Company, so popular in this city, were expected to be the entertainers, Mr. John Elliott, who opened the programme with a brief address, announced a late hour change, for reasons unexplained, but promised a rare treat by the presence of Mr. Owen A. Smily, the famous entertainer, Mr. Redferne Hollinshead, Canada's well-known tenor, and Mr. Harold R. Hollinshead, a baritone of more than ordinary talent, both of Toronto.

The programme was made up of vocal selections by the Messrs. Hollinshead and recitations by Mr. Smily, all of which proved extremely interesting, each performer responding to encores in a gracious manner.

A duet by the Hollinshead brothers, "Watchman, What of the Night," was a most appropriate initial number, superbly rendered, and heartily received. From this on the interspersing of songs and readings, some of Mr. Smily's productions proving decidedly humorous, kept the audience in excellent humor. A recitation from Dr. Drummond's "Habitant," by the reciter attracted deep attention, and the Poem from Tennyson, "The Career of the Revenge," was splendidly portrayed.

In solo or duet work the Messrs. Hollinshead created a very favorable impression, the clear tenor of the one and the rich baritone of the other giving a splendid effect.

To Mr. Elliott, through whose efforts the gentlemen were secured for last evening, the thanks of the audience are due for one of the richest entertainments of the series, and the visitors may always feel that a hearty welcome awaits them at future Belleville engagements.

CANADIAN MINISTER OF MILITIA ARRIVES IN NEW YORK

BRITISH TROOPS DEFEAT TURK FORCES IN MESOPOTAMIA

NEW YORK FINANCIERS RETURNING

Wired to Come Home at Once, as Rupture With Germany Is Imminent

Canadian Press Despatch.

NEW YORK, April 14.—A cable from Paris to the Tribune says a member of one of the largest firms in New York, who is at present in Paris, received a cable yesterday from his firm saying: Return at once. Rupture with Germany imminent." Another big New York banker received an urgent cable calling him home for the same reason. Both men will sail Saturday.

Well Known Hun Involved

N.Y. Police are Seeking Evidence of $10,000 to Finance Fire-bomb Conspiracy

NEW YORK, April 13.—Detectives who yesterday arrested four Germans charged with placing bombs on ships carrying war munitions to the Entente Allies, to-day sought evidence involving a "well-known German" who is alleged to have supplied a $10,000 fund to finance the fire-bomb conspiracy. They sought also the arrest of the chemist who did the chemical work in the manufacture of the bombs. The name of neither of these men has yet been revealed by the police, but it was said by the authorities that they expected the chief conspirator of the case would be in custody before night.

The four prisoners, Becker, von Kleist, Wolpert and Bode, were taken from police headquarters early in the day to the office of District Attorney Cropsey of Brooklyn for prosecution in that district.

After a consultation between the detectives in charge of the prisoners and Mr. Cropsey, it was decided to turn them over to the custody of the department of justice. Accordingly they were brought back to Manhattan and taken to the headquarters of the department, after which a conference was held with Federal District Attorney Marshall as to what disposition should be made of them.

The police to-day gave credit to a German-American detective, Henry Bardh for unearthing the plot. They said he had ingratiated himself with the principals as a fellow conspirator, gaining their acquaintance and confidence after following trails which took him to Detroit, San Francisco and other cities before finally locating them in Hoboken.

17,000 FRENCH TAKEN AT VERDUN.

Paris, April 14.—(Special)—The claims of the German War Office that 35,876 prisoners have been captured at Verdun was denied today by the French War Office. According to the French War Office the Germans have captured less than 17,000 French at Verdun including wounded.

THREE TROOPSHIPS REACH ENGLAND, WITH 8,597

Adriatic, Baltic and Empress of Britain, Arrive in Safety—Announcement Officially Made through Chief Press Censor's Office

OTTAWA, April 14.—Special—The safe arrival in England of three Canadian troopships with a total of 8,597 officers and men of the Canadian Expeditionary Forces aboard is officially announced through the Chief Press Censor's office.

The Adriatic, which sailed from Canada on March 31, had on board the following troops: 64th Battalion, 38 officers and 1,088 men; 73rd Batt., 36 officers and 1,033 men; No. 8 Field Ambulance, 10 officers and 181 men; draft heavy artillery, 1 officer and 50 men. Total, 2,487 of all ranks.

The 64th Battalion is from Halifax and the 73rd from Montreal.

The Baltic, which sailed on March 28, had on board the following troops: 56th Battalion (Calgary), 40 officers and 1,073 men; 62nd Battalion (Vancouver), 36 officers and 1,050 men; No. 6 Laval University General Hospital, 38 officers, 45 nurses and 196 men; Canadian O.T.C. candidates for regular commissions, 45; naval ratings, 3 officers and 89 men; civilian doctors for army, 3; details, 3 officers and 2 men. Total, 2,623 of all ranks.

The Empress of Britain, which sailed on March 29, had on board the following troops: 53rd Battalion, 35 officers and 1,062 men; 74th Battalion, 34 officers and 1,046 men; 75th Battalion, 36 officers and 1,114 men; draft field heavy artillery, 1 officer and 61 men; Medical Corps reinforcements, 4 officers and 144 men. Total, 3,537 all ranks.

ANXIETY RELIEVED.

Cobourg, April 14.—(Special)—The anxiety of almost a fortnight in many Cobourg homes has been relieved by a cable received here announcing the safe arrival of the draft from Cobourg Heavy Battery, which left here some little time ago for England. The battery is comprised almost entirely of Cobourg men, with a few from Colborne, Cold Springs and other adjacent villages. Capt. A. E. Hopper of Cobourg is in charge.

Troops of Canada Suffered Severely

Latest Action Against the Germans Costly to the Latter, Too

LONDON, April 14.—(Special.)—Details received here of fighting for craters, in which the Canadians suffered severely, show that at one spot five mines in direct line and close together were sprung against the Germans, whose defence consequently was momentarily completely shattered. The Canadians then rushed forward to occupy the ground thus rendered untenable. The advance was supported by artillery. The observer declares that the fire from the guns so close together and working incessantly was like a terrace of houses on fire. The Canadians secured ground for the time being, after which the struggle continued, with varying success on each side as is always the case in such operations. If the Canadian losses were severe there is no doubt the enemy lost many more.

Anxious to go On the Farms

NEW YORK, April 13.—An associated Press despatch from Chicago says: Several thousand interned Germans interned in Canada will be put to work in the fields of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta this spring and will be paid the regular wages of farm laborers, according to W. W. Cory of Ottawa, Canadian Deputy Minister of the Interior, who is in Chicago today. A number of the men interned have expressed a willingness to break camp monotony by going into the fields Mr. Cory said; and it is believed many of them will take homesteads after the war.

Sir Wilfrid's Mail Opened by Censors

Hon. Messrs. Lemieux and Graham Also Complain of Excessive Zeal

OTTAWA, April 14.— (Special.)—The opening of the private mail of Sir Wilfrid Laurier and of two of his Lieutenants, Hon. George P. Graham and Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux, for alleged censorship purposes was brought to the attention of Parliament this afternoon.

At the opening of the House Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux called the attention of the Postmaster-General to the fact that for the third time since last summer letters addressed to him from Montreal to Ottawa had been opened and marked as censored. Mr. Lemieux said he had no objection to any necessary censorship of the mails, but he thought it was going a little too far to open private letters sent from one place in Canada to another, and that the censors should be men of some intelligence at least.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier declared that a letter he had just received to-day from Montreal had been opened and the censor's mark put on it. "I think I am well enough known not to be a suspect," declared Sir Wilfrid.

Hon. Geo. P. Graham followed with a complaint that a letter sent to him from the Maritime Provinces had also been opened and read by the censors.

Postmaster-General Casgrain declared that the complaints in these instances were perfectly justifiable, and he promised that strict instructions would be sent out to the 'censors' branch of the postoffices at Montreal to be more careful. Mr. Casgrain said that he himself had got mail coming from the United States and addressed to him which the censors had evidently examined.

Sir Robert Borden also noted that a letter sent to him from the United States had been opened by the censors. The incident then closed.

GERMAN MOVEMENTS REPULSED EVERYWHERE

Canadian Press Special.

PARIS, April 14.—Afternoon statement. On the bank of the River Meuse there was a violent bombardment last night on our first lines, to the west of Hill 304. On the right bank the Germans yesterday evening delivered an unexpected small attack against our positions to the south of Douaumont, but the movement was completely repulsed.

The night passed in relative quietness, with the exception of a fairly spirited borbardment in the region of the south of Haudremont.

In the Woevre district there have been artillery duels in the sector of Mountainville.

INVESTIGATING FIRE

NORWOOD, April 13.—An investigion is being made into the cause of the fire which early Tuesday morning destroyed L. E. Killoran's livery barn. Five horses were burned to death and a sixth horse had to be shot. A second fire broke out in J. Weir's livery barn, but was extinguished before any great headway was made. It is believed both fires were of incendiary origin.
